Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 7—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 41 (3)—Pre-emption suit—Appeal, second—Certificate, when not necessary.

Where a Court of first appeal fails to go into the question of custom and a second appeal is preferred with the object of having the question of custom tried, no certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act is necessary for the validity of the appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 5th May 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Rohtak, dated the 21st May 1915.

Mr. Shamair Chand and Lala Badri Das, R. B., for Appellants.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. One of the issues raised was framed in the following words:—

"Does the custom of pre-emption exist in Kalanaur?"

The Trial Court decided this issue in the affirmative and granted a decree to the plaintiff. On appeal the question was again raised before the lower Appellate Court. That Court recorded the following finding on that question:—

"The next point raised by the vendee-appellant is that there is no custom of pre-emption in Kalanaur. This contention is untenable as, by Notification No. 677 of 10th November 1908, the Punjab Government included Kalanaur as a town for the purposes of Pre-emption Act."

It is clear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the question as to the existence of custom was not decided on the merits. The decree of the Trial Court having been upheld by the lower Appellate Court the defendant preferred the present second appeal. A Division Bench of this Court, while admitting the appeal, made the following remarks:—

"The District Judge has not gone into the question of the existence of the custom of pre-emption in Kalanaur. The Notification does not conclude the question."

We have taken into consideration the provisions of the Act. All that the Notification could have declared was that Kalanaur was a town. It does not necessarily follow that the custom of pre-emption exists in a place which has been declared to be a town under the Notification. We are, therefore, constrained to remit the issue No. 2 for decision on the merits on the evidence on the record. On receipt of the finding ten days will be allowed to the parties to file objections.

We may mention that a preliminary objection was raised by Mr. Manohar Lal on behalf of the respondents to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that no certificate having been produced, as required by section 41 of the Punjab Courts Act, the appellants were not entitled to question the finding on custom. It is, however, clear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the Judge has not gone into the question of custom at all.

MAKHAN LAL DE V. ARUN BALA DEVI.

The object of the appeal is to have the question of custom tried. We accordingly overruled the preliminary objection and proceeded to hear the appeal.

Where the origin and the original purpose of a tenancy are not known, the facts that the rent has never changed, that there have been several devolutions by inheritance in the family of the tenant and that the land of the tenancy is used in part for dwelling purposes and in part as a garden, point to the conclusion that the tenancy is a non-agricultural permanent tenancy of a transferable character. Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, at Hooghly, dated the 30th June 1920, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 31st March 1919.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra (with him Babu Narendra Nath Chaudhury), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. The case for the plaintiff was that the tenure was non-transferable and it having been sold to the defendant the latter is liable to ejectment. My defence was that the holding was maurusi mokarrari and is, therefore, transferable by law. Both Courts have decreed the suit. I submit there is nothing on the record to show that neither the origin of the tenancy nor the original purpose for which the tenancy was created, was proved. The findings which are in my favour are that the rent has remained uniform and that the land is used for dwelling and horticultural purposes. I submit these facts fully bear out our case that the tenancy was permanent, heritable and transferable. See Moharam Sheikh Chaprasi v. Talemuddin Khan (1), Shoroshi Charan Ghose v. Bhagloo Sah (2), Debendra Nath Das v. Bibudhendranath Mansingh Bhramarbar Roy (3), Afzal-un-nissa v. Abdul Karim (4), Surendra Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath Chakravarty (5).

Babu Hira Lal Chakravarty, for the Respondents.—The sole question is whether the tenancy is governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act or of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It has been found that the holding has been held by four members of the family of the original tenant. The question is for what purposes the tenancy was created. I submit there is evidence to show that the lands were let out for agricultural purposes. If the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act apply, then there is an end of the case. My suit has been brought on the footing that the lands were let out for agricultural purposes. I do not dispute that it is an old tenancy and that the rent has remained unchanged. But I do say that there has been neither any transfer of the holding nor any recognition by us of the transfer. The tenant never raised any substantial structures on the land which would have shown that the tenancy was of a permanent nature. See Moharam Sheikh Chaprasi v. Talemuddin Khan (1). In the present case the land has been sold away. I submit the lands being in the Mofussil it can be presumed that the lands were used for agricultural purposes.

Dr. Mitra, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for ejectment. The plaintiffs brought the action on the allegation that the disputed tenure was the non-transferable holding of their tenant Saroda Charan Ghose who conveyed it to the defendant on the 3rd May 1914, who is in occupation as a trespasser without title. The defendant contended that the tenancy was not an agricultural but a maurusi mokarrari holding which was transferable by law. The Courts below have on these pleadings considered the question whether the lease was under the Transfer of Property Act or under the Bengal Tenancy Act. They have concurrently come to the conclusion that the lease was under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the interest of the tenant was not transferable. In this view, the plaintiffs have been awarded a decree for ejectment.

In our opinion, it is plain that the Courts below did not consider the real question in controversy in this litigation. It has been found that the origin of the tenancy is not known, though it is stated that the vendor of the defendant was the fourth member of the family who had by inheritance succeeded to the holding. It has also been found that the original purpose of the tenancy is not known. The evidence further established conclusively that the rent has never changed although there has been a proportionate reduction by reason of the acquisition of a part of the land for public purposes. The Courts below have finally held that the land is used and has been used for years past in part, for dwelling purposes and in part for horticultural purposes. There is a stray passage in the evidence which may indicate that a part of the land was previously under cultivation. But it is not clear that the distinction between agricultural and horticultural purposes was appreciated when this statement was made by the witness. In view of these facts, it is plain that the question does not arise whether the lease was under the Transfer of Property Act or under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is not a lease under either of the two Statutes as neither Statute was in existence when the tenancy originated. The real question is, whether the tenancy is agricultural or non-agricultural.

As already stated, the original purpose of the tenancy is not known. Consequently, the principle enunciated in Ismail Khan Mahomed v. Jaigun Bibi (6) applies; namely, when the origin of the tenancy and the circumstances attending its creation, are not known, evidence of the mode of dealing with the land demised and the acts and condition of the parties generally constitute the evidence, and indeed may be the only evidence, available to prove the nature of the tenancy. In the case before us, a part of the land has been used for dwelling purposes and the remainder as a garden. It is not necessary to consider whether at any previous stage of its history, it was used in part also for agricultural purposes. For it is well settled that the purpose of a tenancy may be altered by consent of the contracting parties and when such alteration takes place the incidents of the tenancy may not be identical with those at its inception. As regards the nature of the tenancy at the present time, there is little doubt in view of the statement made by the landlord himself, on the 3rd July 1905, in an apportionment proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act. It was then asserted that the tenant-mother of the transferor of the present defendants held the land for dwelling and other purposes. It is impossible for us to hold, in these circumstances, that the tenancy at the present time is agricultural or that the transferor was a raiyat with a right of occupancy or non-occupancy raiyat. He must be deemed to be a tenant of non-agricultural lands. This leads us to the question, what are the incidents of such a tenancy? Was the tenancy transferable?

(6) 27 C. 570; 4 C. W. N. 210; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 374.

SARFARAJ KHAN v. RAMCHANDRA.

The defendant has contended that the facts established justify the inference that the tenancy was of a permanent character and was transferable. In support of this view reliance has been placed upon the cases of Moharam Sheikh Chaprasi v. Talemuddin Khan (1) and Shoroshi Charan Ghose v. Bhagloo Sah (2). In the case of Moharam Sheikh Chaprasi v. Talemuddin Khan (1) the earlier authorities were reviewed and it was laid down that where the origin of the tenancy was unknown, but the original tenant and his successor had been in occupation of the land for over 60 years on payment of rent which was never varied, and the tenancy was treated by the landlord as heritable and the land was let out for residential purposes, the inference was that the tenancy was in its inception permanent. The presence of a permanent structure on the land was not essential to establish that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character. The proposition last mentioned was questioned in the case of Shoroshi Charan Ghose v. Bhugloo Sah (2) but was re-affirmed, and it was specifically laid down that a dwelling house need not be brick-built in order to indicate that the tenancy was intended in its inception to be of a permanent character. The principle deducible from these cases has been affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Surendra Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath Chakravarty (5) and Afzal-un-nissa v. Abdul Karim (4) where the decision of this Court in Caspersz v. Kedar Nath (7) was followed and applied. It cannot be suggested, as was pointed out in the case of Moharam Sheikh Chaprasi v. Talemuddin Khan (1), that the question involved is one of fact. The question is a mixed question of fact and law, and this accords with the decision of the Judicial Committee in Debendra Nath Das v. Bibudhendhra Mansingh Bhramarbar Roy (3) and Rajani Kanta Ghose v. Secretary of State for India (8). We are clearly of opinion that the facts found by the Courts below, which are accepted as the basis of our judgment, point to the conclusion that the disputed tenancy was a permanent tenancy of a transferable character and that the defendant-purchaser is not a trespasser as alleged by the plaintiffs.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, and the suit is dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 114—Change of law after passing of decree—Review.

The grounds for a review must be something which exist at the time of the decree sought to be reviewed: a review cannot be granted because of the happening of a subsequent event. Consequently, where there has been a change in the law subsequently to the passing of a decree, that is not a sufficient ground for review.

Application for review of the judgment passed in Second Appeal No. 82-B of 1920 by Mr. Dhobley, Additional Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, dated the 19th October 1921.

MOORE V. GULAB CHAND.

ORDER.—This is an application for a review of Dhobley, A. J. C.'s judgment in Second Appeal No. 82-B of 1920 delivered on the 19th October last.

It is contended that, since the passing of that judgment a new law has come into force called "The Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law." That law has unquestionably been passed and came into force on the 1st of January this year, i.e., long subsequent to the passing of the judgment. But it is argued that as execution proceedings had not then commenced, the case must still be held to be pending at the commencement of this law. This may be so, and the arguments might be used in the Execution Court or before the Deputy Commissioner when applicant attempts to get himself recorded as a permanent tenant. But these reasons are of no weight in determining whether a review of this Court's judgment should be granted. For, it is settled law that the grounds for a review must be something which exist at the time of the decree and there is no authority that review can be granted because of the happening of some subsequent event. It may be that the decree of this Court upholding the decrees of the Courts below would have been different had the new law been in force. But it was not in force at the passing of the decree and, therefore, the decree was perfectly correct. As I have already stated, the new law can be urged in the Execution Court or in appeal from that Court or in an application to the Deputy Commissioner to be recorded as a permanent tenant.

It seems to me that this application for review does not lie and I dismiss the petition with costs. The applicant will pay the non-applicant's costs.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 106—Question of title between rival proprietors, decision of.
A Revenue Officer in deciding disputes between rival proprietors under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is confined to the question of possession alone and is not competent to decide a question of title. [p. 6, col. 2.]*

A Revenue Officer is competent to decide a question as to the relationship of landlord and tenant provided the question does not arise between the proprietors of neighbouring estates. [p. 7, col. 1.]

A certain plot of land was recorded in the Record of Rights as in the possession of plaintiff, who was the owner of an estate, as tenure-holder, while defendant, who was the owner of a neighbouring estate was recorded as the proprietor of the plot. Plaintiff brought a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for a declaration that the plot was part of his estate and that he was in possession of it as proprietor and asking that the word "tenure-holder" appearing against his name in the Record of Rights in respect of the plot should be struck out:

Held, (1) that the suit raised a question of title between proprietors of neighbouring estates; [p. 7, col. 2.]

(2) that a Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act either to entertain the suit or to refer it to a competent Civil Court for trial. [p. 7, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—The disputed lands having an area of 66 bighas 8 kattahs and 9 dhurs were recorded in the finally published Record of Rights as appertaining to Mauza Bhagwanpur. The Record of Rights further stated that the land was in the possession of the proprietor of Mauza Manpurwa as a tenure-holder. The plaintiff is the proprietor of Mauza Manpurwa and he instituted a suit under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the Court of the Settlement Officer of North Bihar for the following reliefs:—

MOORE V. GULAB CHAND.

(1) That it may be held that the 66 bighas 8 kathas and 9 dhurs of land in suit appertains to Mauza Manpurwa and it is, as milik (proprietary interest), in possession of the plaintiff. It bears Khasra Nos. 3, 26, 32, 2, 9, 1, 11, 11, 33, 14, 15, 4, 27, 38, 7, 29, 30, 31, 34, 36, 5, 12, 22, 23, 18, 19, 13, 28, 35, 24, 37, 6, 16, 17, 20, 21, 8 and 25.

(2) That it may be held that the defendants have no connection and concern whatever with the land in suit and that it does not appertain to Bhagwanpur.

(3) That it may be held that there is a custom prevailing in both the Mauzas and the neighbouring villages that whatever land accrues to whatever Mauza on account of (change of current of) the river Sikarahana is declared as appertaining to that Mauza and the other Mauza has no connection with the same.

(4) That the Court may be pleased to decide that the maliks of both the Mauzas have rights to fishery of the aforesaid river Sikarahana in shares of halves and it may be held that a red line (on a map) should be fixed in the middle of the said river Sikarahana so that the maliks of both the Mauzas may have their boundary limits fixed with respect to their shares of halves.

(5) That it may be held that the proprietor's khewat with respect to the aforesaid land in suit should be prepared in the name of the plaintiff and the entry made in the case under section 103 stating him (the plaintiff) as raiyat should be struck off.

(6) That a decree for the above (reliefs) may be passed and costs in Court, interest pendente lite and future interest up to the date of realization, may be awarded against the defendants.

The learned Settlement Officer before whom the suit came up for hearing thought that there was no question of possession raised in the suit, but that it involved a question of right and title. He considered that the question was important because it would affect other considerable areas in the locality. He accordingly, under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with r. 40 paragraph D. of the Government Rules, directed that the record of the case be sent to the District Judge for trial by such competent Civil Court as he may direct. The learned District Judge directed that the suit should be heard by the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur. The learned Subordinate Judge accordingly heard the suit. He considered that he had no jurisdiction to decide the question of title. But, nevertheless, he held that the disputed lands appertained to the plaintiff's village Manpurwa.

The defendants appeal to this Court and on their behalf it is argued by Mr. S. M. Mullick that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case or to decide the question at all. Section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that a suit may be instituted before a Revenue Officer at any time within three months from the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights under sub-section (2) of section 103-A by presenting a plaint on a stamped paper for the decision of any dispute regarding any entry which a Revenue Officer has made in, or any omission which the said officer has made from the record, whether such dispute be between landlords and tenants or between landlords of the same or neighbouring estates, or between tenant and tenant, or as to whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists, or as to whether land held rent free is properly so held, or as to any other matter, and the Revenue Officer shall hear and decide dispute.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that there was a dispute regarding an entry which was made by the Revenue Officer although it may be that the dispute was between the landlords of neighbouring estates. It was also contended that, in so far as the entry recorded the plaintiff as the tenant of the appellants, it was clearly within his power to maintain the suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which expressly authorises a suit raising a question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists. It has been held in numerous cases that a Revenue Officer in deciding disputes between rival proprietors under section 10 is confined to the question of possession alone and is not competent to decide the question of title. It is quite true that the Revenue Officer is competent to decide the question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists, but, in my opinion, he is only competent to decide that question provided the question is not between neighbouring estates. The question for our determination then is: does the suit raise a question of title between neighbouring proprietors? The learned Settlement Officer himself took the view that it raised the question of title and in that view, and in that view only, he has sent the case for trial to the Civil Court. A careful perusal of the plaint leaves no doubt whatever in my mind that the plaintiff in this suit raised a question of title for trial by the Settlement Court. In the first prayer he claims that he is in possession of the disputed land in proprietary interest. The Record of Rights shows that the proprietary interest was in the defendant and, in so far as he claims by prayer 1 that the proprietary interest is in himself, he has clearly raised the question of title as between him and the defendants. The second paragraph, in my opinion, raised the same question. He asks that it may be held that the defendants had no connection and no concern whatever with the land in suit. The Record of Rights shows that the defendants have connection and concern with the land in suit. In so far as he asked the Court to hold that the defendants had no connection or concern with the land in suit, he invited the Court to determine that the defendants had no title whatsoever. The third prayer invited the Court to hold that there is a custom prevailing in the Mauzas and the neighbouring villages that whatsoever land accrues to whatever Mauza on account of the change of current of the river Sikarahana is declared as appertaining to that Mauza and the other Mauza has no connection with the same. He is in this paragraph inviting the Court to determine that the custom of the mid-stream prevails in the Mauzas. That again can by no stretch of language be held to raise a question of possession and not a question of title. Mr. Sen, strongly relies upon the fifth prayer of his plaint. In that prayer he asks that it be held that the proprietor's khwat with respect to the aforesaid land in suit should be prepared in the name of the plaintiff and the entry made in the case under section 103 stating him (the plaintiff) as raiyyat should be struck off. I am unable to see how it can be said that this prayer raises a question of possession. Mr. Sen has insisted before us that all that he is asking the Court to do is to strike off the word "tenure-holder" appearing as against his name but if the Court strikes off the word "tenure-holder" it is obliged to record the plaintiff either as a proprietor or something else. In asking the Court to determine that he ought to be recorded not as a tenure-holder but as a proprietor and that the proprietor's khwat with respect of the aforesaid land should be prepared in his name, he is definitely asking the Court to decide a question of title as between him and the defendants. In my opinion, it is impossible to contend that the suit does not raise a question of title as between rival proprietors. I hold that the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. That being so, he has no jurisdiction to make any order under section 106 transferring the case to a competent Civil Court for trial. The Civil Court accordingly had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

I must allow this appeal and set aside the judgment and the decree of the Court below and dismiss the suit. I would make no order as to costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 8—Demand note for rent, suit on—Jurisdiction of Court of Small Causes.

MEGHRAJ V. KESHEO RAO.

A suit based on a demand note executed for the satisfaction of rent for a field is triable by a Court of Small Causes.

Revision of the order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Nagpur, dated the 31st March 1922, in Civil Suit No. 2060 of 1921.

Mr. K. P. Vaidya, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. D. Khândikar, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant took a lease of a field for Rs. 150 for a year from the plaintiffs, and at the beginning of the year paid Rs. 75 in cash and executed a demand note for the remaining Rs. 75 promising to pay interest on it. The plaintiffs sued on the demand note in the Small Cause Court, and it has been held that the suit is one for the rent and is, therefore, not triable in that Court. The learned Judge distinguishes the ruling in Govind Vishnu Kukde v. Maroti Narayan Joshi (1) where the matter is very clearly explained by saying that the demand note was executed for "prospective rent" and "this amount cannot be called arrears of rent." There is no mention of arrears or of "prospective rent" in Art. 8 of the Schedule of the Small Cause Courts Act, which speaks only of "rent other than house rent." The matter is very simple. At the beginning of the year the defendant paid the whole of his rent partly in cash and partly by executing the note. He owes no rent to the plaintiff now, but he does owe him what he promised to pay him on the note. A demand note or a bond does not cease to be an ordinary demand note or bond just because a part of the whole of its consideration is made up of rent whether in arrears or in advance. The order of the lower Court that the plaint should be returned for presentation to another Court is set aside. The plaint will be returned to that Court and will be re-admitted and the suit will be properly tried out.

The whole costs of these proceedings, in which Rs. 15 will be allowed as Pleader's fee, must be paid by the defendant non-applicant.

Transfer of Property Act (I V of 1882), s. 91 (f)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1—Mortgage suit—Attaching creditor, whether necessary party—Omission to implead—Right of redemption whether affected.

A creditor, attaching mortgaged property in execution of his money-decree who is given a right to redeem by section 91 (f) of the Transfer of Property Act is a person having an interest in the right of redemption and is thereby entitled under O. XXXIV, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code to be joined as a defendant in a suit on the mortgage. If he is not so impleaded, his right to redeem cannot be affected by a decree in that suit.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 10th April 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 174 of 1921.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Indurkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The parties have agreed that the only matter now in dispute between them is the question whether the appellant has a right of redemption or not, and that that question shall be decided in this appeal. The property in dispute is a house which was attached on the 10th of December 1915 by the appellant in execution of a money-decree. On the 7th of November 1917 the respondent's predecessor-in-title instituted a suit for sale of the house under a mortgage. About a month later, on the 11th of December 1917, the house was sold by auction under the appellant's decree, and he bought it himself and subsequently obtained possession. The father of the respondents, who has died during the course of this suit, obtained a final decree for sale in his mortgage suit on the 6th of December 1919, and similarly bought the house himself at the sale, which was held on the 10th of March 1920. These proceedings have arisen out of his application for possession which is resisted by the appellant.

2. The learned Counsel for the appellant argued that he is entitled to redeem the mortgage, and it is hard to see how his argument can be effectively met. It was this. He was a person entitled under clause (f) of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act to "redeem or institute a suit for redemption" at the time the respondent instituted his mortgage suit; he was, therefore, a "person having an interest in the right of redemption" even if he had none in the mortgage security, and had to be impleaded in the respondent's mortgage-suit under r. 1 of O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code as he was not so impleaded his right to redeem cannot be affected by the decree in that suit.

3. The rulings cited for the appellant were the Allahabad case of Ghulam Hussain v. Dina Nath (1) and the Madras case of Titali Venkata Seetharamaya v. Vedula Venkataramaya (2). The learned Pleader for the respondents cited the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Shananda Chandra Pal v. Sri Nath Roy Chowdhury (3) and the two later Madras rulings in Veyindramuthu Pillai v. Maya Nadan (4) and Chamiyappa Tharakan v. Rama Iyer (5). Every one of these, except the first of the two Madras cases quoted for the respondents, was concerned with the period prior to the passing of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and in that one case the attaching creditor's right to redeem was admitted, but it was held that it could be enforced only by a separate suit and not in proceedings under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, the right to succeed in the present proceeding with the certainty of having a regular suit filed against him has been waived by the respondents. In Chamiyappa Tharakan v. Rama Iyer (5), the latest of the Madras cases mentioned, the second sale of the property under the mortgage took place in 1906, and the matter for decision was only whether a person mentioned in clause (f) of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act was included among those mentioned in section 85 of the same Act. I cannot see that the learned Judges did actually hold that such a person is not among those mentioned in r. 1 of O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code, but if they did the remarks would clearly be obiter dicta.

4. Such conflict as there is in all the rulings cited seems to me to be on the question whether an attaching creditor, who is given a right to redeem by clause (f) of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act has any interest in the mortgaged property and is thereby entitled, under section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, to be joined as a defendant in a suit on the mortgage. The question appears to have been completely set at rest by the amendment of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act by the substitution for it of r. 1 of O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code, whereby the interest of those to be joined in a mortgage-suit is no longer restricted to an interest in the property but is stated to be "an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption." These words cannot possibly exclude any person of any of the clauses mentioned in section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, whether the words of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act did so or not.

5. I find, accordingly, that the appellant is entitled to redeem the respondent's mortgage. It was agreed between the parties that, in the event of that being the decision the price of redemption should be the amount awarded by the respondent's decree with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree (6th December 1919) to 8th March 1923. The appellant certainly did refuse in the beginning to redeem the mortgage, insisting on his right to remain in possession without any payment; the question of the right to redeem was raised and the offer to do so was made for the first time in this Court. Each party must, therefore, pay its own costs in all three Courts. A decree will issue in the form of a decree for foreclosure in default of the payment of the sum mentioned above within one month from this date.

*Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879),

The Court is reluctant to restrict the provisions of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act by placing a narrow and restricted interpretation thereon. [p. 11, col. 2.]

Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath, 29 Ind. Cas. 453; 21 C. L. J. 618 at p. 620, Kamini Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli, 11 Ind. Cas. 382; 15 C. L. J. 690; 15 C. W. N. 681, *Ishan Chandra Kar v. Where there is no agreement between a Pleader and his client, the Pleader is entitled to maintain an action for recovery of reasonable remuneration for services rendered. But where there is a contract between the parties such contract to be enforceable must fulfil the requirements of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, namely, the contract must be in writing and the writing must be deposited in Court within the prescribed period. [p. 11, col. 2.]

Plaintiff, a legal practitioner, rendered certain professional services to the defendant. There was an agreement between the parties as to the remuneration to be paid to the plaintiff but it was not filed in Court. On accounts being adjusted between the parties a certain sum was found due to the plaintiff on the basis of the agreement. He sued to recover this amount:

Held, that the suit was in its essence to enforce the agreement and was not maintainable on account of failure to comply with the provisions of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. [p. 11, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 17th February 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court of that District, dated the 28th December 1918.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Gopendra Nath Das), for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of money (Rs. 5,000) due on adjustment of accounts. The plaintiff acted as the legal adviser of the father and the paternal grandmother of the defendant. My allegation is that an account was taken of the sums due to me for my services and that after deducting the sums paid and the amounts relinquished an amicable settlement was made on 11th April 1914 and it was found and settled that Rs. 5,000 was due to me from the defendant's estate. The defendant is a Ward of Court. The defence was that the suit was barred under section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Courts below have given effect to the contention of the defendant.

My submission is that the words of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act should be liberally construed. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the agreement was not evaded. Refers to Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath (1). The present case is distinguishable. Section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act does not cover a case based upon an adjustment of accounts. I am undoubtedly entitled to reasonable compensation to be measured on the basis of the adjustment. I do not base my case upon section 70 of the Indian Contract Act.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarty, Senior Government Pleader, (with him Babu Surendra Nath Guha), for the Respondent.—In the present case the original consideration is barred. The debts are barred and, therefore, there could not be any acknowledgment of the barred debt under section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. The suit was brought within three years of the draft receipt dated 11th April 1914. All works done by the plaintiff must have been long before done. The draft receipt cannot be treated as a mere acknowledgment of liability. Section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act is comprehensive enough to include every adjustment. See Kamini Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli (2), Ishan Chandra Kar v. Ram Charan Pal

KALIPADA DAS V. PURGA DAS ROY.

(3), and Mohendra Lal v. Akhil Chandra Pakrashi (4).

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy in reply.—The so-called adjustment is not based on any agreement. The suit is not for the enforcement of the original contract. Section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act would not, therefore, apply. Assuming that it is based on the original agreement, section 25 (2) of the Indian Contract Act would save it. Section 29 of the Legal Practitioners Act would apply in all cases. See Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manick Chandra Nath (1) and Kamini Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli (2).

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money due on adjustment of accounts, the plaintiff who is a Pleader acted as the legal adviser of the father of the defendant as also of his paternal grandmother. It was agreed between the parties that the plaintiff would receive his legal fees, if so desired, or that the plaintiff would get Rs. 32 per diem in contested suits, Rs. 16 per diem in ex parte suits, Rs. 6 for filing petitions and for appearing, Rs. 4 for accepting vakalatnamah and Rs. 16 to Rs. 32 for drafting plaint and written statement, as the case might be. The plaintiff alleges that an account was taken of the sums due to him for his service, and that after deduction of the amounts paid and of the amount relinquished on amicable settlement, it was found on the 11th April 1914 that a sum of Rs. 5,000 was due to him. On the 10th April 1917, the plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover the sum thus found due to him on adjustment of accounts. The defendant is a minor under the Court of Wards and the Manager of the Court of Wards on his behalf took the defence that the suit was barred under section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. This defence has prevailed in both the Courts below and the suit has accordingly been dismissed.

Section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act is in these terms: "No agreement entered into by any Pleader.. with any person retaining or employing him, respecting the amount and manner of payment for the whole or any part of any past or future services, fees, charges, or disbursements in respect of business done or to be done by such Pleader..shall be valid unless it is made in writing signed by such person, and is, within 15 days from the day on which it is executed, filed in the District Court or in some Court in which some portion of the business in respect of which it has been executed has been or is to be done."

The true scope of this section formed the subject of discussion in the cases of Kamini Moni Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli (5), Kamini Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli (2), Ishan Chandra Kar v. Ram Charan Pal (3), Mohendra Lal v. Akhil Chandra Pakrashi (4) and Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath (1). These decisions show that the Court is reluctant to restrict the provision of section 28 by placing a narrow and restricted interpretation thereon. It may be conceded that where there is no agreement between the Pleader and his client, the Pleader is entitled to maintain an action for recovery of reasonable remuneration for services rendered. But where there is a contract between the parties such contract to be enforceable must fulfil the requirements of section 28, namely, that the contract must be in writing and the writing must be deposited in Court within the prescribed period. In the case before us, the plaint shows that there was an agreement between the Pleader and his client, that agreement was admittedly not deposited in Court and consequently was not enforceable under section 28. Subsequently, an adjustment was made and a sum was found due to the plaintiff. The question is whether a suit on the basis of this adjusted account is in essence a suit to enforce an agreement which does not comply with the requirements of section 28. In our opinion the answer must be in affirmative. A similar point arose before Mr. Justice Muthusami Ayyar in Krisnasami v. Kcsava (6). There the client delivered to his Pleader a promissory-note for the amount of his dues. The note was not filed in Court. In a suit to enforce the promissory-note the Court held that the note was invalid, as executed in respect of business done by the plaintiff as Pleader of the defendant within the meaning of section 28. The point arose again in Anantayya v. Padmayya (7) where Mr. Justice Muthusami Ayyar followed his previous decision in Krisnasami v. Kesava (6). In that case the suit was brought on a note which had been given in substitution for another note for which the consideration was fee payable by the client to the Pleader. It was held that the note was invalid and could not be enforced under section 28. The matter was fully discussed by Mr. Justice Subramaniya Ayyar and Mr. Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar in the case of Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Ayyar (8). In that case the Pleader had incurred expenses in connection with law suits conducted by him for his client and a promissory-note had been given by the client to recover the sum due. It was ruled that the promissory-note was, within the meaning of section 28, an agreement respecting the amount of payment for charges incurred or disbursements made by the Pleader in respect of the suits in which he had been retained, it was invalid as it had not been filed in Court as required by the section. These decisions were reviewed by Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastry in the case of Natesa Mooppan v. Ramachandra Iyer (9). It was held that a promissory-note given in such circumstances must be treated as embodying an agreement by a client with his Pleader to pay his fees and was consequently not valid unless it fulfilled the requirements of section 28. We are of opinion that in the present case the suit is not maintainable on the basis of the adjusted accounts.

It has been finally urged that the case may be brought within the scope of section 25 of the Indian Contract Act. The agreement may be treated as a promise to compensate, wholly or in part, a person who has already voluntarily done something for the promisor. The answer is that the services rendered by the Pleader were not voluntary. They were rendered on request, in pursuance of an agreement to pay a certain remuneration. We have examined the plaint with a view to consider whether the suit can be treated not as a suit on the adjusted accounts but as a suit to recover a reasonable remuneration for services rendered. But the allegations in the plaint leave no room for doubt that the suit cannot be so treated. No details are furnished as to the services rendered; and even if the details were available, a question of limitation would arise. The adjustment was made nearly three years before the suit and long after the services had been rendered, a claim founded on the original cause of action would be plainly barred by limitation.

The result is that the decree made by the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Babu Hira Lal Singh, who was recorded in the recent Survey Record of Rights as the occupancy tenant. The applicant brought a rent suit against this man and obtained a rent-decree in 1921. He executed this decree and the 18th July last was the date fixed for sale. On the 17th of that month a petition was filed on behalf of two persons named Barhamdeo Ray and Sita Ram for permission to deposit the decretal amount on the ground that they, by a compromise effected in connection with some litigation with Babu Hira Lal Singh, had obtained a transfer from him to them of his holding. Now, no authority is, I think, really needed, although as a matter of fact, there is ample authority to that effect, for the proposition that in circumstances such as these it is necessary that notice must be given to the judgment-creditor and to the judgment-debtor of an application of this nature, and further that a definite adjudication must be given, as to whether the deposit can or cannot be made by those who desire to make it. Now, the Munsif of 2nd Court of Begusarai seems to have dealt with this matter on the 18th July last year. But it is now common ground and admitted, both by the learned Vakil for the respondents here as well as by the learned Vakil for the applicants, that it would appear that the Munsif dealt with the matter ex parte. His order simply reads:—

"Barhamdeo Ray and Sita Ram Ray alleging themselves to be interested persons apply for permission to deposit the decretal amount. Heard Pleader, ordered permitted to deposit."

No notice seems to have been given either to the applicant or to the judgment-debtor and certainly no adjudication has been made as to whether it was proper that the deposit of this decretal amount should be accepted. As a matter of fact, a very serious question is in issue as to whether the holding was transferable by custom or not. Under these circumstances, obviously, the only course open to me is to send the matter back to the Munsif. The necessary notices must be given and the matter must be investigated and adjudicated upon in accordance with law. The order of the Munsif of the 18th July 1922 will be set aside. The costs of this case will abide the result of the investigation.

Where the party attacking a mortgage-deed relating to several properties on the ground of fraud in registration, shows that the property in virtue of which registration was effected either did not exist or that the mortgagor never had any title thereto, the burden of showing that no fraud had been committed is thrown on the other side. The fact that such property was entered in the deed is in itself sufficient to raise a presumption that a fraud was intended. [p. 14, col. 2; p. 15, col. 1.]

SURJA V. BIJAI BAHADUR SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by defendant in the suit in which the sons of Bisheshar Singh, deceased, asked for a declaration that a mortgage-deed passed against their father on a deed executed by him is not binding on them. The mortgage was in favour of one Sheo Narain, now deceased, and the appellant, Musamat Surja, is his widow. The principal plea on which the case has been decided in the plaintiffs' favour is, that the mortgage-deed was invalid for failure to comply with the law of registration. The facts are not in dispute. The share mortgaged was situated in the Patti Tehsil of the Partabgarh District. The deed was actually registered not at the Patti Sub-Registration Office but at Partabgarh. In order to enable this to be done two plots in the village of Sansarpur, situated within the limits of the Partabgarh Registration Circle, were inserted in the deed. It has been found, and is not disputed, that Bisheshar Singh never at any time had any interest in these two plots. The learned Subordinate Judge held that these facts amounted to a fraud on the Registration Officer and invalidated the registration of the deed. In appeal before the learned District Judge it was contended that, even if there was a fraud on the registration it was not shown that the mortgagee was a party to it. The learned District Judge dealt with this question and decided, on the basis of the Privy Council ruling in Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (1), that it was immaterial whether the mortgagee was a party to the fraud or not. I can find nothing in the Privy Council judgment to support the rule laid down by the learned District Judge and it is not argued before me that any such rule has been laid down. The question has been argued in this Court mainly on the question of burden of proof. The appellant contends that it lay on the plaintiffs to show by positive evidence that a fraud was committed and that the mortgagee was a party to it, and that as there is no evidence to this effect on the record the suit should have been dismissed. In support of this contention I have been referred to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Pahladi Lal v. Laraiti (2) and to a decision of the Patna High Court reported as Ram Dai v. Ram Chandrabali Debi (3) as well as two Privy Council judgments dealing with this matter. The Patna case is hardly in point as there was a definite finding that the transferor, though he had ceased to have an interest in the property in dispute, acted in perfect good faith. The Allahabad case was considered and distinguished by the Judicial Commissioner in the case of Jadunath Kunwar v. Dharam Narain (4) in the course of a carefully reasoned judgment which contains an elaborate analysis of the Privy Council judgment in Harendra Lal Roy v. Hari Dasi Bebi (5). That was a case in which a piece of property which had no existence was inserted in a registration deed for the purpose of enabling registration to be effected at Calcutta. The party supporting the deed asserted that this house, 25, Guru Das Street, had been inserted by mistake for another property described as 25, Asutosh Dey Lane. The latter property really existed but it was proved that the mortgagor had never any title to it. The question of the burden of proof arose in that case and their Lordships say in a passage which the Judicial Commissioner quotes:

"The defendants having proved that the house which purported to be mortgaged did not exist, and that the property contained in the metes and bounds mentioned in parcel 28 was the property of strangers in which the mortgagor had not and never had any interest, had proved all that was necessary to throw upon the plaintiff the burden of showing that the entry of this parcel was not a fictitious entry."

The passage fully supports the contention of the respondents, that when the party attacking a deed has shown that the plot in virtue of which registration was effected was one which either did not exist or to which the plaintiff never had any title, the burden of showing that no fraud had been committed is thrown on the other side. It was argued before the Judicial Commissioner that the case of a non-existent property and the case of a property to which the plaintiff never had any title stood on a different footing. The Judicial Commissioner rejected this contention and the correctness of this reasoning has been affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (1). In the course of their judgment their Lordships say:

"In the case just mentioned the property was non-existent. In the present case, though the Kolhua Mouza existed mortgagor had no interest in it and the parties to mortgage never intended that it should form part of the security. The two cases stand on the same basis for the purposes of the Registration Act."

The appellant has attempted to distinguish this latter case on the ground that there was a definite finding that a fraud had been committed by both parties to the deed. An examination of the judgment shows that this finding was an inference drawn from the circumstances already mentioned. The only direct evidence referred to in the judgment is evidence by which it was attempted to support the registration. A witness was put forward to prove that he had sold the mortgagor the minute share in the Kolhua property in virtue of which registration was effected. It was found that no sale-deed was executed and there was no delivery of possession. Their Lordships held that this evidence was false and that the parties supporting the deed had failed to rebut the inference of fraud which arose from the circumstances. They remark that the case differs toto caelo from the case suggested in argument to a mere failure to make a good title to property dealt with by the instrument which both parties had intended should form part of the security. The fact that property was inserted in the deed which did not belong and never had belonged, to the mortgagor is in itself sufficient to raise a presumption that a fraud was intended.

It has been, however, argued by the appellant that, even if the burden of proof lay on her, she has discharged it. In support of this argument I am referred to a sentence in the evidence of one of the attesting witnesses, D.W. No. 5, to the effect that Bisheshar Singh said that he held two plots in Sansarpur and showed a piece of paper containing the numbers of the plots. He was cross-examined about this point and stated that Sheo Narain asked the mortgagor no question whatever about this property in his presence. This witness is not specifically referred to in the judgment of the Trial Court, but the Court was evidently not impressed with his evidence, for the learned Subordinate Judge says, in referring to the evidence produced by the plaintiffs to show that the mortgagor had no title to these Sansarpur plots:

"Defendant No. 1 has not rebutted this evidence at all nor shown that entry of these plots in the deed was not fictitious."

In face of this finding I am not prepared to rely on the evidence of this witness, which is, on the face of it, highly suspicious. I hold this issue has been rightly decided by the Courts below.

The only other point pressed is that, because the mortgagee got a decree on the mortgage against Bisheshar Singh, the father of the plaintiffs, the latter are precluded from questioning the validity of the deed. No authority has been shown me in support of this proposition and, on principle, I see no reason that the plaintiffs who claim under an independent title could be bound by the decree in a suit to which they were not parties.

The result is, that the appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

ss. 13, 105—Suit to eject sub-tenant after surrender of tenancy—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts:

If a tenant surrenders his holding, the sub-tenancy created by him is also determined.

Bhopal Singh v. Thakur Borelal, 6 C. P. L. R. 74, relied on.

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to try a suit to eject a sub-tenant after a surrender of the tenancy by the tenant. Such a suit is not between a landlord and a tenant but, between a landlord and a trespasser.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 3rd March 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1922.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Appellants.
Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, as Lambardari sued to recover possession of the suit land from the defendants alleging that the tenant, Kalu, had actually surrendered the land to him on 18th June 1918 and put him in possession. On 1st July 1920 the defendants took wrongful possession. The defendants pleaded that they were in possession under an agreement dated 25th December 1907 executed by Kalu in favour of their father. They denied the surrender and pleaded that the suit was not tenable under section 47 of the old Central Provinces Tenancy Act and under section 13 of the new Tenancy Act, and that the suit was not triable by a Civil Court. It was also contended that the suit is barred by limitation.

The First Court, Munsif of Khandwa, found that Kalu did execute the deed of surrender, but plaintiff was never put in possession and that the defendants came into possession on 25th December 1907 and they have not dispossessed the plaintiff as alleged. It further held that the agreement is a mortgage and if it is illegal for want of registration the defendants' possession is adverse. They have no right of ownership but only cultivating right. The tenancy right in the land did not come to an end. If Kalu's right did come to an end it is by reason of the defendants' adverse possession. The suit was dismissed.

On appeal this decree was reversed by the District Judge, Nimar, who held that the deed of surrender was not a mortgage but a sub-lease. There was no question of adverse possession. The tenancy of Kalu ceased, and the questions of applying section 47 of the Tenancy Act and the suit being time-barred did not arise. The claim for possession was allowed with mesne profits.

The defendants filed this second appeal against that decision on the ground that as Kalu put the defendants in possession under the agreement dated the 25th December 1907 and as Kalu was not in possession on the date of surrender the lower Appellate Court erred in law in holding that the plaintiff was put in possession of the field in dispute and as such the plaintiff could not acquire a legal title under his surrender, that it should have been held that as defendants were in possession of the land since 1907 they acquired a legal right against the plaintiff and their possession should not have been disturbed and as plaintiff did not file an application under section 47 of the Tenancy Act within two years his suit is time-barred.

Exhibit D-14 is clearly a sub-lease and not a mortgage under section 59 of the old Tenancy Act. When Kalu surrendered his tenancy, the sub-tenancy was determined also, as was held in Bhopal Singh v. Thakur Borelal (1). As to the argument that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to try this case under section 95 of the Tenancy Act, it is sufficient to say that this is not a case between landlord and tenant but between landlord and trespassers. No doubt, if the plaintiff wanted to apply to the Revenue Court under section 47 of the Tenancy Act to set aside the deed his right to do so may have become barred, but that is a state of things which has now ceased to exist since the surrender of Kalu.

The defendants are no longer sub-tenants. Ganeshdas v. Shankar (2) has no application to the facts of the case. No question of adverse possession arises. The possession of defendants could not be adverse until the surrender of Kalu. The lower Appellate Court finds that the plaintiff was not in possession since 1920. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, correct. The decree is confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 103, 104, 116, applicability of—Dower-debt, suit for recovery of, nature of—Registered dower-deed—Limitation—"Compensation," meaning of—Legislative recognition of judicial construction.

Article 116 of the First Sch. to the Limitation Act is applicable to all cases where the position can be reasonably maintained that the claim sought to be enforced is a claim for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered. [p. 19, col. 1.]

(Case-law considered.)

A suit for recovery of dower-debt when there is a registered dower-deed is governed by Art. 116 of the First Sch. to the Limitation Act, although Arts. 103 and 104 of the Sch. would apply when there was no such registered instrument. [p. 23, col. 2.]

Ful. Chand Bibee v. Nawab Ali Chowdhury, 1 Ind. Cas. 740; 36 C. 184; 9 C. L. J. 105; 13 C. W. N. 134, Aisatulla v. Danes Mohammad, 70 Ind. Cas. 169; 36 C. L. J. 379, (1922) A. I. R. (C.) 152, relied on.

A suit to recover a dower-debt is a suit to enforce a simple money claim founded solely on the contract entered into by the husband. It is, moreover, a suit to recover compensation within the meaning of Art. 116 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 23, col. 1.]

Wafeah v. Sahseba, 8 W. R. 307, Janee Khanum v. Amatool Fatima, 8 W. R. 51, Mahabubibi v. Amina, 10 B. H. C. R. 430. Ranee Khajooronissa v. Ranee Ryeesoornissa, 21 A. 235; 24 W. R. 163; 15 B. L. R. 306; 5 Sar. P. C. 3. 526 (P. C.), Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi, 36 Ind. Cas. 87; 43 I. A. 294; 38 A. 581; 25 C. L. J. 517; 14 A. L. J. 1055; 21 C. W. N. 1; 18 Bom. L. R. 999; 31 M. L. J. 799; 20 M. L. T. 505; 4 L. W. 602; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 551; 1 P. L. W. 57; 25 C. L. J. 517 (P. C.), Nurunnissa Khanum v. Muhammad Sakru, 56 Ind. Cas. 8; 47 C. 537; 31 C. L. J. 14; 24 C. W. N. 335, relied on.

The term "compensation" as used in Arts. 115 and 116 of the Sch. to the Limitation Act is not sufficiently precise, but the technical distinction between a debt and damages is too refined for the purpose. [p. 22, col. 2.]

Ordinarily, the term compensation is not used as equivalent to damages although compensation may often have to be measured by the same rule as damages in an action for the breach. It signifies that which is given in recompense, an equivalent rendered. Damages, on the other hand, constitute the sum of money claimed or adjudged to be paid in compensation for loss or injury sustained; the value estimated in money of something lost or withheld. [p. 22, col. 1.]

The term compensation etymologically suggests the image of balancing one thing against another its primary signification is equivalence, and the secondary and more common meaning is something given or obtained as an equivalent. [p. 22, col. 2.]

The Legislature is presumed to know not only the general principles of law but also the construction which the Courts have put upon particular Statutes. [p. 22, col. 1.]

Where a section of an Act which has received a judicial construction is re-enacted in the same words, such re-enactment is treated as a legislative recognition of that construction. [p. 22, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts material for the determination of the question of limitation raised in this appeal are no longer in dispute and may be briefly recited. The plaintiff-respondent, a Muhammadan gentleman, gave his daughter in marriage to the defendant-appellant. At the time of the marriage, the defendant executed and registered in favour of his wife a dower-deed, on the 15th September 1908. The deed fixed the dower at Rs. 5,000; one half was prompt and payable on demand; the other half was deferred. The lady died on the 18th September 1909. On the 10th September 1915, the plaintiff, as one of the heirs-at-law of his daughter, instituted the present suit against the son-in-law for recovery of his one-third share of the dower-debt. The defendant pleaded, amongst other defences, the bar of limitation. The Court of first instance held that the suit was governed not by the three year's, but by the six years' rule of limitation and decreed the claim. On appeal, this decision has been affirmed by the District Judge. On the present appeal, that decree has been assailed on the ground that the suit is barred by the three years' rule of limitation. The respondent has urged that the six years' rule is applicable, as the dower was fixed by a registered document.

Article 103 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, provides as follows:—

"103. A suit by a Muhammadan for exigible dower shall be instituted within three years from the date when the dower is demanded and refused, or (where during the continuance of the marriage, no such demand has been made) when the marriage is dissolved by death or divorce."

Article 104 provides as follows:

"104. A suit by a Muhammadan for deferred dower shall be instituted within three years from the date when the marriage is dissolved by death or divorce."

In the case before us, as there was no demand and refusal during the continuance of the marriage, time ran, both as regards the prompt and the deferred dower, from the date when the marriage was dissolved by death. Consequently, the suit should have been, prima facie, instituted within three years from the 18th September 1909 when the lady died. But the plaintiff had urged—and his contention had been accepted by the Courts below—that as the dower-deed was registered, he is entitled to the benefit of Art. 116.

Article 116 provides as follows:

"116. A suit for compensation for the breach of a contract, in writing registered, shall be instituted within six years from the date when the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract not registered."

This plainly refers to Art. 115 which provides as follows:

"115. A suit for compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing registered and not herein especially provided for, shall be instituted within three years from the date when the contract is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases."

The appellant has contended that even if we assume that the present suit for recovery of the dower-debt may be treated as a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered within the meaning of Art. 116, that Article, which provides a general rule applicable to contracts in writing registered cannot be applied when there are special Articles namely, Arts. 103 and 104, which precisely cover the case. The appellant has, in fact, invoked the well-established principle that if there are two Articles in the Schedule to the Limitation Act, which may possibly govern a case, the one more general and the other more special, the more particular and specific Article should be regarded as the one governing the case. Illustrations of the application of this doctrine may be found in the cases of Ishur Chunder Bhaduri v. Jibun Kumari Bibi (1); Sharooop Das v. Joggesur Roy Chowdhury (2); Netesan Chetti v. Soundararaja Ayyangar (3); Runchorda Vandravandas v. Parvalibai (4); Narmadabai v. Bhavanishankar (5). The principle, generalia specialibus non derogant, specialia derogant generalibus, has been recognised elsewhere, and illustrations of the doctrine that general provisions do not derogate from special provisions, but that the latter do derogate from the former, are by no means rare; see Hunter v. Nockolds (6); Churchill v. Crease (7); De Winton v. Brecon Corporation (8); Pretty v. Solly (9). The respondent has not denied that this argument carries considerable weight; but he has urged that it is too late for this Court to depart from what has been recognised in a long line of cases as the true scope of Art. 116 including the decision of the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas Cooverji

MAHAMMAD MAZHAR AL AHAD v. MAHAMMAD AZIMUDDIN.

Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (10). As will presently appear, from an examination of numerous judicial decisions, Art. 116 has been held applicable, by reason of the existence of a written and registered contract, in classes of cases which are prima facie governed by special provision contained in the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act.

Article 57 provides as follows:

"57. A suit for money payable for money lent shall be instituted within three years from the date when the loan is made." It has been repeatedly held that a suit on a registered bond for recovery of a specific sum of money is governed not by Art. 57 but by Art. 116; see Nobocoomar Mookhopadhyaya v. Siru Mullick (11); Kalut Ram v. Lala Dhanunkdhari (12); Sham Charan Mal v. Chowdhury Debya Singh (13); Ethel Georgina Kerr v. Clara B. Ruxton (14); *Nistarini Debi v. Article 64 provides as follows:

the defendant to the plaintiff on accounts stated between them shall be instituted within three years from the date when the accounts are stated in writing signed by the defendant or his agent duly authorised in this behalf, unless where the debt is by a simultaneous agreement in writing signed as aforesaid, made payable at a future time, and then when that time arrives."

Article 106 provides as follows:

"106. A suit for an account and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership, shall be instituted within three years from the date of the dissolution."

With reference to these Articles, it was ruled in Ranga Reddi v. Chinna Reddi (24), that where a registered partnership contract binds the parties to pay the loss according to their respective shares, a suit to recover the defendant's share of the loss, on a settlement of accounts between the plaintiffs and the defendants, is governed, neither by Art. 64, nor by Art. 106, but by Art. 116. It is to be noted, however, that in Vairavan Asari v. Ponnayya (25) the Court expressed its unwillingness to hold that Art. 116 could be stretched to cover every case in which the suit might in its origin be referred to a contractual relationship expressed in a registered agreement.

Article 74 provides as follows:

"74. A suit on a promissory-note or bond payable by instalments shall be instituted within three years from the date of the expiration of the first term of payment as to the part then payable; and for the other parts, the expiration of the respective terms of payment."

With reference to this provision, it has been ruled that if the instalment bond has been registered, the suit is governed not by Art. 74, but by Art. 116: Din Dayal v. Gopal Sarun (26); Rup Narain v. Gopi Nath (27).

Article 89 provides as follows:

"89. A suit by a principal against his agent for moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for, shall be instituted within three years from the date when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, or, where no such demand is made, when the agency terminates."

With reference to this Article, it was ruled in Mali Lal Bose v. Amin Chand (28), that a suit for an account, by a principal against his agent on the basis of a registered agreement, is governed, not by Art. 89 but by Art. 116, the cause of action arising from the date when the contract to render accounts is broken. This view is identical with that taken in Harendra Kishore Singh v. Administrator-General of Bengal (29) and was followed in Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (30); Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal (31) and Bhagirath Samanta v. Prem Chand (32). The current of judicial opinion, however upon this question has been by no means uniform; see Debendra Nath Ghosh v. Sheikh Esha Huq (33); Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (34); Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das (35); Nobin Chandra v. Chandra Madhab (36), modifying Chandra Madhab v. Nabin Chandra (37); Bhabatarini Debi Chowdhuran v. Sheikh Bahadur Sarkar (38); Jogendra Nath Roy v. Deb Nath Chatterji (39); Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Sahu (40); Madhub Chunder v. Debendra Nath (41); Jhapajhanessa Bibee v. Rama Sundari (42); and Pranram Mookerjee v. Jagadish Nath Ray (43). These cases, however, struggle, in most instances, to escape the application of Art. 116, not so much because the Article should not be applied to cases comprised within the scope of special Articles, but rather because a suit by a principal against an agent for the relief mentioned in Art. 89 cannot properly be regarded as a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered. This, however, does not apply to the decision in Pranram Mookerjee v. Jagadish Nath Ray (43), where the twofold contention was accepted that (a) Art. 89 excludes the operation of Art. 115, which is applicable only to cases not specially provided for; and (b) Art. 116 must be read along with Art. 115 and be deemed restricted in operation in the same manner. This view, as will presently appear, is opposed to that indicated in Vythilinga Pillai v. Thetchanamurti Pillai (44); Din Dayal v. Gopal Sarun (26), and adopted by the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (10). It will be observed that the expression "not herein specially provided for" which finds a place in the first column of Art. 115 does not reappear in the first column of Art. 116. But this plainly does not conclude the matter, and the expression "similar contract not registered" which finds a place in the third column of Art. 116 does require interpretation. Does it refer only to the first column of Art. 116 and consequently mean "a contract in writing not registered," or does it refer to the first column of Art. 115 and signify "a contract not in writing registered and not herein specially provided for?" The first alternative was adopted in Vythilinga Pillai v. Thetchanamurti Pillai (44) and Din Dayal v. Gopal Sarun (26), and apparently found favour with the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (10). The second alternative was adopted in Pranram Mookerjee v. Jagadish Nath Ray (43). The conflict, consequently, is between two opposing views; one maintains that Art. 116, like Art. 115, applies where there is no special provision; the other maintains that Art. 116 supersedes all provisions, including those covered by special Articles unaffected by Art. 115. In this connection, reference may also be made to the decision in Kandaswami Pillai v. Avayambal (45), where it was ruled that a suit by an agent to recover money spent by him on account of his principal, is governed by Art. 61 and not by Art. 116, even though there was a registered contract of agency; the obligation was deemed as no part of the contract in writing registered, and the earlier decisions in Krishnan Nambiar v. Kannan (46); and Seshachala Naickar v. Varada Chariar (47), were distinguished, though they were clearly authorities for the proposition that obligations not expressed in writing, but imported by the law in the case of sales, might be treated as in writing, for purposes of limitation, when the sale was made by a written instrument.

Article 110 provided as follows:

"110. A suit for arrears of rent shall be instituted within three years from the date when the arrears become due."

It has been ruled in a long series of decisions that a suit for arrears of rent, based upon a registered lease, is governed, not by Art. 110 but by Art. 116: Vythilinga Pillai v. Thetchanamurti Pillai (44); Umesh Chunder v. Adarmoni Dasi (48); Iswari Pershad v. Crowdy (49); Raniganj Coal Association Limited v. Judoonath Ghose (50); Umrao Bibi v. Mahomed Rojabi (51); Ambalavana Pandaram v. Vaguran (52); Chengiah v. Thimma Nayan (53); Sundaram Iyer v. Muthuganapathigal (54); Kannan Narayanan v. Muthulpurelath Ramunni (55); Mohamad Hanif v. Moorat Mahton (56); Mac- kenzie v. Rameshwar Singh (57); Lalchand Manchand Gujar v. Narayan Hart (58). The contrary view, adopted in Ramaswami Chetti v. Sakanada Chetti (59), and Ram Narain v. Kamta Singh (60), has now been expressly disapproved of by the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (10). Suits for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act have, however, escaped this fate; they have been held to be governed by the special rule contained in the Schedule to that Statute, which remains unaffected by Art. 110 and Art. 116; see the decision of the Full Bench in Mackenzie v. Haji Syed Mahomed Ali Khan (61).

We have not given above an exhaustive enumeration of all the judicial decisions relevant to the points mentioned; but we have stated enough to show that Art. 116 has been repeatedly interpreted, in the most diverse connections, as if it were a generalised exception engrafted upon all Articles which might, by stretch of language, be regarded as applicable to suits comprehended within the description of a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract." One of the earliest of these decisions: Nobocomar Mookhopadkaya v. Siru Mullick (11), goes back to 1880, and the judgment in that case, as also judgments delivered by the Full Bench in 1881 in Husain Ali Khan v. Hafiz Ali Khan (18), were based upon a historical review of the previous legislation on the subject; but it may be observed, parenthetically, that some of the judgments delivered by the Full Bench also referred to inadmissible materials, such as, what happened in the Legislative Council, Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (62). Yet the construction then placed upon Art. 116 of the Limitation Act, 1877, must be taken to have found favour with the Legislature, as it has been reproduced without alteration in the Limitation Act, 1908. The Legislature is presumed to know not only the general principles of law, but also the construction which the Courts have put upon particular Statutes; where a section of an Act which has received a judicial construction is re-enacted in the same words, such re-enactment is treated as a Legislative recognition of that construction: Jogendra Chandra Ray v. Syam Das (63); Kamini Debi v. Promotho Nath (64); Nogendra Mohan Roy v. Pyari Mohan Saha (65). The Judicial Committee in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (10), felt impressed by this consideration, and Lord Sumner emphasised the fact that when the Limitation Act of 1877 was replaced by the Limitation Act of 1908, the language and arrangement of the relevant Articles were left unaltered. In such circumstances, no useful purpose will be served by an attempt to examine the foundations of the long series of decisions which the Judicial Committee found themselves bound to recognise.

In answer to the contention that claims of this character sound in debt and not in damages, it may be pointed out, however, that the term used in Art. 115 and Art. 116 is not damages but compensation, which also occurs in section 73 of the Indian Contract Act. As Lord Esher observed in Dixon v. Calcraft (66), the expression compensation is not ordinarily used as an equivalent to damages although, as remarked by Fry, L.J., in Skinner's Co. v. Knight (67), compensation may often have to be measured by the same rule as damages in an action for the breach. The term compensation, as pointed out in the Oxford Dictionary, signifies that which is given in recompense, an equivalent rendered. Damages, on the other hand, constitute the sum of money claimed or adjudged to be paid in compensation for loss or injury sustained; the value estimated in money of something lost or withheld. The term compensation etymologically suggests the image of balancing one thing against another, its primary signification is equivalence, and the secondary and more common meaning is something given or obtained as an equivalent. The derivative meaning was familiar to the Roman Jurists and re-appears in the modern Codes founded on the Civil Law. (Sohm, Institutes of Roman Law, 3rd Edition, pp. 458-463).

The term compensation, as used in Arts. 115 and 116 is thus, perhaps, not sufficiently precise, while the technical distinction between debt and damages may be too refined for the purpose.

We must hold that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (10), though concerned directly with the applicability of Art. 110 and Art. 116 to a suit for arrears of rent, instituted upon a registered lease, must be regarded as of far-reaching application. We cannot ignore the principle which lies at the root of that decision and must govern the applicability of Art. 116 to cases other than those covered by Art. 110 wherever the position may reasonably be maintained that the claim sought to be enforced is a claim for compensation for breach of a contract in writing registered. We must consequently examine whether a claim for exigible dower and a claim for deferred dower fall within this category.

The nature of dower-debt was examined by this Court in the case of Mir Mahar Ali v. Amani (68), and it was ruled that, according to Muhammadan Law, when the heirs of a Muhammadan woman claim from her husband dower which was not due or payable until her death, their claim is a simple money claim, founded solely on the contract entered into by the husband. The Limitation Act then in force was Act XIV of 1859. Clause 9 of section 1 provided a period of three years for the institution of a suit brought to recover money lent or interest or for the breach of any contract. Clause 10 of section 1 provided a period of three years for a suit brought to recover money lent or interest or for the breach of any contract in a case in which there was a written engagement or contract and in which such engagement or contract could have been, but had not been registered within six months from the date thereof. Clause 16 of section 1 provided a period of six years for all suits for which no other limitation was expressly provided. The Court held that the suit for dower was a simple suit for the breach of a contract, within the meaning of clauses 9 and 10 of section 1. Reference was made to the decisions in Shahazada Mahomed Fazz v. Shahazadee Oomdah Begum (69), and Woomatool Fatima Begum v. Meerunmunissa Khanum (70), the first had been cited as an authority for the position that a suit for dower was not founded on the contract, but on the withholding of the widow's estate from the heirs. The second had been relied upon to support the contention that the claim to recover the dower-debt was in essence to enforce a lien upon the estate of the deceased as against those entitled as heirs. These dicta were explained away, and it was held that the dower, like any other debt, must be paid before the estate divisible among the heirs can be ascertained, and that the suit to recover the dower-debt is nothing more nor less than a suit to enforce a simple money claim founded solely on the contract entered into by the husband; see also Wafeah v. Saheeba (71); Janee Khanum v. Amatool Fatima (72), Mahabubibi v. Amina (73). The view taken in these cases is supported by the observation of Sir Montague Smith in Ranee Khajooroonissa v. Ranee Ryeesoornissa (74), namely, that prompt or exigible dower may be considered a debt always due and demandable, and certainly payable upon demand, with the result that upon a clear and unambiguous demand and refusal, a cause of action would accrue and the Statute would begin to run. To the same effect is the remark of Lord Parker in Hamira

Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (75), that the dower ranks as a debt, and the right of the wife is no greater than that of any other unsecured creditor of her husband, subject to the reservation that if she lawfully, with the express or implied consent of the husband or his other heirs, obtains possession of the whole or part of his estate to satisfy her claim with the rents and issues accruing therefrom, she is entitled to retain such possession unless it is satisfied; see also Nurunnessa Khanum v. Muhammad Sakru (76), and Abi Dhunimsa Bibi Ammal v. Muhammad Fathi Udini Sahib (77). In view of the principles expounded and applied in the long series of decisions which have now met with the approval of the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoja v. Gopinathji Thakur (10), there is thus no escape from the conclusion that Art. 116 applies to suits for recovery of dower-debt when there is a registered dower-deed, although Arts. 103 and 104 would apply when there is no such registered instrument. We are not unmindful that the contrary view was, without argument, assumed to be correct in Ful Chand Bibee v. Nawab Ali Chowdhury (78). The view which we are constrained to adopt coincides with that taken in the case of Aisatulla v. Danes Mohammad (79), which was brought to our notice after the arguments had been closed, and has been reported since then.

The result is that the decree made by the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

GOWARDHANDAS v. WAHIDKHAN.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 36-B OF 1922.

March 21, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Prideaux, A. J. C.

WAHIDKHAN—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Lease for specific purpose—Purpose not carried out—Lease, determination of—Perpetual lease—Lessee, death of, effect of.

Where a lease is granted for a specific purpose it lapses automatically, if the purpose is not carried out. [p. 26, col. 1.]

A perpetual lease is determined by the death of the lessee. Therefore, a lease of land to a Company for a specific purpose, whereby the Company is given the power of holding the land as long as it pleases, is determined as soon as the Company becomes defunct. [p. 26, cols. 1 & 2.]

Vaman Shripad v. Mahi, 4 B. 424; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 788, relied on.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 265 of 1921, dated the 24th October 1921.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. M. B. Khinkhede, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint on which this litigation arose states that Survey No. 679-1, area 4 acres and 25 gunthas rental Rs. 12 of Kasba Akot, belonged to one Sheikh Mantoo, son of Sheikh Rahim. He leased the same to a Company called the Ginning Company, Akot, of the shop of Maraoti Ganesh Asarkar, for the construction of a Ginning Factory. This lease is dated 4th June 1905 the lease money being Rs. 120. Sheikh Mantoo died about 1911 and after his death his heir, his wife Chotambi, became the owner of the property. She sold the land with other immoveable property on 5th March 1912 to Waheb Khan, the son of the present plaintiffs. Waheb Khan having died plaintiffs as his father and mother became the owners of the field. The Ginning Company has been dissolved and there is no Ginning Factory in the field now. The firm sold to one Mojumkhan who in turn has sold the weighing house and phatak ghar to defendant No. 1 and the Engineer's bungalow and two fitters' rooms to defendant No. 2. These defendants were served with notices to quit but none has done so. The plaintiffs ask that it may be held that defendants have no rights whatever to the immoveable property and that they may be given possession and defendants should be ordered to remove the buildings standing on the immoveable property within two months' time.

The first rent-note executed in favour of the shop and Ginning Company is dated the 2nd August 1890. It states inter alia:—"Out of the field within the aforesaid boundaries land to the north of the road containing three mango trees has been given to you on rent for constructing a Ginning Factory and put in your possession from this year The period (in respect of) this field is at my will, or there is no necessity of fixing the period. You may, however, retain possession of this land as long as you like on an annual rent of Rs. 50 after the five years as stipulated above. As the aforesaid land is given to you for a period you like, I will never ask it back."

The following portions of the second rent-note dated 4th July 1905 are relevant:—"Under the rent-note dated 2nd August 1890, executed by my dadi, that is, my father's paternal uncle's wife, named Fundabi wife of Gul Ahmad, and registered as serial No. 972 of 1890 on page 70 of part 78 of book No. 1 (the land) is in your possession for the purpose of your Ginning Factory. That khata-holder died and by orders in Appeal No. 11 of 1904-1905 decided on 27th January 1905 the khata is transferred in my name as heir. Therefore, I have fixed the rent of the field which is given to you Fundabi for constructing a Ginning Factory and is in your possession, at Rs. 120 per annum, and given it to you in order that you may keep it in your possession as long as you please. The aforesaid land is given to you after fixing the rent at Rs. 120 per annum. You should always keep this land in your possession for the use of your Ginning Factory. I will not ask it back."

The case proceeded ex parte against the second defendant. The first defendant who has purchased apparently the whole of the plot hissa is the defendant contesting the defendant. Sheikh Mantoo's ownership over the land was admitted but it was urged that Chotambi is not the sole heir but that one Sheikh Mahbub, uncle of Sheikh Mantoo, is also an heir and that his share in the field was three-fourths. Chotambi could only sell her one-fourth share to the plaintiff's predecessor. The two deeds referred to above were admitted and it was contended that the lease was to terminate at the will of the lessee. It was stated that Maroti Ganesh Company sold the Factory and lease-hold rights to Mojam Khan & Co. on 26th September 1918 and on the next day the latter sold by a registered sale-deed the lease-hold rights and some buildings to defendants who thus stepped into the shoes of Maroti Ganesh Company, the original lessees. The lease was said to be perpetual and the plaintiffs could not claim to eject the defendants.

The following issues were framed:—

(1) Whether Sheikh Mahbub is related to Sheikh Mantoo as alleged? If so what is his share in the property in suit?

(2) Whether the lease dated the 2nd August 1890 was in perpetuity and was to terminate at the will of the lessee?

(3) Whether under the terms of the lease defendants are entitled to retain possession of the land in suit?

(4) Does mere intention on defendants' part to erect a Ginning Factory in future bar plaintiffs' suit?

(5) Is defendant No. 2 in possession of the Engineer's bungalow and Fitter's rooms?

(6) What is the effect of the payment of the lease money by Maroti Ganesh Company defendant No. 1's predecessor-in-title to plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, viz., Waheb Khan?

(7) Whether the buildings on the property in suit were constructed with the express permission or knowledge of the plaintiff's predecessors? If so, does it debar plaintiffs from suing for their removal and the possession of the sites as alleged?

(8) Whether the lease was granted for the specific purpose of erecting a Ginning Factory only and does the removal of the Ginning Factory give the plaintiffs a cause of action?

(9) To what relief is plaintiff entitled?

The findings of the Trial Court may be summarised thus. Sheikh Mahbub was the illegitimate son of Gul Mohammad and had no share in the property in suit. Defendant No. 2 was in possession of the Engineer's bungalow and Fitter's rooms. The field was put in the lessees' possession for erecting and working a Ginning Factory and they were entitled to remain in possession as long as this object was fulfilled. The lease was terminable at the will of the lessor, as soon as the material portion of the contract was broken and as the Factory was dismantled and taken away the lease had come to an end and plaintiffs were entitled to what they asked. These findings have been confirmed in appeal, the lower Appellate Court further stating that the appellants are estopped from denying Sheikh Mantoo's title under section 116 of the Evidence Act.

It is here admitted that Maroti Ganesh is dead and that the firm which ran the Ginning Factory at the time of the lease is gone. But it is argued that the lease shows in clear and unambiguous terms that it was a perpetual lease. It is stated for the appellant that the lease was not a conditional one; it was not essential that the Factory should be erected and kept on the ground; that the purpose for which this lease was given was merely mentioned with the object that the lessor could not object to a permanent structure being built on the site under section 108 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. The case of Ramanadhan v. Zemindar of Ramnad (1) was quoted in this connection. It was further stated that unless the lease contains a distinct stipulation of re-entry the lessor cannot demand it. The rulings quoted by the lower Appellate Court, namely, Vaman Shripad v. Maki (2) and Ramabai Saheb Patwardhan v. Babaji (3) are said to be distinguishable because in the present lease there is a further clause that the lessor could not take back the land. It is also argued that even if there was a condition that there must be a Factory upon the land, then this condition was so vague that no Court would enforce it. It is asked that, suppose the Factory had not been built for four or five years, could the lessor have claimed to get his land back? And it is stated that the present appellant does intend in the future to put up a small Factory.

For the respondents it is argued that whether we look to the first or to the second clause, it is clear that the purpose of granting the lease was the erection of a Ginning Factory and the land could not be diverted to any other purpose except with the owner's consent. Express consent would be required before that happened. The condition on which the land was granted, namely, that for a Factory, was carried out and the Factory was worked for some years. Then the Factory closed and the land was transferred to others who never thought of putting up a Ginning Factory until the suit was filed and defendant said he was going to do so though it has not yet been put up. It is stated that if the land was given for a special purpose and not applied to that purpose the lease automatically lapsed and the lessor would have a right of re-entry and the leasehold rights would come to an end.

It seems to me that the case has been rightly decided. If the first lease of 1890 was a perpetual lease, it is not quite clear why the second lease of 1905 was necessary. The rights of the parties are governed by the second lease and we must confine our attention to its four corners. It seems that the lease was to continue as long as the parties agreed to it and the right seems personal to the lessee. The terms of the second lease show that it was given for the purpose of erecting a Ginning Factory on the land leased. In fact it says so: "You should always keep this land in your possession for the use of your Ginning Factory. I will not take it back." It also states: "given it to you in order that you may keep it in your possession as long as you please." It was an agreement with a particular Company that they should hold the land as long as they liked. There is authority for the proposition that in the case of a perpetual lease it is determined by the death of the lessee: See Vaman Shripad v. Maki (2). The principle enunciated in that case would, it seems to me, equally apply to a case like the present when the Company to whom the land was given for a specified purpose is defunct. I do not think that the lease was a perpetual one in the sense that the lessees could do what they liked with the land and that no diversion of use of the land from the purpose for which the lease was apparently granted would give the lessor a right of re-entry. He had leased his land for a specific purpose and if that condition is broken it seems to me the lessor had the right to claim his land back. That is what has happened here. There is nothing to show that the lease was transferable but the question whether if the Factory had been transferred plaintiff could claim possession does not arise, for as far as the present appellant is concerned the Factory was not transferred to him. The land was given for the purpose of having a Factory on it. It has no Factory now standing on it and it seems to me that plaintiff is entitled to possession.

For the above reasons, I find that the decision of the Courts below is correct and dismiss this appeal with costs. Appellants to pay the respondents' costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage-decree against father—Sons, liability of.

In a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and his sons, the latter are not precluded from questioning a mortgage-decree obtained against their father, so long as the mortgaged property is still in possession of the family and no adverse proprietary rights have sprung up by a sale held in execution of the decree, and the onus is on the mortgagee decree-holder to show that the mortgage was made for payment of an antecedent debt or for a valid family necessity.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 19th August 1922 confirming that of the Additional Sub-Judge, Hardoi, dated the 3rd December 1921.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Niamatulla and Ghulam Hassan for Respondent No. 2.

ORDER.—The plaintiffs are the sons of Raghubar Singh, and seek to impeach certain mortgages effected by the latter in favour of Brindaban, the contesting defendant-respondent. The allegation of the plaintiff was, that their father was extravagant, and addicted to drink and debauchery, and that the mortgages in question were executed for illegal and immoral purposes and for inadequate consideration and without any valid family necessity. The mortgagee, on the other hand, contended that the mortgages were made for the payment of antecedent debts and for legal necessity. He denied that the property mortgaged was ancestral. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the property mortgaged was ancestral property, belonging to a joint family, consisting of the plaintiffs and their father, Raghubar Singh, and that the mortgages in question had not been shown to have been made for the payment of antecedent debts and for family necessity. He, however, dismissed the claim, holding that the plaintiffs were bound by the decree obtained by defendant No. 2 against their father, because they had failed to establish that the loans in question had been taken for illegal or immoral purposes. The learned District Judge on appeal upheld that view.

The main question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the plaintiffs are precluded by force of the decree, obtained by the contesting defendant-respondent against their father, from contesting the validity of the mortgages in question. Those mortgages were made in 1906. A suit for sale was brought by the contesting defendant-respondent on foot thereof against Raghubar Singh; the father of the plaintiffs, and a decree was obtained on the 19th February 1918 without the plaintiffs, who were major at the time, being made parties thereto. There is nothing, in the decree or in the proceedings antecedent thereto, to show, that the suit was filed against Raghubar Singh as a manager of the joint family, or in a representative capacity. The main ground, on which the plaintiffs are sought to be made liable, is that, apart from the question of family necessity or antecedent debt, there was a pious obligation on the plaintiffs to pay the debts due by their father, which had matured into a decree, and that the entire interest of the family could be sold in satisfaction of the decree obtained for the payment of that debt; and in support of that contention reliance is placed on the decisions in Gur Narain v. Gulzari Lal (1) and Sripat Singh Dugar v. Pradyot Kumar Tagore (2).

The authority of the decision in the former case, so far as it lays down that a decree obtained against a Hindu father, upon a mortgage executed by him of joint family property, whether or no there had been a sale of the property in execution of a decree, was binding on his sons, unless they were prepared to show that the debt was contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose or was illusory, is somewhat shaken by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3) where Lord Shaw, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships, explained the circumstances, in which a mortgage of the family property could be enforced against the sons of the mortgagor, and the equities which were imposed as an exception to the general rule for the protection of the rights of third parties, say, the purchasers thereof, who had taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith. His Lordships there observed:—"A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property, and rights have thus sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head." That the rights therein referred to are proprietary, is clear from the reference made by Lord Shaw to the decision in Suraj Bansi Koor v. Shree Persid Singh (4) which lays down, that where joint ancestral property has passed out of the joint family either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt his sons by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts cannot recover that property, unless they show, that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers, if strangers to the suit, had notice that they were so contracted. The mere existence of a decree has not been treated as sufficient to shift the onus unless it has resulted in a sale in execution of the decree and the passing out of the property from the family into the hands of a stranger, who had no notice that the debts represented by the decree had been contracted for immoral purposes. The onus of justifying the transaction by proof of valid family necessity rests on the mortgagee. In fact, a passage from the decision of Sir John Stanley in the case of Chandardeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (5) to which their Lordships of the Privy Council accorded their adhesion was cited to show that the true rule was, that except in cases where joint ancestral property had passed out of the joint family, either under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, and in no others the sons were not under an obligation to show, that the debts, represented by the mortgage, were debts contracted for immoral purposes. A decree unless it is binding on the sons, does not improve the position of the creditor, any more than a sale, which a father effects in order to pay a debt incurred by himself on the security of the mortgaged property. The exception to the general rule, that no manager, guardian or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge cannot be extended, where a liability under a mortgage merges into a decree, unless that decree can by any rule of law be held to be binding on the other members of the family, if a mortgage is not valid in so far as it purports to encumber the joint family property, it cannot become a just and legal consideration, if, in the absence of the sons of the mortgagor, a decree has been obtained on foot thereof against the mortgagor; otherwise the protection intended for the junior members of the family can in that way be easily circumvented and become illusory.

The decision in Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (2) deals with a set of circumstances similar to those above described. There a sale of certain family property had been effected in execution of decrees against the father without the sons having been made the parties thereto, but the order and notices provided for the sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, after a contest had been entered into by the sons, and it was found established, that the intention was to sell the whole property over which the father had a disposing power. The decrees were those obtained for the recovery of the simple money-debts which were not shown to have been taken for immoral or illegal purposes.

A sale followed and the only question for consideration was whether it effected to convey the rights of the father alone or the entire interest over which he had a disposing power including that of his sons. A decree for sale obtained in enforcement of a mortgage does not, however, stand on the same footing. If the mortgage is invalid as against the interest claimed by the sons, it cannot be valid qua the interest of the father in the mortgaged property. A son can prevent his father from making a mortgage of the family property without valid necessity but he cannot prevent him from borrowing money irrespective of the credit obtainable on the security of the family property for his own purposes or otherwise. He can interfere against the enforcement of the mortgage in the same way as he can interfere with the sale of the family property in execution of decree for money obtained against his father but he cannot prevent a decree being passed against the father for the money borrowed by him irrespective of the security afforded by the family property. The decisions in Kalyan Singh v. Dharam Singh (6) and Basdeo Lal v. Mahabir (7) do not apply, because in the former case the decree was a simple money decree and in the latter case the decree was one for foreclosure, by virtue of which the property had passed out of the family and adverse right had thus sprung up which could not have been displaced except by showing, that the debt represented by the decree was not one for which the sons could have been made liable. The decision in Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (8) also does not apply, because in that case too, the property in dispute had passed out of the family by virtue of a sale held in execution of a decree.

As observed by Lord Shaw in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3), "the joint family estate in the hands of a father, acting as the manager of the family, is in the position; under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it, nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve, and this, in other words, would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain and, it might be, a deliberate breach of trust." The obtaining of a decree on foot of a mortgage, if invalid against the father, makes no real difference, so long as no adverse proprietary rights have sprung up with regard to the joint family property, for the protection of which the exceptions have been imposed.

The learned Counsel for the contesting defendant-respondents states, that no evidence was produced by him, because as his Counsel stated in the Trial Court, the onus had been placed by that Court on the plaintiffs. As the property is still in the possession of the family, and no sale has taken

The lower Appellate Court is, therefore, directed to determine after taking such relevant evidence as the parties may adduce:—

Mr. N. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff alleged that 115 acres of land was his raiya kasht; that one of the co-sharer landlords in execution of a money decree against him sold 56 acres which was purchased by the defendant on the 22nd January 1915; that thereafter by agreement between the parties they cultivated the entire plot in alternate years. A dispute arose which led to a case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code as a result of which the defendant came into possession of the whole land. The plaintiff, therefore, sued for a declaration of his title to 59 acres and for partition and separate possession with mesne profits. The defence was that Rs. 150 was due to the defendant from the plaintiff and as the plaintiff could not arrange for payment of the money, in lieu thereof he gave 115 acres to the defendant who had been in possession of the entire plot as an absolute owner in lieu of that sum since the month of Jeth 1321. The plaintiff said that he would execute a deed of sale on the decision of the dispute between him and the landlord. Thereafter, the defendant, in order to protect his purchased property, bought 56 acres out of the said 115 acres at execution sale. But the entire plot has been in his possession in lieu of Rs. 150 by verbal purchase and 56 acres has been purchased at auction-sale and even after the auction-sale the remaining 59 acres has been in possession of the defendant in lieu of Rs. 150 by verbal purchase. After the purchase at the auction-sale it was settled between the parties that out of Rs. 150 the plaintiff would execute a deed of sale in respect of the remaining 59 acres for Rs. 100 and would return the balance of Rs. 50, but he had not performed his agreement. The Munsif held that the defence was true and that the defendant was put into possession of the entire Survey Khata No. 959 because the sum of Rs. 150 was due to him from the plaintiff on account of grain. But, although he accepted the testimony of the defendant and his witness, he found in view of the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act that there had been no valid transfer of the land in suit because there was no registered document and he gave the plaintiff a decree for partition with mesne profits. The learned Subordinate Judge took the same view of the facts and of the law and dismissed the appeal. The defendant has now brought this second appeal.

The contention on his behalf is that this was not a verbal sale but a contract for sale; that the defendant has paid the consideration and has obtained possession and, therefore, the vendor, who is in a fiduciary relation, cannot oust him simply because he has failed to execute his part of the contract. It is pointed out that the defendant could sue for specific performance of the agreement. In reply, it is contended that this was not the defence but a verbal purchase of 56 acres in consideration Rs. 100 was pleaded; that even if it was an agreement for sale it created no interest in the land and the title is still in the plaintiff who can sue in ejectment; and, further, that even if the doctrine of part performance is accepted, the facts preclude its application in the present case because it is admitted that the agreement was subsequent to the auction-purchase and the defendant had been in possession from before the auction-purchase and he is, therefore, unable to show any act unequivocally referable to the agreement. It seems to me to be immaterial whether the transaction is described as sale by parol or an agreement for sale. If the sale cannot take effect as a sale for want of formality, it would have the effect of an agreement for sale with its consequences in equity. Now, the question is whether as a result of the agreement for sale of the entire plot in consideration of an advance already made, followed by possession, the defendant obtained a good title in equity to the land in suit. If he did, then the subsequent auction purchase of a portion of the land the later agreement, the effect of which in substance was that the plaintiff should re-pay Rs. 50 to the defendant would not affect that title. The question in this suit is not as to the legal consequences, if any, of the later agreement, and the findings of fact of the Courts below relate to the original contract. The plaintiff relies on section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act which enacts that a contract for sale of immoveable property does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property. Now the effect of this section has been considered in a number of cases: Bapu Apaji Potdar v. Kashinath Sadoba Gulmire (1), Venkatesh Damodar Mokashi v. Mallappa Bhimappa Chikkalki (2), Puchha Lal v. Kunj Behary Lal (3). In Jnan Chandra Das v. Rajani Kanta Pal (4) it was held that the view taken in the last mentioned decision was not overruled by the Privy Council in Maung Shwe Goh v. Maung Inn (5). The contrary view was taken in Lalchand v. Lakshman (6) and by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (7). In this state of the authorities this Court will follow the decisions of the Calcutta High Court where the equitable doctrine of part performance has been clearly recognised. That the facts come within the doctrine is clear. There was payment of money by the defendant to the plaintiff, or what comes to the same thing, an acknowledgment of a debt owed by the plaintiff to the defendant, in lieu of which the possession of land was transferred under an agreement for sale. This satisfies the test laid down by Grant, Master of the Rolls, in Fram v. Dawson (8) that the act must be an act, unequivocally referring to, and resulting from, the agreement, and such that the party would suffer an injury amounting to fraud, by the refusal to execute that agreement. His Lordship observed "the principle of the cases is, that the act must be of such a nature, that, if stated, it would of itself infer the existence of some agreement; and then parol evidence is admitted; to show, what the agreement is." In view of these principles, I hold that the defendant has a good title to the land in suit and the appeal must be decreed with costs and the decrees of the Courts below set aside and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Notice to the judgment-debtor is not prescribed by law before making a decree final on the application of the decree-holder, but in practice it is given on the principle that it is just and proper to hear the opposite party. [p. 32, col. 2; p. 33, col. 1.]

Where a notice of an application by a decree-holder to make his decree final is duly served on the judgment-debtor but he fails to appear to show cause on the date fixed for the hearing, it may be reasonably inferred that he has nothing to say in answer to the application. Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed against the defendant-appellant Babooji on the 9th April 1920. An application for a final decree was made by the plaintiffs on the 15th January 1921. Notice of this application was served on Babooji on the 25th February 1921. On the 9th March 1921 the date fixed for hearing this application both parties were absent and the application was dismissed. On the 21st April 1921 a second application for a final decree was made. Notice of this application was affixed to Babooji's house on the 14th July 1921. The Mazkuri's report states that as Babooji was found on enquiry to have gone to Pandharpur the notice was affixed to his house. An ex parte final decree was then passed against Babooji. Babooji applied to have the ex parte final decree set aside on the ground that notice of neither application was served on him. The lower Court has held that, as notice of the first application was duly served, notice of the second application was not necessary. It has refused to set aside the ex parte decree. Babooji appeals.

I agree with the lower Court in holding that notice of the first application fixed for hearing on the 19th March 1921 was duly served on the defendant-appellant, Babooji. The endorsement on the notice and the evidence of P. W. No. 1 sufficiently proves this. The appellant refused to sign the acknowledgment and the notice was, therefore, affixed to his house. This application was, however, dismissed in default as neither party was present. The service of notice of the second application does not appear to have been in accordance with the provision of the Civil Procedure Code for though a copy of the notice was affixed to the appellant's house on the ground that he was absent from the village it seems that no due or reasonable diligence was used to find him.

Notice to the judgment-debtor is not prescribed by law before making a decree final on the application of the decree-holder but in practice it is given on the principle that it is just and proper to hear the opposite party. In the present case the principle audi alteram partem did not, in my opinion, require a notice of the second application. Notice of the first application was duly served and the appellant failed to appear to show cause on the day fixed for hearing. It may, therefore, be reasonably inferred that he had nothing to say and there was nothing for the Court to hear from him. A second notice under such circumstances was not required. I do not, therefore, think that the fact that the second notice was not duly served is a ground for setting aside the ex parte decree.

The order of the lower Court refusing to set aside the decree is correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Pleadings fee Rs. 30.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 48, 49—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 35 (ii)—Suit to recover compensation for trees wrongfully cut and removed—Small Cause Court, jurisdiction of—Limitation.

Defendant sold certain standing trees to the plaintiff which were to be cut and removed by the latter. Subsequently, the defendant sold the land to a third person, who sold the trees which were cut and removed by the purchasers. Plaintiff sued to recover the trees or compensation for them.

Held, (1) that the suit fell within the purview of Art. 35 (ii) of Schedule II, to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and was, therefore, not cognisable by a Court of Small Causes;

(2) that the suit was governed by Art. 48 or Art. 49 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and that limitation began to run from the date on which the trees were cut and misappropriated.

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th January 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Karnal, dated the 4th February 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The principal defendant sold standing trees to plaintiff by registered deed for Rs. 200 and the covenant was that plaintiff should be at liberty to cut them and remove the timber within one year.

This sale was in 1915 but plaintiff did not cut within the year. Meanwhile, the land had been sold and was pre-empted and the pre-emptor sold the trees to third persons on 12th July 1917. These persons cut the trees and the plaintiff in 1920 sued for possession of the timber, or Rs. 400.

The lower Appellate Court has held the suit to be barred by time and has dismissed it applying Art. 62 of the Limitation Act.

The suit was for recovery of the timber or for compensation, and the act complained of is said to have been wrongful, so that Art. 48 or 49 applied, and the suit, if brought within 3 years of the cutting and misappropriation of the trees, was within time.

The sale was a sale of standing trees which were to be cut and converted into timber. This was a sale of moveable property.

The plaintiff, however, has produced evidence that his servants were prevented from cutting the trees four years before suit, so that the suit was too late, if Art. 48 or 49 apply.

I think Art. 48 or Art. 49 does apply for plaintiff does allege a transfer to him, then a wrongful transfer to third parties and he prays for delivery of the timber or compensation. The suit appears to be time-barred.

As it falls under Art. 35 (ii), of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, as amended by Act VI of 1914, it was excluded from the cognisance of a Court of Small Causes, and the appeal lay to the District Court.

On the merits, too, plaintiff has not much to complain about, his timber occupied the land for several years, and it might well be

A review proceeding ordinarily commences with an ex parte application. The Court may then, either reject the application at once, or may grant a Rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted. In the second stage, the Rule may be either admitted or rejected and it is obvious that the hearing of this Rule may involve to some extent an investigation into the merits. If the Rule is discharged, then the case ends. If, on the other hand, the Rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached; the case is re-heard on the merits and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it. Though in one aspect the result is the same whether the Rule be discharged or on the re-hearing the original decree be repeated, in law there is a material difference, for, in the latter case, the whole matter having been re-opened, there is a fresh decree; in the former case the parties are relegated to and still rest on the old decree. Consequently, the order appropriate to a discharge of the Rule is the rejection of the application, an order so made terminates the second stage of the proceedings and there is no third stage for the re-hearing of the case. [p. 37, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nadia, reversing the decree of the Revenue Officer, Krishnagar, dated the 14th December 1916.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Baranasi Basi Mukerjee), for the Appellants:—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question is, whether a tenure which has been sub-divided, upon proof of payment of uniform rent for 20 years, the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would arise. But there is an initial difficulty in the present appeal, which is this. After the judgment of the Special Judge we applied for a review. Then we filed the present appeal. Meanwhile, the review application was granted and the original judgment was modified to the extent of the assessment of rent. A new decree has since been drawn up.

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar (with him Babu Amarendra Nath Bose), for the Respondent:—I submit that as soon as the application for review was granted the decree was vacated. The decree passed on review would be a new decree even though the original decree may be modified as to a portion. In this case the whole appeal was reviewed. See Birjbasi Lal v. Salig Ram (1) and Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Prasad (2).

[MOOKERJEE, J.—If an appeal is re-opened in part does that mean that the entire appeal is re-opened?]

Not necessarily. That is also contemplated by the Legislature.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Would there then be two decrees?]

The decree on review would be final and appealable. There would be two decrees if they are separable. In this particular case, the whole case was re-opened. Therefore, I would contend that the present appeal is infructuous.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy in reply:—There was no proper re-hearing at all. On my presenting the application, notice was served on the other side. He did not say that the application was granted. On the other side appearing the application was heard and the judgment was reserved. Then followed the judgment. The Judge did not follow the proper procedure. I submit without granting my application for review the previous decree was not vacated. He has made a decree which being without jurisdiction is a nullity. I would ask permission to file an appeal from the decree on review. The new decree was signed on 25th April 1919. The present appeal was admitted under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code, on 8th May 1919.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the tenants-defendants in a proceeding instituted by the landlords-respondents under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands in their possession.

An objection has been taken by the respondents on the ground that the appeal has become infructuous, as the decree which is assailed has been vacated by the lower Appellate Court as the result of an application for review of judgment presented by the tenants. It appears that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was pronounced on the 6th May 1918. On the 18th July 1918 the tenants made an application for review of judgment. The Court thereupon directed notice to be served on the landlords as required by O. XLVI, r. (2) (a), Civil Procedure Code. On the 14th November 1918, during the pendency of the application for review of judgment, the tenants lodged in this Court the appeal now before us, which is directed against the decree of the lower Appellate Court made in pursuance of the judgment of the 6th May 1918. The application for review was heard by the lower Appellate Court, in the presence of the tenants and landlords, on the 2nd April 1919, and judgment was reserved. On the 5th April 1919, the review was granted in part and the decree originally made was modified. A new decree was then drawn up and was signed by the Judge on the 20th April 1919. The appeal lodged in this Court, which had been adjourned from time to time, was thereafter heard under

O. XLI, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code on the 8th May 1919 and notices were directed to issue on the landlords-respondents. The appeal has now been placed before us for final disposal. The respondents urged that, in these circumstances, the decree made by the lower Appellate Court on the basis of the judgment of the 6th May 1918 must be deemed to have been vacated when the application for review was granted on the 5th April 1919 and that the appeal has consequently become abortive. In support of this position reliance has been placed upon the decisions in Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Prasad (2) and Birjbasi Lal v. Salig Ram (1).

The procedure adopted in the lower Appellate Court seems to indicate that the various stages through which an application for review may pass was, perhaps, not clearly appreciated. The matter commences, ordinarily, as is clear from O. XLVII of the Civil Procedure Code, with an ex parte application. The Court then may either reject the application at once or may grant a Rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted. In the second stage, the Rule may either be admitted or rejected, and it is obvious that the hearing of this Rule may involve to some extent an investigation into the merits. If the Rule is discharged, then the case ends. If, on the other hand, the Rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached; the case is re-heard on the merits and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it. Though, in one aspect, the result is the same, whether the Rule be discharged or on the re-hearing the original decree be repeated, in law there is a material difference, for, in the latter case, the whole matter having been re-opened, there is a fresh decree; in the former case, the parties are relegated to and still rest on the old decree. Consequently, the order appropriate to a discharge of the Rule is the rejection of the application; an order so made terminates the second stage of the proceedings, and there is no third stage for the re-hearing of the case. This analysis of the successive stages of a proceeding for review of judgment, which was given by Sir Law: rence Jenkins, C. J. in Vadilal v. Fulchand (3) and was adopted by Sir Henry Richards, C. J., in Nanhe v. Mangat Rai (4) is of fundamental importance. The failure to recognise the distinction between the second and third stages has, as appears from the cases in the books, led to the embarrassment of litigants in many instances. This has happened specially in the class of cases contemplated in O. XLVII, r. 5, where an application for review is presented in respect of a decree made by two Judges; if one of them is absent from the Court, the remaining Judge may deal with the matter in the first two stages but not in the third. An illustration is afforded by the case of Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan (5). There an appeal from appellate decree was heard in the first instance by Mitra and Carnduff, J.J. After the retirement of Mitra, J., the respondent who had been unsuccessful, applied for review of judgment. This application was heard by Carnduff, J., alone, who directed a Rule to issue. The Rule was heard and made absolute, and the review was admitted. Carnduff, J., then proceeded to re-hear the appeal and repeated the decision he had previously passed in concurrence with Mitra, J. The respondent preferred an appeal against the decision of Carnduff, J., and urged that he had no jurisdiction to re-hear the appeal, that as soon as the review was admitted, the original decree was in law vacated, and that thereupon the appeal stood revived, to be heard only by the Division Bench authorised to deal with that description of cases by the Chief Justice. This contention was upheld by Jenkins, C. J., and the restored appeal was re-heard by a Special Bench constituted for the purpose. The error thus rectified had its parallel in the cases of Arayalpurath v. Cheekiladen Ahmad (6) and Gour Sundar Bhoumik v. Rakhal Raj Bhoumik (7), but was avoided in Maksud Mahi v. Secretary of State (8).

GOUR KRISHNA SIRCAR v. NILMADHAB SAEA.

These decisions are authorities for the proposition that, when the application for review is granted, the decree previously made is vacated. We are not now concerned with the question whether when the application for review is granted the decree is vacated in its entirety or only in part. The decisions in Bhubaneshwari Koer v. Ajo-dhya Singh (9), Sadar-ud-din v. Ekram-ud-din (10), Janaki Nath v. Prabhasini Dasi (11) and Gour Sundar Bhoumik v. Rakhal Raj Bhoumik (7) indicate that the Court is competent to determine whether when a review is granted, the case should be re-opened in part or in its entirety, and that the view cannot be supported on principle that whenever an application for review is granted, the entire case must of necessity be re-opened and re-considered. When, however, on the grant of an application for review, no reservation is made, it may fairly be assumed that the entire case is intended to be re-opened.

The principle recognised in these cases justifies the view adopted by Sir John Stanley, C. J., in Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Prasad (2), that when an application for review has been granted, the original decree ceases to exist, with the consequence that an appeal preferred against that decree can no longer be prosecuted. This view is identical with that adopted by Sir John Edge, C. J. in Kuar Sen v. Ganga Ram (12) and was subsequently approved in Birj-basi Lal v. Salig Ram (1) and Chenna Reddi v. Pedda Obi Reddi (13). It was pointed out in Pyari Mohan Kundu v. Kalu Khan (14), where reference is made to the decision of the Full Bench in Bhurrut Chunder Mojoomdar v. Ram Gunga Sein (15), that if a review be applied for in proper time and before an appeal has been preferred, the Judge is not prevented from proceeding upon the application for review by the subsequent presentation of an appeal. That power exists so long as the appeal is not heard, because once the appeal is heard the decree on appeal is the final decree in the case, and the application for review of judgment of the Court of first instance can no longer be prosecuted. On the other hand, if the application for review is successful and the judgment is vacated the appeal directed against that judgment can no longer proceed. When a final decree is made after the review has been admitted, that decree is, however, liable to be challenged in accordance with law.

What then is the position of the parties tested in the light of these principles? An application for review was presented to the Judge. The application was not summarily rejected, but notice was ordered to issue upon the opposite party. The application was then heard and the review granted, though no separate order appears to have been recorded at this stage. The Court forthwith proceeded to re-consider the case on the merits and reserved judgment. The judgment subsequently delivered states at the outset that the review had been granted on the ground (1) that in calculating the rent payable by the tenure-holder, no allowance had been made for profits and cost of collection as required by section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and (2) that the enhancement, which had worked out to about seven times the original rental was not fair and equitable. The Judge next proceeds to discuss these points which are decided in favour of the tenants. He then deals with the contention that the rent was not enhanceable at all, as by virtue of the presumption embodied in section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the tenure must be deemed to have existed from before the time of the Permanent Settlement. He overrules this contention and then makes an order for "modification of the decrees as noted above." A decree was in pursuance of this order drawn up in modification of the decree previously made.

Three points now require to be emphasised. In the first place, when the Judge decided to grant the application for review, he should have recorded an order to that effect, and a note thereof should have been made in the register under O. XLVII, r. 8.; the order should have stated clearly whether the decree was vacated in its entirety or not. In the second place, the decree in the present case must have been set aside in its entirety, though the judgment states that the review was granted on two specified grounds. There were two points in controversy, namely, first, whether the rent of the tenure was enhanceable and secondly, if enhanceable, how should fair and equitable rent be assessed. Though the ground for granting the review as specified in the judgment, relates only to the second of these points, it is clear that the first question also was re-investigated. Such re-consideration would be permissible only if the original decision had been vacated in its entirety. In the third place, the judgment concludes with an order for modification of the decree, and this language is reproduced in the decree subsequently drawn up. But, plainly, there was no decree to modify. The original decree had ceased to exist as the result of the decision of the Judge to grant the application for review. The appeal was, in fact, restored and re-opened, and if the Judge arrived at a conclusion different from what he had reached at the original hearing, the decree made was a new decree. Indeed, as pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Vadial v. Fulchand (3), even if the Judge had adhered to his former opinion, the final decree after review would have been a new decree. We are consequently of opinion that the decree made by the lower Appellate Court on the basis of the judgment dated the 6th May 1918 was vacated when the application for review was granted on the 2nd April 1919, and that the decree prepared on the 29th April 1919 pursuant to the judgment delivered on the 5th April 1919 was a new decree. The appeal now before us has thus become infructuous and must be dismissed with costs on that ground. The hearing fee will be assessed at one gold mohur.

A report made to the Chairman by members of a Sub-Committee of a Municipality in discharge of their duty and on a subject in which they are interested as members, is privileged and no action for damages for defamation would lie unless malice was proved against the members.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, East Berar, dated the 30th August 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 86 of 1921.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. R. Jaiwant, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defamatory statements complained of are contained in Exhibit D-12, a report made by the defendants to the Chairman of the Water Works Sub-Committee, of which they were members. The lower Appellate Court has found that the statements made in this report are substantially true and that they were made in discharge of the defendants' duty and on a privileged occasion.

It is first urged that it was not sufficient for the lower Appellate Court to find that the report was substantially true. It is pointed out that it contains defamatory statement; attributing misconduct to the plaintiff on four separate occasions. The first of these is a threat at 8 p. m. on the day of the report to Ramavatar to compel him to open the pipe. I do not think that the report can be interpreted to mean that the threat was given just before the opening of the pipe at 8 p. m. The threat may be one given long before. The next statement is that before the date of the report the appellant habitually threatened the line coolie and compelled him through fear to open the line connection to his house. The lower Appellate Court has accepted the evidence of D. Ws. Nos. 15, 16 and 17 and their evidence proves, as it has found, that threats were used by the appellant towards the Municipal employees. The third and fourth statements are said to be contained in paragraph 3 of the report and to refer to threats given on two other distinct occasions, but I think they are no more than repetition of the statement about the threats generally. The report contains substantially one statement that the appellant used by threatening Municipal servants to get water at times other than those sanctioned by the Municipality and this statement has been found to be true. The defendants were members of the Water Works Committee and were interested in the regulation of the water supply, and their report, which was addressed to the Chairman of the Water Works Committee, was privileged. It does not matter that only one of them was in charge of the section of the city in which the plaintiff's house is situated for the purpose of supervising the distribution of the water. The statement is both justified and privileged, and no malice is proved. No action for damages, therefore, lies. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Obiter.—In the case of a reference to arbitration by members of a joint Hindu family for partition of family property, the arbitrators have an authority to determine anything incidental or consequential to the mode in which the partition is to be effected and the rights of the female members of the family cannot be disregarded.

Shyam Lal v. Parshottam Dass, 58 Ind. Cas. 585; 42 A. 277; 18 A. L. J. 241; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 104, referred to.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated 20th June 1923.

Messrs. Gokaran Nath Misra and K. P. Misra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order refusing to file an award made on a private reference to arbitration. It appears that Dulichand was possessed of certain landed property, a house and shops. He left three sons, Mool Chand, Bansidhar and Murlidhar. He also left a widow, Musammāt Ganesha, who is their mother, and a widowed daughter, Musammāt Champa. Musammāt Champa is deaf and has been dependent on her brothers for her livelihood, owing to her having lost her husband at an early age. By a family arrangement Musammāt Ganesha and Musammāt Champa were allowed to hold certain shops yielding a rental of Rs. 120 per year as a provision for their maintenance. Bansidhar died leaving a son, Parmeshri Dayal.

On the 16th October 1922, Mool Chand, Parmeshri Dayal and Murlidhar appointed three persons as arbitrators to divide the family property. In the agreement of reference there was no provision empowering the arbitrators to provide for the maintenance of Musammāt Ganesha and Musammāt Champa; but during the course of the arbitration proceeding, Musammāt Ganesha appeared and stated that the rent yielded by the shops was not sufficient for her maintenance and that of her widowed daughter Musammāt Champa, that for the preceding four months, no rent had been realized from the shops and that as she did not trust that her sons or grandsons would do anything to maintain them the partition of the property should be stayed. The arbitrators thereupon asked Mool Chand, Parmeshri Dayal and Murlidhar what they had to say in the matter. These persons replied that they would agree to anything which the arbitrators might decide about the same. The arbitrators divided the property in dispute between the three branches of the family, and with regard to the objection of Musammāt Ganesha they decided that Musammāt Ganesha and Musammāt Champa shall be allowed to hold certain groves and plots situated in the villages Gunga Rampur and Shiampur and three shops situated in the village Bhagwant Nagar for their maintenance; but the three branches aforesaid shall occupy the same as tenants on their behalf so long as they were alive, and pay them a rental of Rs. 90 per year for the groves and plots, and Rs. 30 per year for the shops aforesaid. The arbitrators mentioned that they had made that arrangement with the consent of the parties to the reference. In fact, all of them had signed the award in token thereof.

On an application being made by Murlidhar to file the award and have a decree passed in accordance therewith, an objection was made by the other parties that the provision made by the arbitrators for the maintenance of Musammāt Ganesha and Musammāt Champa was ultra vires. The Court below accepted that contention and refused to file the award.

The proceedings of the arbitrators show, that they had been empowered to determine the objection filed by Musammāt Ganesha in such a manner as they thought proper. Even if the parties had not said so, the arbitrators had full authority in a reference of that character to make a provision for the maintenance of such members of the family as were entitled to a share or partition or to maintenance. A female member of a joint Hindu family has no right to claim a partition; but if she happens to be a mother and a partition is made at the instance of one of her sons, she is entitled to a share equal to that of each of her sons as a necessary corollary to such a partition. In the present case, the parties accepted the arrangement by which certain groves, land and shops were awarded to Musammāt

GAYANI SAHU v. BALCHAND SAHU.

Ganesha and Musammat Champa in lieu of the one-fourth share to which the former was entitled and agreed to hold the same as tenants for the lifetime of Musammat Ganesha and Musammat Champa and to pay rent therefor at the rate of Rs. 120 per year.

Mool Chand is present and states that he is willing to accept the award and has no objection to a decree being passed in accordance therewith. Parmeshari Dayal is also present. He describes himself as nineteen years old. His objection is that no provision ought to have been made by the arbitrators for the maintenance of Musammat Ganesha and Musammat Champa, but he admits having signed the award and consented to the same when it was made. His objection is obviously an afterthought and entitled to no weight. As observed in Shyam Lal v. Parshottam Dass (1), if the arbitrators have an authority to make a partition, they have an authority to determine everything incidental or consequential with reference to the mode in which the partition is to be effected and the rights of the female members of the family cannot be disregarded. A provision for the maintenance of Musammat Ganesha and Musammat Champa was made with the consent of the parties, and it is not open to them to resile from the arrangement to which they had agreed when the award was made.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, and the decree of the Court below set aside, the result being that the award will be filed and a decree passed in accordance therewith. The plaintiff-appellant will get his cost here and hitherto from the defendant-respondents.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by defendant first party against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur reversing so much of the decree of the Munsif of Motihari as dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs against the defendant No. 1. The suit as first framed was a suit for a declaration of plaintiff's title to certain plots of land in Khata No. 153 of the Record of Rights of Mauza Patora. One Gudari Sahu had three sons and one daughter. The plaintiffs represent two of the sons, the defendant second party the third sons, and defendant first party is the daughter's son. The plaintiffs alleged that the land in suit was the joint property of themselves and defendant second party and had been wrongly recorded in the Record of Rights as being in possession of defendant No. 1 who had no concern with it. A Criminal case about one of the plots having been decided against the plaintiffs, they brought the suit for a declaration that the defendant first party had no connection with the land in suit which belonged to the plaintiffs and defendant second party and that the entry in the Record of Rights was wrong. The defence of defendant No. 1 was that the suit was barred by 12 years' limitation as the plaintiffs had not been in possession for more than several 12 years. It was also barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and by estoppel. The land had been given to defendant first party by his maternal uncles after the death, and by the direction of his maternal grandfather Gudari Sahu about 20 years ago. Fifteen or 16 years ago he had separated from the others. Tawan was paid separately to the Motihari Concern for this land by the defendant No. 1 and he was separately recorded for it by the landlord and he had in any case acquired title by 12 years' adverse possession. To meet the objection about section 42 of the Specific Relief Act the plaint was amended and the plaintiffs prayed for recovery of possession. The Record of Rights showed Khata No. 153 as part of the joint holding of plaintiffs and defendant second party but in possession of defendant No. 1. The Munsif on a consideration of the evidence held that this entry was correct and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove possession within 12 years and dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge came to no decision as to possession. He held that the gift alleged by the defendant was invalid for want of a registered document and for want of evidence of consent of all the members of the family. If, therefore, the defendant was in possession, his possession in the absence of a gift must be held to be permissive and on this ground he decreed the suit. In this view the learned Subordinate Judge was clearly wrong. It is nowhere pleaded by the plaintiffs that the defendant's possession was permissive, it was simply denied. At the time of the amendment of the plaint by the addition of the prayer for recovery of possession, no amendment of the body of the plaint seems to have been made and there is no allegation of possession by defendant No. 1 except possibly as to Plot No. 445. Permissive possession is not the case of either party and, so far as can be seen from the judgment, there was no evidence of it. One of the plaintiff's witnesses seemed to support the story of gift as found by the Munsif. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, not entitled to decree the suit on a purely hypothetical explanation of the defendant's possession. Thus, in Shivabasava v. Sangappa (1), the Judicial Committee held that where the Court disposed of a suit on a case not raised by the parties and to which evidence had not been directed, there was a substantial error or defect of procedure. Moreover, when the defendant failed to prove the gift the conclusion to be drawn was not that his possession was permissive but that it was that of trespasser—Sambu Hanmanta Kobal v. Nama Narayan Nalkde (2). The result of this error is that the Subordinate Judge has not properly considered whether the defence evidence amounts to proof of title by adverse possession. A further consequence is that he has not considered at all whether the plaintiffs have proved possession within 12 years as they were clearly bound to do, the suit being a suit for recovery of possession and governed by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act.

In my opinion, therefore, there has been no proper trial of this appeal. The present appeal is decreed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the appeal remanded for re-hearing. Costs will abide the result.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 5, 7 (iv)
(c)—Suit for declaration and confirmation of possession, nature of—Consequential relief—Valuation—Court-fees—Taxing Officer, decision of—High Court, whether can interfere.

In a suit falling under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act it is not open to the plaintiff to put an arbitrary and incorrect valuation on the relief sought. In such a case the valuation for the purposes of Court-fees must, in the first instance, be made by the plaintiff but is finally determinable by the Court. The valuation must be fixed with reference to the value of the subject-matter of the relief, that is to say, the money value of the loss which the plaintiff apprehends. [p. 46, cols. 1 & 2.] (Case-law discussed.)

A prayer for confirmation of possession includes a prayer for recovery of possession if the Court thinks the plaintiff is out of possession and amounts to consequential relief within the meaning of section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act. [p. 44, col. 2.]

Bohuroonissa Bibee v. Kuweemoonissa Khatoon, 19 W. R. 18, Jhumak Karti v. Debu Lal Singh, 16 Ind. Cas. 898; 22 C. L. J. 415, Dina Nath Das v. Rama Nath Das, 34 Ind. Cas. 702; 23 C. L. J. 561, followed.

A suit for declaration and confirmation of possession must, therefore, be valued for purposes of Court-fees according to the value of the land in dispute. [p. 46, col. 2.]

Under section 5 of the Court-Fees Act the Taxing Officer has jurisdiction to fix the amount of fee payable, and if he decides that the valuation put by the appellant on the relief sought is incorrect he has jurisdiction to correct it. His decision as to the amount of fee payable is final, and the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with it, even if he has done something which the law does not allow him to do. Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. Atul Krishna Ray, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The plaintiffs allege that they held under the proprietor defendants Nos. 4 to 18 a holding of 11 bighas 3 kathas, which, by private partition, has been split up into three sets of parcels, Survey plots Nos. 253 and 72 being allotted to defendants Nos. 4 to 14, survey plots Nos. 253-1136 and 263 to defendants Nos. 15 to 17 and plot No. 177 to defendant No. 18. The rent of plot No. 253 is shown in the Record of Rights as Rs. 4-2-0, whereas the plaintiffs state that it is Rs. 1-13-6 and plot No. 712 is shown as kabil lagan whereas the plaintiff states that it is part and parcel of plot No. 253.

The plaintiffs also allege that the defendants have conspired together and got the name of defendant No. 1 entered as a raiya of the entire 11 bighas 3 kathas, although he has no interest in the same. The plaintiffs accordingly pray for a declaration that the Record of Rights is wrong. In regard to possession they state that the defendants are resisting their possession and they, therefore, ask for confirmation of possession.

In the Court of the Munsif the land was valued at Rs. 100 evidently for the purpose of jurisdiction and a fee of Rs. 10 was paid upon the plaint upon the footing that the suit was for a declaration only. The Munsif dismissed the suit and the same amount of Court-fee was paid by the plaintiffs on their appeal to the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge having decreed the suit, the defendants have preferred the present second appeal and have paid the same Court-fee as the plaintiffs did in the Courts below.

The Stamp Reporter, however, found that the market-value of the land affected was Rs. 1,239-10-6 and that an ad valorem fee was payable thereon, and as the appellants had paid Rs. 10 he claimed a deficit of Rs. 80. There being a difference of opinion between the Stamp Reporter and the appellants, the case was referred to the Taxing Officer who has affirmed the view of the Stamp Reporter and called upon the appellants to pay the deficit. As the appellants have refused to do so, the case has been sent up to this Bench in order that final orders may be passed on the appeal.

Now, the first question to be decided is, whether the Taxing Officer's decision as to the amount of the Court-fee due on the memorandum of appeal is final. Section

RAMSEKHAR PRASAD SINGH v. SHEONANDAN DUBEY.

5 of the Court Fees Act would seem to conclude the matter, but the learned Vakil for the appellants before us contends that as the case comes under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Act, the appellants are entitled to value the relief at their own figure, that in declining to accept their valuation the Taxing Officer has exceeded his jurisdiction, and that his decision can, therefore, be revised by the Court.

Now, it seems to me that the wording of section 5 is so explicit and general that it leaves the Court no option. The Taxing Officer has jurisdiction to fix the amount of fee payable and if he decides that the valuation put by the appellants upon the relief was incorrect he has the power to correct it. Even if he has done anything which the law does not allow him to do, the Court Fees Act gives the High Court no jurisdiction to interfere with his decision as to the amount of the fee.

This view is also completely covered by authority. In Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tewari (1), it was held that a decision under section 5 of the Court-Fees Act is not open to appeal, revision or review and is final for all purposes and that no means have been provided or suggested by the Legislature for questioning it. In Karan Singh v. Gopal Rai (2), it was held that the decision of a Taxing Officer as to the category within which a suit falls for the purpose of ascertaining the proper amount of Court-fees payable on a memorandum of appeal, as also his decision as to the amount of fee is final and binding upon the Court under section 5 of the Court Fees Act and that the Court cannot go behind the order of the Taxing Officer to examine the method which he adopted to arrive at his decision. This Court also has uniformly adopted this view of section 5 and I think it is too late for the appellants to attack the Taxing Officer's decision on the ground that he has illegally assumed jurisdiction. See Lagan Barat Kuar v. Khakhān Singh (3) and Chanderbati Kuer v. Gorey Lal Singh (4).

Then it is contended that the Taxing Officer has jurisdiction only to deal with fees payable under Chapter II and that as the fee now demanded is one payable under Schedule I of the Act, it is not a fee in respect of which his decision is final. The reply to this is that Schedule I is merely supplementary to section 7; it is a table provided for ready reckoning and indicates how the ad valorem fee prescribed by section 7 is to be calculated.

But apart from this preliminary point I think it is quite clear that the Taxing Officer's procedure was perfectly correct and that his decision must be affirmed.

The plaintiffs pray for a declaration and for confirmation of possession. It may be contended that the prayer for confirmation of possession is nothing more than a prayer that the fact of and his right to possession may be declared; but the words "confirmation of possession" have now acquired a technical meaning and include a prayer for recovery of possession if the Court thinks the plaintiff is out of possession; and it is for this reason that for over half a century confirmation of possession has been held to be consequential relief within the meaning of section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. See Bohur-oonissa Bibee v. Kureemdonnissa Khatoon (5), Jhuman Karti v. Debu Lal Singh (6) and Dina Nath Das v. Rama Nath Das (7).

I have been unable to discover how and when his form of pleading originated but at the present time I think it is indisputable that though it may be often unnecessary to ask for it a prayer for confirmation of possession is added as an useful precaution against failure to prove possession up to the date of the suit. In the present case the plaintiff states in paragraph 13 of his plaint that, owing to the resistance of the defendants he is compelled to bring a regular suit. This is, therefore, in essence a suit for possession which is a form of consequential relief.

That being so, how is the consequential relief to be valued in this case. Are the plaintiffs entitled to put their own valuation or is the Court or, in a High Court, the Taxing Officer competent to correct such valuation?

The learned Vakil for the appellants relies upon various decisions in the High Courts of Bombay and Madras and of the Chief Court of the Punjab which, though affirming the principle that the plaintiffs' valuation must be accepted, do not seem really to cover the case now before us. I proceed to refer to these briefly.

(1) Parathayi v. Sankumani (8). In this case the plaintiff sought to set aside a deed of sale of which the consideration was Rs. 60,500. He paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only as on a declaratory suit but the Court held that he must pay ad valorem fee on the value of his interest on the document.

(2) Samiya Mavali v. Minammal (9). In this case the plaintiff sued to set aside a sale-deed and valued his relief at Rs. 800. The Trial Court assessed the value at Rs. 2,000, the amount mentioned in the sale-deed. The High Court on second appeal held that the plaintiffs' valuation should be accepted. The report does not show whether in the opinion of the Court that was the proper valuation of the relief.

(3) Vachhani Keshabhai v. Vachhani Nanbha Bawaji (10). The plaintiffs prayed for a declaration of title to certain lands, recovery of a sum of Rs. 637 being their share of the income for the years 1956-1960 Sambat and for an injunction. They valued the first relief at Rs. 130, the second at Rs. 637-8-0 and the third at Rs. 25. The High Court held that both for Court-fees and jurisdiction the plaintiffs' valuation must be accepted and that notwithstanding the defendants' objection that the property was worth Rs. 5,000, the suit was triable by a Second Class Subordinate Judge whose jurisdiction was confined to suit less than Rs. 5,000 in value.

Their Lordships, however, were of opinion that the valuation would be determinable by the Court if a claim for possession were made and on this ground they distinguished the previous ruling of their own Court in Dayaram Jagjivan v. Gordhandas Dayaram (11).

(8) 15 M. 294; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 556.

(11) 31 B. 73; 8 Bom. L. R. 885.

(4) Sunderbai v. Collector of Belgaum (12). This was a suit for a declaration and an injunction. Their Lordships of the Privy Council cited with approval the observation of the Bombay High Court that jurisdiction should be determined by the plaintiffs' valuation.

(5) Barru v. Lachhman (13). In this case the plaintiffs sought a declaration and an injunction and valued the relief at Rs. 130 for purposes of Court-fee and at Rs. 1,100 for purposes of jurisdiction though the value of the land was Rs. 73,192. A Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held that as the case fell within section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act the valuation was proper.

(6) Hari Sankar Dutt v. Kali Kumar Patra (14). In this case the plaintiff sought a declaration of title to some jungle land, damages for the cutting of some trees and an injunction. He valued the declaration together with the injunction at Rs. 130 and the damages at Rs. 79. The High Court of Calcutta held that though the value of the whole jungle was Rs. 1,200, it was neither the duty nor within the power of the Court to ascertain the value of the property for purposes of jurisdiction.

It will be observed that none of the cases relate to possession. They would all seem to relate to claims in which the Court had no option but to accept the plaintiffs' valuation. No case has been shown to us where there was a claim for possession and where the plaintiff was allowed to put a valuation upon it which the Court knew to be false.

On the other hand, it was observed by Richards, C.J., in Jageshra v. Durga Prashad Singh (15), that section 7, clause (iv) (c) requires that the plaintiff shall truly state the value of his relief; to the same effect is Umatul Batul v. Nanji Koer (16), Krishna Das Laha v. Harj Charan Banerjee (17) and Raj Krishna Dey

v. Bepin Behary Dey (18) and in the High Court at Patna the authorities are unanimous that it is not open to the plaintiff to give an arbitrary and incorrect valuation. See Brij Krishna Das v. Murli Rai (19) and Shama Pershad Sahi v. Sheoparsan Singh (20)

In this state of the authorities I think the Taxing Officer was clearly right in following the practice prevailing in this Court.

Apart from authority, it is also quite clear that the interpretation put by the appellants on section 7 (iv) (c) cannot be accepted; for if pushed to its logical conclusion it would lead to manifest absurdities. It is admitted that a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession is a suit for declaration with consequential relief. If the section is to be literally construed, then while a plaintiff suing simply for possession would under section 7 (iv) have to pay ad valorem fees on the value of the property, he would, by joining a prayer for declaration, pay an ad valorem fee on whatever smaller value he chose to put upon the consequential relief. Again, when a plaintiff had valued his prayer for consequential relief at a certain figure in his plaint and had failed in the Trial Court, it would be open to him in appeal to value the consequential relief at any lower figure he might choose. These inconsistencies and anomalies would not occur if the section were held to mean that the valuation for the purposes of Court-fee is to be made in the first instance by the party concerned but is finally determinable by the Court.

The next question is, what is the proper value of the consequential relief in this case. No rules have been made under sections 3 and 4 of the Suits Valuation Act in this Province for the valuation of an interest in land which is the subject-matter, of a suit under section 7, clause (iv) of the Court-Fees Act. Sections 3 and 4 of the former Act provide for the valuation of land for the purposes of jurisdiction and under section 8 the value as determinable for the computation of Court-fees is to be the same as the value for the purposes of jurisdiction. No rules having been framed, we must look to the value of the subject-matter of the relief, that is to say, the money value of the loss which the plaintiffs apprehend; and in this case we must follow the practice of this Court, and assess the value of the relief at the value of the 11 bighas 3 kathas in respect of which possession is claimed. The Taxing Officer finds that in 1910 the plaintiffs purchased the entire holding of 11 bighas 18 kathas at a Civil Court auction-sale for Rs. 1,323-10-6 and that the proportionate value of the 11 bighas 3 kathas is Rs. 1239-10-6. The ad valorem fee payable upon this sum is Rs. 90 and there is, therefore, a deficit of Rs. 80 in the present case. It may be that the value of the property at the time of the suit was less, though this is not probable, than its value 8 years earlier, but the appellants had an opportunity of proving its real value before the Taxing Officer and as no proof was given we are not in a position to say that the Taxing Officer's decision is incorrect. I think, therefore, that his decision must be affirmed.

The learned Vakil for the appellants desires two days' time to pay the deficit Court-fee. If the amount is not paid by the 3rd instant, the appeal will be dismissed without further reference to a Bench.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE No. 383 OF 1922.

November 21, 1922.

Messrs. V. JORTON AND CO.—OPPOSITE PARTY.Calcutta Rent Act (III B. C. of 1920), s. 18—Rent-Controller fixing standard rent—Jurisdiction, wrong exercise of—Revision.

Under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act a party aggrieved by an order of the Controller of Rent fixing a standard rent is entitled, by way of revision, to obtain a decision from the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal as to whether or not the controller of Rent had jurisdiction to fix any standard rent in the case brought before him. The fact that the petitioner before the President of the Tribunal contends that the Controller had no jurisdiction in the matter, cannot be construed to be a point against the petitioner disentitling him to any relief at the hands of the President under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act.

Rule against an order of the Court of the President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, in Revision Case No. 246 of 1921.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Paresh Nath Mukerjee), for the Petitioners.—The petitioners are the lessees of premises No. 41, Strand Road, Calcutta. The opposite party are the tenants under them. The Rule is directed against an order dismissing our application for revision of the Rent Controller's order under section 15 fixing the standard rent. In August 1919 there was an agreement to let a portion of the godowns in premises No. 41, Strand Road, from 1st September 1919 at the rate of Rs. 70 per month. The agreement was dated the 29th August 1919. On the 29th of January 1920 there was an agreement by the opposite party to pay increased rent at Rs. 99. On 5th May 1920 the opposite party applied for standardisation of rent under section 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act. The Rent Controller took the godowns as part of the premises. We then moved the President of the Tribunal who has rejected our application. Our contention there was that the Rent Controller's order was bad as the premises were used as godowns which were, therefore, exempted from the scope of the Act. See section 2 (e) of the Calcutta Rent Act; Kali Dasi v. Kanai Lal (1), H. D. Chatterjee v. L. B. Tribedi (2), Allen Bros. & Co. v. Bando & Co. (3).

The President holds that he had no jurisdiction to revise the order as no standard rent could be fixed in respect of the godowns under section 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act. See section 18. I submit the Controller had fixed the standard rent treating it as premises. My submission is that the landlord being aggrieved by the order has every right to apply under section 18 and show that the Controller is wrong. The President relied on section 24 of the Rent Act. I submit if the President's view be accepted no landlord would have any power to move under section 18 of the Act.

The Advocate General (with him Babu Narendranath Chowdhury), for the Opposite party.—The Act never intended that the President would have any power except in the matter of fixing of standard rent. In cases like the present the Controller is the proper authority to decide such questions. Refers to section 15. That section deals with the fixing of the standard rent. Section 18 specifically qualifies the decision of the Rent Controller as to the fixing of the standard rent of any premises. The question is fixation of rent which gives you the power to move the President under section 18 of the Act. Here the fixing of the standard rent was not questioned at all. They might have been relieved if they challenged the standard rent itself. They challenged simply the right of the Controller to fix the standard rent. The case in H. D. Chatterjee v. L. B. Tribedi (2) is distinguishable. There the standard rent was not fixed.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners before us are lessees of certain premises in Calcutta, No. 40/1, Strand Road, and the opposite parties are sub-tenants under the petitioners occupying, to use a neutral expression, a certain room on the ground floor of the said premises. The petitioners allege that the room in question is a godown and that the opposite parties executed on the 29th August 1919 a letter of attornment in their favour whereby they agreed to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 70 a month to the petitioners. It is alleged that in the letter of attornment, the room was described by them as a godown on the ground floor of premises No. 40/1, Strand Road. It is further alleged by the petitioners that, on or about the 29th January 1920, the opposite parties agreed to pay enhanced rent at the rate of Rs. 99 per month from January 1920 in respect of the said godown. It appears that on the 31st of May 1920 the opposite parties filed an application before the Controller of Rents in Calcutta for fixing a standard rent of the said room, alleging that the room in question constituted an office and that the standard rent thereof could not be more than Rs. 77 per month. The petitioners on being served with notice of this application contended before the Controller of Rents that the subject-matter of the demise was a godown and not an office and that the same could not be described as "premises" within the meaning of the Calcutta Rent Act and that as such the application of the opposite parties before the Controller of Rents was incompetent. The Controller of Rents inspected the room in question and came to the conclusion that the same was an office, that it was used "as a shop, an office as well as for the purpose of storing goods for sale in a portion" and fixed the standard rent thereof at Rs. 70. The petitioners being dissatisfied with the order of the Controller of Rent fixing the standard rent of the said room at Rs. 70 applied to the learned President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal for revision of the order of the Controller of Rent, fixing the said standard rent, under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act. The learned President held that inasmuch as the petitioners before him had contended in their application for revision that the Controller of Rent had no jurisdiction whatsoever to fix a standard rent in respect of the subject-matter of the demise the same not being "premises" within the meaning of the Act, the petitioners on their own showing were disentitled to any relief by way of revision under section 18 of the Act. The argument of the President is that, inasmuch as the Controller of Rents had, according to the petitioners, no jurisdiction to interfere in the matter, the President had equally no jurisdiction because, in his opinion, section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act is only attracted to cases where admittedly the Controller has jurisdiction to fix a standard rent. We are unable to assent to this view of the matter. We are of opinion that under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the landlords, in this case the petitioners, were entitled to a decision from the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal as to whether or not the Controller of Rent had jurisdiction to fix any standard rent in the case which was brought before him. In our opinion, the fact that the petitioners before the President of the Tribunal contended that the Controller had no jurisdiction in the matter, could not be construed to be a point against the petitioners disentitling them to any relief at the hands of the President under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act for revision of an order fixing a standard rent, because if that reasoning were held to be sound, then in no case of this description, could relief be given under section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act. We think that the President has taken an unduly narrow view of section 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act. In this view of the matter, we set aside the order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal and remit the case to him for consideration of the questions urged in the petition of the petitioners before us. There will be no order as regards the application under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The petitioners will get their costs of the first Rule which we assess at three gold mohurs.

RAM ASRE—PRISONER—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—

RESPONDENT.

*Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 299, 300, 326—Murder—Intention—Wound causing death
—Grievous hurt.*

Section 300, paragraph 2, of the Penal Code is only intended to be invoked when some injury which would not in the ordinary course of nature cause death was known to be likely to cause death by the offender in consequence of the latter being aware of some abnormal condition of the deceased. [p. 51, col. 1.]

Section 300, paragraph 4 of the Penal Code can never be invoked in a case where there was an intention of causing specific bodily injury to a particular person; it only applies to a case of dangerous action without an intention to cause specific bodily injury to any person. As this paragraph is the most difficult paragraph in the section it is very undesirable to invoke it where it is not applicable. [p. 51, cols. 1 & 2.]

Rama Singh v. Emperor, 58 Ind. Cas. 463; 42 A. 302; 18 A. L. J. 224; 21 Cr. L. J. 783; 2 U. B. L. R. (A.) 407, dissented from.

The words "or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death" in section 299, of the Penal Code, must be read in the light of the language of section 300 of the Penal Code, and so read they are not applicable to a case where specific bodily injury is intentionally caused to a particular person. [p. 51, col. 1.]

In the absence of any evidence to indicate that a blow on a particular part of a person was intended to be a blow on a more vital part it must be held that the offender inflicted the blow where he intended. [p. 51, col. 1.]

The expression "I shall kill you," used by an assailant does not necessarily show an intention to commit murder.

Wounds which actually caused death must be held to have endangered life within the meaning of section 326 of the Penal Code. [p. 52, col. 1.]

Obiter.—If there was an intention to cause death and death was caused by a wound or wounds inflicted in pursuance of that intention, the case would be one of murder, even though none of the wounds which the accused inflicted were of a character which would, within the knowledge of the accused or in the ordinary course of nature, have proved fatal. [p. 50, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Sitapur, dated the 1st July 1922.

Mr. St. G. Jackson, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Ram Asre Kurmi appeals from his conviction under section 302, Indian Penal Code, on a charge of murdering Sheo Prasad Brahman. The case is also up before us for confirmation of sentence. The appellant and the deceased were both residents of village Ilahipur, the appellant being a cultivator there and the deceased a Mukaddam of the Raja Sahib of Muhamudabad whose duty was apparently to collect rents. Shortly before the murder, the deceased Sheo Prasad, along with others, put in an application, which is Exhibit A on the record, complaining that the appellant Ram Asre and six other persons were bad characters and possessed of spears and asking for an enquiry. This petition was put in before Zahir Husain, a servant of the Raja, who is prosecution witness No. 5. This witness says that he had intended to call up Ram Asre in respect of this charge but that Ram Asre presented himself of his own accord before he did so. He was warned and told that he should improve his conduct. In less than a week, that is to say, on 1st of April 1922, at about 9 A. M. in the morning, the appellant appeared at the field of the deceased. The deceased was superintending the cutting of a field, the cutting being done by four labourers, his two sons and four women. The appellant had with him a lathi and a weapon called a banka. The latter is a kind of sickle often attached to a long bamboo to cut leaves from high branches of trees for goats. The appellant charged the deceased with getting his name recorded as a bad character and aimed his lathi at him. The lathi was seized by the deceased whereupon the appellant left hold of it and shifting the banka from his left hand struck the deceased twice on the leg. The deceased fell to the ground and the appellant gave him a third blow on the corner of the shoulder. When the two sons of Sheo Prasad ran up, the accused ran off leaving his lathi behind him. The sons put their father on a bed and carried him to the thana six miles away which they reached at noon. After the recording of Sheo Prasad's report, (Exhibit B.) Sheo Prasad was sent on to the hospital at Muhamudabad but died on the way. The exact time of death it is difficult to state but from the fact that the Assistant Civil Surgeon states that he saw the body at 1 P. M. on the 2nd and that the probable time since death was 16 hours, we may take it that the hour of death was about 8 or 9 P. M. on the 1st. Thus, the deceased died about 12 hours after he was struck. The medical examination showed there were two wounds on the left leg 1½ and 2 inches in depth and a wound on the left shoulder-joint 6 inches long 2½ inches wide and 3 inches deep cutting into the joint and separating the head of the humerus. The Assistant Civil Surgeon stated that the probable cause of death was bleeding and shock from these wounds. The deceased, it appears, was a man of strong and healthy physique.

The Sessions Judge of Sitapur was not prepared to find that the appellant actually intended to cause death of the deceased, but holding it proved that the deceased died from wounds deliberately inflicted with a dangerous weapon by the appellant after the appellant had deliberately sought the deceased in order to inflict wounds, found that the appellant must have known that death was likely to ensue from the blows which he struck and has, consequently, found the accused guilty of murder and imposed the death sentence.

The learned Barrister for the appellant confines himself in this appeal to pleading that the offence proved on the evidence is not one of murder or even of culpable homicide but, at the most, only one of causing grievous hurt by use of a stabbing weapon. He also urges that this is not a case for extreme punishment inasmuch as there is good evidence to show that his client had grave provocation.

The Government Pleader in supporting the conviction of murder has rightly pointed out that, if there was an intention to cause death and death was caused by a wound or wounds inflicted in pursuance of that intention, the case would be one of murder, even though none of the wounds which the accused inflicted before being interrupted were of a character which would within the knowledge of the accused or in the ordinary course of nature have proved fatal. He would find evidence of the intention in the fact that, according to the statement of the deceased, Exhibit B, the accused prefaced the assault by saying, "Saraa, I shall kill you," and also in the fact that the accused brought with him a dangerous cutting weapon and, lastly, in the fact that the accused had a motive for killing the deceased. We are not prepared to hold that, even if the accused before he attacked the deceased did use the words "I shall kill you" this expression can be held to prove an intention to murder. They are words which might be used by an angry man whose only intention was to give a severe beating to his opponent. Apart from this, it may be mentioned that, although these words were mentioned by the deceased, the evidence of the witnesses present in the field does not corroborate the fact of their having been used. As to the use of the banka it is to be noted that it is clearly proved by the evidence that the appellant commenced the assault merely with his lathi. The banka was, at that time, in his left hand and it is in evidence that, owing to a stiffness of the elbow joint, the accused could not use his left hand. The banka was resorted to when the deceased disarmed the appellant of his lathi. It has been urged that the appellant intended to knock the deceased down with the lathi and then murder him on the ground with the banka. There is, however, a reason against holding that this was the case. It is proved that, after the deceased fell to the ground, the accused, so far from aiming at the head of the deceased or at any dangerous part of his person, confined himself to hitting him on the shoulder, and only struck one blow. It is true that the sons of the deceased ran up to assist their father but, if the appellants had come with the deliberate intention to murder the deceased it is probable that he would have had time to strike more than one blow. Again, if the intention of the accused was a deliberate one to murder the deceased we should not have expected the assault to have taken place on the deceased when he was within close distance of his sons and his labourers. As to motive, accepting the statement recorded in the note appended to the initial report that the real reason of the deceased complaining of the appellant being a bad character was that the appellant failed to pay his rent, we are unable to hold that the unfairness of making such an application would make the appellant determined to kill the deceased. His grievance might be satisfied by assaulting him without any such extreme intention. Considering these facts as a whole, we are unable to hold that any intention to cause death is proved and, consequently, the case will not fall within the first paragraph of section 300, Indian Penal Code. Nor, again, can the blow be said to have been struck with the intention of causing bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The proper question was not put to the medical witness. All he said was that the cause of death was probably shock and hæmorrhage. If the deceased died of shock it is impossible to predicate that death from shock twelve hours after the assault was a normal result of the three wounds. It is much more probable that the deceased died of hæmorrhage, but as 12 hours had elapsed since he was struck and the deceased had endured in the interval two journeys, one of six miles and the other apparently of some miles, it is probable that the hæmorrhage was at least caused as much by his being carried about as by the wound in itself. Death from hæmorrhage cannot, therefore, be said to have been a normal result of the wound. The case, therefore, does not fall within the third paragraph of section 300, Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge appears to have held that it fell under the second paragraph in that the offender intentionally caused bodily injury which he knew to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused. Illustration (b) to section 300 appears to indicate that this paragraph was only intended to be invoked when some injury which would not in the ordinary course of nature cause death was known to be likely to cause death by the offender in consequence of the latter being aware of some abnormal condition of the deceased. Even assuming, however, that the paragraph is not to have such a restricted meaning we are unable in this case to hold that the appellant could possibly have known that the wounds he inflicted were likely to cause death. We are not prepared to hold that the blow on the corner of the shoulder-blade was intended to be a blow on the neck. In the absence of any evidence to indicate that a blow on a particular part of a person was intended to be a blow on a more vital part, it must be held that the offender inflicted the blow where he intended. We hold, therefore, that the second paragraph of section 300, Indian Penal Code, does not apply. The Government Pleader has invoked the fourth paragraph. In our opinion the fourth paragraph of section 300 can never be invoked in a case where there was intention of causing specific bodily injury to a particular person. Illustration (d) shows that it only applies to a case of dangerous action without an intention to cause specific bodily injury to any person. It is true that in the ruling Rama Singh v. Emperor (1) reference is made in the judgment by Piggott and Walsh, JJ., to the fourth clause of section 300 in a case where there was such an intention. We are of the opinion, however, that this was clearly wrong. A great deal of confusion results from failure to perceive that the fourth clause of section 300 never applies to a case where specific bodily injury has been intentionally caused to a particular person but only applies to very rare cases of the character shown in Illustration (d). As this clause is the most difficult clause in section 300 it is obviously very undesirable to invoke it where it is not applicable. Our conclusion, then, is that the offence does not fall under section 300, Indian Penal Code, and is not, therefore, one of murder. Nor, again, will it fall under section 299, Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as it cannot be said that the injuries were likely to cause death. It is to be regretted that the Assistant Civil Surgeon was not asked directly as to this and we have, therefore, had to supply this omission in the evidence by reference to medical authority. We are convinced that a wound on the shoulder by a weapon of this kind would not be likely to cause death. As it was, the wound went down 3 inches into the shoulder-blade without meeting a blood vessel or vein. As to the contention that the accused should be held to have had the knowledge that he was likely to cause death we are of the opinion that the words in section 299 "or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death" must be read in the light of the language of section 300, and so read they are not applicable to a case where specific bodily injury is intentionally caused to a particular person. No more serious offence, therefore, appears to have been proved against the accused than one under section 326, Indian Penal Code. The wounds amounted clearly to grievous hurt because they endangered life. Wounds which actually cause death must be held to have endangered life. The extreme sentence allowed by section 326 is transportation for life but, in view of the provocation received by the appellant, as described above, we do not consider it necessary to impose transportation for life. Another reason for not imposing this penalty is, that we consider that the deceased would probably not have died but for the journey to the thana and the further journey in the direction of the hospital. It is clear from the language of the initial report and also from the fact that the report was entered as an offence under section 307, Indian Penal Code, that the death of the deceased was not anticipated at first.

We, therefore, allow this appeal to the extent of altering the section of conviction from 302 to 326, Indian Penal Code, and we direct that the accused be punished with rigorous imprisonment for six years.

C. P. Municipal Act (XVI of 1903), ss. 2 (f), 44—Tax, essentials of—Lease money for Municipal building, whether tax.

The essential quality of a tax and of those similar imposts mentioned in section 2 (f) of the C. P. Municipal Act seem to be that the amounts or rates of payments are fixed by levying authority without reference to the payer. In regard to some of them there is the option of making no payment if no benefit is taken but in none of them has the payer any option as to the amount to be paid.

An unpaid balance of lease money in respect of a Municipal market building is not a tax and is not recoverable by the summary procedure under section 44 of the C. P. Municipal Act.

Revision of the order of the City Magistrate, Nagpur, dated the 20th February 1923.

Mr. K. P. Vaidya, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—At an auction held by the Municipal Committee of Nagpur of the right to sell provisions at a certain stall in the Cotton Market near the Railway Station the applicant, Yeshwantrao Pande, made the highest bid. He paid a portion of the amount of his bid and the sale was presumably sanctioned in due course by the Committee at one of its ordinary meetings. But before Yeshwantrao executed the deed required of him the Committee, as he alleges, broke one of the conditions of the contract and he filed a suit for damages. The Committee then applied under section 44 of Act XVI of 1903, the Central Provinces Municipal Act, to a Magistrate to recover the unpaid balance of the lease-money from him by distress and sale of his moveable property. Yeshwantrao objected that the money due from him was not due for any tax and that, therefore, section 44 of the Municipal Act did not authorise its recovery by distress and sale. The learned Magistrate examined the question and came to the conclusion that the amount recoverable was a "market due" within the meaning of clause VII of section 35 (a) of the Act, and was, therefore, a tax according to the extended meaning given to that word by section 2 (f), which lays down that it includes any toll, rate, cess, fee or other impost leviable under it. Sale of the moveable property which had already been attached was accordingly ordered, and Yeshwantrao has applied to this Court for revision of this order.

(2) The essential quality of a tax and of those similar imposts mentioned in section 2 (f) of the Municipal Act seems to be that the amounts or rates of payment are fixed by the levying authority without reference to the payer; in regard to some of them there is the option of making no payment if no benefit is taken, but in none of them has the payer any option as to the amount to be paid. That essential quality is absent in the present case, where the amount to be paid was fixed by agreement between the two parties.

(3) But it is not necessary to examine the general meanings of words for a decision of this matter. A tax recoverable under section 44 of the Act is a tax imposed under section 35, that is to say, a tax imposed with the previous sanction of the Local Government, or in special cases with that of the Governor-General in Council as well, "in the manner required by section 39." That section requires a proposition of the tax at a special meeting, publication of details of its incidence, consideration at another special meeting of any objections made, sanction of the Local Government after consideration of those objections and notification in the Official Gazette of the date of the imposition of the tax. Whether, therefore, the payment to be exacted from the applicant was a "market due" or not, and it certainly was a "due" or debt for using a market or exposing goods for sale in a place belonging to the Committee, it was certainly not a "market due" or tax of the kind mentioned in section 35 of the Municipal Act, as it was never imposed in the manner prescribed by that section. It cannot, therefore, be recovered by the summary procedure provided by section 44. The order of the Magistrate is accordingly set aside and the application of the Municipal Committee under section 44 will be dismissed. Yeshwant-rao's property will be released from attachment.

Mr. R. F. Bahadurji, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant Ghisa has been bound over to be of good behaviour for a period of one year. He furnished two sureties, Jagannath Singh and Baiju Singh, one of whom was accepted by the Trying Magistrate. The other was not accepted on the ground that he had already stood surety for some other man. That ground is clearly insufficient. Jagannath Singh is zemindar and Baiju Singh is an under-proprietor. They undertook to look after the accused if their security bonds be accepted.

The application is allowed and the Trying Magistrate directed to release the accused Ghisa if the security-bonds of Jagannath and Baiju Singh are still subsisting and have not been withdrawn.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceeding under—Decree of Civil Court, awarding possession, effect of—Possession, mode of delivery of, whether material.

A Magistrate, in declaring possession in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot go behind a decision of a Civil Court in the matter. It is not for him to question the validity of the decree on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction.

When a decree such as the above is inter partes it is immaterial whether the delivery of possession under it was symbolical or not.

Rule against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bankura.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Havendra Kumar Sarbadhicary, for the Petitioners.

Babu Norendra Kumar Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This rule is directed against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bankura declaring the first party, the opposite party before us, to be in possession of certain lands under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate has based his order on the Record of Rights published in the Settlement proceedings which recorded the possession of this party. But subsequent to the publication of this Record of Rights it appears that the second party, who are the petitioners before us, obtained a decree against the first party in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia and in execution of that decree they were put in possession of the disputed land. This Court has repeatedly held that, in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate cannot go behind the decision of the Civil Court in the matter.

The Magistrate here has erred in thinking that the decree can be ignored because the Subordinate Judge of Purulia had no jurisdiction over this land and because the delivery of possession was symbolical. It is not for the Magistrate to question the validity of a decree that has not been set aside by a competent Court. Also, when the decree is inter partes it is immaterial whether the delivery of possession is symbolical or not. We hold that in this case in disregarding this delivery of possession the Magistrate acted with gross irregularity in a manner that was likely to cause a failure of justice.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Magistrate declaring the first party to be in possession.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 291—Defence witness, discharged—Accused, right of, to examine.

The fact that a witness cited by an accused person is discharged before his examination, is no bar to his being examined as a witness if he is in attendance, and the accused insists on his evidence being recorded. [p. 55, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th September 1922.

Mr. R. F. Bahadurji, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by certain persons who have been convicted of offences under sections 147 and 304, Indian Penal Code. They had filed before the Committing Magistrate a list of witnesses, which included Pandit Parmeshwar Nath Sapru, a Pleader practising at Fyzabad. He was summoned to attend the Court of Session, but having been engaged as a Counsel by some of the accused to conduct their defence before the Sessions Judge he naturally felt some delicacy in appearing both as Counsel and as a witness in the case.

On the 17th August 1922 before the trial commenced an application was made by Nageshwar, Ram Prasad, Bhola and Changa, accused, stating that they were present at the time of the alleged occurrence at the house of Pandit Parmeshwar Nath Sapru, that the said Pandit was aware of all facts and that they wanted to examine him as a witness and also to engage him as their Counsel. They further stated that the said gentleman was unwilling to accept the brief, if he was examined as a witness, and that they were obliged, in the circumstances, to discharge him. The learned Sessions Judge thereupon discharged the witness and proceeded with the trial. Subsequently, the said accused reconsidered their position and insisted on examining Pandit Parmeshwar Nath Sapru as one of their witnesses. He was present in Court. His clerk has already been examined. Mr. Sapru protested against the application and stated that he had given his clients the choice of either examining him as a witness or engaging him as a Pleader and that they should not be allowed to examine him after he had been discharged. The learned Sessions Judge accepted his contention and refused to examine him as a witness.

The attitude taken up by Mr. Sapru was quite unobjectionable, and the application now made by the accused places him in a position he wanted to avoid. Section 291 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, however, allows the accused to examine a witness, not previously named by him, if such witness is in attendance. It does not in express terms refer to a witness who has been discharged. But if the accused insists on the examination of a witness in attendance, who had been discharged before, the Court may, if it thinks that the interests of justice would be served, allow an opportunity for his production. The conduct of the accused in this matter has been somewhat disingenuous, but considering the position in which they were placed, it would be hard to refuse to them the opportunity which they sought to produce the witness whom they were obliged, under circumstances against their will, to discharge. The examination of the witness would in no case have involved an adjournment of the trial and the prosecution would hardly have suffered by the evidence of Mr. Sapru being recorded at that stage.

The learned Sessions Judge is, therefore, directed to examine Mr. Parmeshwar Nath Sapru in the presence of all the accused and the evidence so recorded should be certified to this Court as early as practicable.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190 (1) (b), 351—Cognizance of offence on Police report—Witness, prosecution of, with other accused—Magistrate, jurisdiction of.

Where after some evidence for the prosecution had been led in a case in which the prosecution was initiated on a Police report, the Magistrate ordered the prosecution of one of the witnesses jointly with another accused and commenced the trial de novo:

Held, Per Robinson, C. J. and Macgregor, J., that the Magistrate had full jurisdiction to act, that section 351 of the Criminal Procedure Code applied to the case, and that the Magistrate, so far as section 190 was applicable, if it was applicable at all, had acted under section 190 (1) (b) of the Code. ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Maung Kin, J.—(April 7, 1922).—This is an application for revision by Chan Tha.

The Police sent up Po Ne and another for trial under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate took cognizance and tried the case. After some of the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined, Chan Tha, who was one of the witnesses cited by the Police, appears to have been placed in the witness-box and to have been questioned by the Magistrate, though Chan Tha's replies have not been recorded; but we find the Magistrate recording in the case diary that Chan Tha tried to exculpate the other accused and that, according to the evidence which had been recorded, he was one of the principal persons who arranged the payment of the money and the return of the stolen cattle. The result was that Chan Tha was made a co-accused and the case was tried de novo. In the end, both Po Ne and Chan Tha were convicted. On appeal to the Sessions Court the convictions were confirmed; but as regards Chan Tha, the learned Sessions Judge considered the point whether the trial was illegal.

It appears the Magistrate was not empowered to take cognizance of a case under section 190 (1), clause (c), Criminal Procedure Code. It also appears that he did not, under section 191, inform Chan Tha that he was entitled to have the case tried by another Court. The learned Sessions Judge, however, held that the Magistrate had taken action against Chan Tha under section 351 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the trial was in order.

According to two cases, namely, Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (1) and Queen-Empress v. Hirashanker (2), where a witness is turned into an accused, the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case against him under section 190 (1), clause (c), of the Criminal Procedure Code. The former is a Calcutta case and was decided by O'Kinealy and Jenkins, JJ., and the latter is a Bombay case and was decided by Parsons and Ranade, JJ.

Against these two cases, we have the cases of Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3) and Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (4). In the former case there was a complaint charging three persons with various offences. On the filing of the complaint, the Magistrate examined the complainant and some witnesses produced by him and then issued processes against the persons complained against and another person. Ghosh and Wilkins, JJ., held that the Magistrate took cognizance upon the complaint. In the latter case, a report was made to the Police against four persons as having outraged the modesty of a woman. The Police enquired into the case, and, as the complainant identified a certain person as one of those concerned, that person was sent up for trial. At the trial, it appeared from the evidence of one of the witnesses that two other persons were concerned in the offence. The Magistrate then issued processes against these two others and they were tried along with the accused sent up by the Police. One of the two, the subsequently added accused, was convicted. An appeal to the Sessions Judge was unsuccessful. The matter came before the High Court before Prinsep and Hill, JJ. It was contended that the Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction in proceeding under clause (c) of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code as he was not especially empowered to take cognizance of the case under the said clause of the said section. It was also contended that the Magistrate did not take cognizance of the offence upon a complaint or upon Police report, inasmuch as no complaint was lodged against the petitioner and the Police did not send him up for trial. It was held that as there had been a complaint that some person or persons committed an offence the Magistrate had cognizance of the offence upon a complaint under section 190 (1) clause (a).

In my judgment, these two cases are entirely different to the case before me, inasmuch as there was no Police report or complaint against Chan Tha, nor was there any Police report or complaint to the effect that there were more than two persons concerned in the case. I would hold that, if section 190 applies to this case, the Magistrate took cognizance of the case against Chan Tha under clause (c) of that section and that, as he had not been especially empowered to take cognizance of the case under that clause, his proceedings must be held to be void; and even if he had been so empowered the same result would follow, because he did not, under section 191, inform the accused that he could have his case tried by another Magistrate, if he so wished.

This brings me to the contention by the learned Sessions Judge that the Magistrate did not take action under section 190 at all but under section 351. In support of this contention, the case decided by Sir Bepin Krishna Bose, Additional Judge of Nagpur, Judicial Commissioner's Court—Emperor v. Sakhia (5)—may be cited; but in my opinion, the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge are not correct. He holds that section 351 is self-contained and complete in itself and independent of section 190 and consequently of section 191. He holds that where a Magistrate acts under section 351 against any person upon the evidence taken before him to be concerned in the offence under investigation, he cannot be properly regarded as taking cognizance of the case upon information received, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion within the meaning of clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 190, so as to enable the accused to object to that Magistrate proceeding further with the case. He says: "Now section 190 finds place in a sub-chapter dealing with 'Conditions requisite for Initiation of Proceedings' whereas section 351 is located in a Chapter, which is headed 'General Provisions as to Inquiries and Trials.' While the former refers to the initiation of proceedings, the latter deals with a matter arising during the course of a proceeding already initiated. Looking to the fundamental difference in the character of the subject-matters of these two sections appearing in two distinct parts of the Code, it does not appear that the Legislature intended that the one should be dependent on the other to this extent that no proceeding can be started against any person under section 351 except in compliance with the conditions set forth in section 190. On the contrary, it would seem that section 351 deals with a state of things not covered by section 190. When an enquiry or trial has already commenced in one or other of the methods provided for by section 190, the power of the Presiding Magistrate is no longer fettered by its provisions. He may, independently of them, take action against a person filling the character described in section 351, 'as though he had been arrested or summoned.' These words seem, in my judgment, to indicate that the person proceeded against is to be regarded in the same light and is to be subject to the same disabilities as though he had already been arrested or summoned in pursuance of a proceeding initiated under section 190. The conditions for initiation of a proceeding as set forth in this section are in his case to be dispensed with. The case is to be regarded as having passed the stage contemplated therein."

Section 351 is as follows:—

"(1) Any person attending a Criminal Court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such Court for the purpose of enquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognizance and which, from the evidence, may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned.

"(2) When the detention takes place in the course of an enquiry under Chapter XVIII, or after a trial has been begun, the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witnesses reheard."

This section is placed in the Chapter headed "General Provisions as to Inquiries and Trials" and it applies to all Criminal Courts. For instance, it applies to a Court of Session. It also applies to investigations preliminary to commitment for a subsequent trial. In the case of the Court of Session, any person attending the Court may be made a co-accused with another under trial. In the case of a Magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry with a view to commitment to the Court of Session, he can make any person attending his Court a co-accused with another against whom the enquiry is being made. These two cases do not come within the purview of section 190.

The question arises: what will be the meaning of section 351 in cases in which section 190 applies?

Now, under section 190, certain Magistrates are empowered to take cognizance of an offence upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed and where action is taken under section 191 the Magistrate is bound to inform the person proceeded against that he may, if he wishes, ask to be tried by another Magistrate. If the Trying Magistrate has no power to take cognizance in that way, or, having such power, fails to inform the accused as required by section 191, his proceedings are void under section 530 of the Code.

NGA CHAN THA V. EMPEROR.

If, under the circumstances of a particular case, it can be held that the action taken by the Magistrate was under section 190 (1), clause (c), and his proceedings are void for non-compliance with section 191, or because he had no power to take cognizance under that clause, the question arises as to whether section 351 will help to make his proceedings valid. In my judgment, that section will not. All that it says is that he may detain a person attending his Court for purpose of enquiry into or trial of any offence of which he can take cognizance and which from the evidence may appear to have been committed, and he may proceed against such person as though he has been arrested or summoned. But the section does not answer the question how the Magistrate should take cognizance of the offence against that person. For an answer to that question we must go to section 190 (1), clause (c), and section 191. In other words, section 351 must be read as a general provision applying to all Criminal Courts, with sections 190 and 191 as provisos thereto with reference to the various classes of Magistrates. I am unable to agree with Sir B. K. Bose that section 351 is self-contained and independent of sections 190 and 191. In coming to that conclusion, I am of opinion the learned Judge overlooked the fact that section 351 is designed to apply to all Criminal Courts and is, therefore, placed in the Chapter headed "General Provisions as to Inquiries and Trials." If the learned Judge's view is correct, section 351 will certainly be in conflict with section 190 (1), clause (c). Apparently, he recognized the possibility of this argument, inasmuch as he argued for the conclusion that section 190 applies to the initiations of proceedings and that section 351 applies to proceedings which have already been initiated. I am unable to discern in the language of either section, or both taken together, any indication of that view. My view is, that section 351 is a general provision applying to all Criminal Courts and must be held to apply to them subject to any special provision made with reference to any particular classes of Criminal Courts.

For the above reason, I am inclined to hold that the proceedings of the Magistrate as regards Chan Tha were taken under clause (c) of section 190 (1), and that as the Magistrate has not been specially empowered to take cognizance of cases under that clause, his proceedings were void and that the same result would have followed, even if he had been so empowered, because there was no compliance with section 191. But as the point is of some difficulty and of great importance, I would refer to a Bench, Full or otherwise, as the learned Chief Judge may direct, the following question:—

Whether on the facts of this case, section 190 (1) (c), or section 351 or any other provision of the Criminal Procedure Code applies?

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

Robinson, C. J.—The Magistrate in this case acted on a Police report, Po Ne and another person being sent up for trial under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code in a cattle theft case. After some evidence had been led for the prosecution, the Magistrate ordered the prosecution of Chan Tha, the petitioner, jointly with the other accused. The trial was commenced de novo and Chan Tha was convicted. His appeal was rejected by the Sessions Judge, who considered whether the Magistrate had jurisdiction to try him. An application in revision was filed in this Court by Po Ne and rejected by Mr. Justice Pratt. Another application for revision has now been filed by Chan Tha and the question of jurisdiction has been referred by my brother Maung Kin, to a Full Bench.

The question referred is thus stated:—

Whether on the facts of this case section 190 (1) (c), or section 351, or any other provision of the Criminal Procedure Code, applies?

The question involved really amounts to this: As to whether the provisions of section 351 of the Code are governed by the provisions of sections 190 and 191 of the Code. Section 190 deals with the conditions requisite for the initiation of proceedings, and the section provides that a Magistrate may take cognizance of any offence:—

(a) Upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence;

(b) Upon a Police report of such facts;

(c) Upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion, that such offence has been committed.

NGA CHAN THA V. EMPEROR.

It is to be noted that the section provides that cognizance may be taken of any offence and that no reference is made to the offender. Indeed, the identity of the offender is in no way involved, for a complaint may be presented with a view to action being taken against some person or persons unknown. When, therefore, proceedings are initiated on a complaint, or on a Police report, the Magistrate can legally take cognizance of the offence and the requirements of section 190 of the Code are complete.

In the present case, the trial was commenced and action was taken against Chan Tha. The addition of a new accused does not, in my opinion, necessitate fresh proceedings in initiation. The evidence, it is true, must be recorded de novo, but that is merely in order that the witnesses, whose evidence has already been recorded, may be used against the new accused. The Magistrate having taken cognizance of the offence it is right and proper that he should bring to justice all those persons, whether originally mentioned or not, who the evidence shows were guilty of that offence. It has been held that in such cases, the Magistrate should be regarded as taking cognizance under the same clause of section 190 as he did against the original accused; and if it were necessary to apply section 190 at all, I would hold that that is the correct view to take for the reasons that I have given above. But, in my opinion, section 351 applies to such cases, and is intended to apply to them. The offence being one and the same, and the Magistrate, having cognizance of that offence, acting under section 190 (b), has full seizin of the offence. He takes action on the evidence given for the prosecution to establish the offence, and there is apparently no need, therefore, to refer back to section 190 at all. However this may be, if there is such necessity, there is ample authority to support the view that in this case the Magistrate was acting under section 190 (b). I am unable to agree that there is no indication in the language of section 351 to support the view that section 190 applies to the initiation of proceedings and that section 351 applies to proceedings that have already been initiated. The section distinctly refers to cases in which a trial has already been begun, and the section, as now drafted, refers to enquiries and also trials. With the exception of one case, there is no reported case that I can find that takes a different view. That one case, which is also the earliest, is that of Khudiram Mookerjee v. Queen-Empress (1). It was under the old Code of Criminal Procedure and before section 351 had been amended. In that case, however, there is a bare statement of the opinion of the Court. No reasons for the decision are given, and it is, therefore, impossible to ascertain or consider the grounds on which the decision was arrived at. In the case of Raghab Acharjee v. Queen-Empress we have only a note of the case, which has not apparently been reported in full. The case is different to the present one, in that the Magistrate took action against the petitioner on the evidence that was led for the defence of the original accused and not on the evidence which was given for the prosecution. The case was decided on other grounds, but it was held that a Magistrate is competent at the trial of one person to proceed against any other who may appear, upon the evidence taken, to be concerned in that offence, and that in doing so he cannot be properly regarded as acting within the terms of section 190, clause (c). It was further held that this rule should not be applied to a case where the trial of the 2nd accused is not on the same evidence on which the 1st accused was tried but on other evidence adduced on behalf of the defence of the 1st accused.

On the facts of the present case, therefore, this authority differs from that of the previous one quoted. In Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3), the Magistrate took cognizance of the case upon a complaint against three persons. After examining the complainant and some witnesses on his behalf, the Magistrate took action against another person, and it was held that he took cognizance of the offence as against this other person under clause (a) and not under clause (c) of section 190; that is to say, it was held that the proceedings having been initiated on a complaint, the proceedings against the additional accused must be held to be initiated on the same complaint. In Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (4) the same view was held. A complaint was made to a Head Constable of the Railway Police at Hooghly that four

NGA CHAN THA V. EMPEROR.

Babus had outraged the modesty of the complainant's wife. The Police held an enquiry and the complainant identified one Bhut Nath Mukerjee who was sent up for trial. At the trial it appeared upon the evidence of one of the witnesses that the petitioner was also concerned in the offence, and the Magistrate instituted proceedings against him. It was urged that the Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction in proceeding under clause (c) of section 190 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as he was not especially empowered by the Local Government to take cognizance of the case under the said clause and that he had not taken cognizance upon complaint or upon a Police report, inasmuch as no complaint was lodged against the petitioner. It was held that he had taken cognizance of an offence and, having cognizance of the offence, it was his duty to proceed to deal with the evidence brought before him and to see that justice was done in regard to any person who might be proved by the evidence to be concerned in that offence.

The next case, Emperor v. Sakhia (5), deals fully with section 190 and section 351. It was held that the Magistrate taking action, as he did in the present case, cannot be regarded as taking cognizance upon information received or upon his own knowledge or suspicion within the meaning of clause (c) of section 190. It was held that section 351 is self-contained, complete in itself and independent of section 190.

Lastly, there is the case of Dedar Bux v. Syamapada Malakar (6), where most of the previous authorities that I have referred to are considered. In this case a complaint was made by the husband of a girl against four persons under sections 342 and 363 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate directed the complainant to prove his case, and two days later he presented a petition for withdrawal of the complaint and its dismissal as untrue, but the Magistrate proceeded and examined the girl and some prosecution witnesses and he found that, though there was no satisfactory evidence against the original accused, there was sufficient evidence against other persons, and, treating the girl as the real complainant, issued processes against them for offences.

(6) 24 Ind. Cas. 954; 1 C. 1013 18 C. W. N. 921; 15 Cr. L. J. 546.

Under sections 342, 352, and 363 of the Penal Code. It was held that he took cognizance against these new accused not named in the complaint under clause (a) and not clause (c) of section 190 of the Code. Raghab's case is distinguished.

The authorities, therefore, are strongly in favour of the view that a Magistrate so acting must be held to have acted under the same clause of section 190 as that under which the proceedings were initiated.

There is also authority for the view that section 351 is independent of the provisions of section 190.

For the reasons given above, I would hold that the Magistrate had full jurisdiction to act, that section 351 applies to the case, and that the Magistrate, so far as section 190 applies, if it applies at all, was acting under section 190 (b).

Maung Kin, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of the learned Chief Judge and have taken time to consider the point.

In my opinion it is right to hold that section 190, which relates to the conditions requisite for the initiation of proceedings, provides that Magistrates may take cognizance of any offence upon information derived in one of the three ways mentioned in (a), (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) of section 190, and that it is not necessary that any particular person should have been accused before cognizance is taken of the offence by a Magistrate.

I think as regards section 190(1) (c) the information, or the knowledge, or suspicion referred to therein, has reference to the initiation of proceedings in regard to the offence alleged to have been committed, and not to a later stage of the case.

The Magistrate's action in the present case refers to a stage later than that when cognizance was taken of the offence. Therefore, section 190(1) (c) does not apply. And there is abundant authority for holding that a Magistrate can proceed against anybody who may afterwards be shown to have been, or suspected of having been, concerned in the commission of the offence of which he has taken cognizance. In view of the ruling in Dedar Bux v. Syamapada Malakar (6) it cannot now be held that there is any distinction between the case before us and the cases of Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3) and Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (4) on the ground that there was no complaint or Police report against Chan Tha.

The Magistrate took cognizance of the offence in question and enquired as to who committed it or was concerned in the commission of it. That was the question the Police by their report asked him to try. For this reason it must be held that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case against Chan Tha upon a Police report under clause (b).

With great respect to the learned Judges, their ruling in Khudiram Mookerjee v. Queen-Empress (1) cannot be followed, because, in my opinion the point was overlooked that all the three cases which enable a Magistrate to take cognizance of the case relate to initiation of the proceedings and not to a later stage in the proceedings.

In the view I have taken of the meaning of section 190, it is unnecessary to express any opinion as to the meaning of section 351.

My answer to the question referred is that on the facts of the case section 190, (1) (c), applies.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 34
—Common intention—Sudden quarrel.

Where several persons go to the house of another and on a quarrel ensuing there, one of the party calls on his companions to beat the latter, and they do so, section 34 of the Penal Code applies to impute common intention to all of them even though the party did not come with the intention of beating the men in the first instance.

Application for revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 22nd December 1922, upholding the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Sultanpur, dated the 18th November 1922, upholding the order of the Honorary Magistrate, Second Class, dated the 25th September 1922.

Messrs. Zahur Ali and Moti Lal Sakesena, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants, Mian Jan, Mian Din, Hasrat Din, Lal Muhammad and Baqridi, have been convicted of an offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 60 each.

It appears that Nur Muhammad, the son of the complainant, was married to the niece of Baqridi. On the 6th May 1922 Baqridi and the other four accused went to the house of Abdul Razzak, and asked him to get his son to divorce his wife. His son was not in the house at the time. Abdul Razzak, therefore, expressed his inability to do anything in the matter. It is not clear whether any conversation took place at the time about the payment of money in consideration of the proposed divorce or not. A quarrel ensued, and Baqridi asked his companions to beat the complainant; Mian Din, Hasrat Din and Lal Muhammad then attacked the complainant with lathis. The complainant fell down. Mian Din sat on his chest and pressed his throat. Meanwhile, Musammam Nasiban, the wife of the complainant, raised a hue and cry, and on the arrival of certain persons, who have given evidence in the case, the assailants withdrew. The complainant had received certain injuries, one of which was grievous. The Trying Magistrate was not satisfied that the accused had gone there with the common object of attacking the complainant or as to the person who had caused the grievous hurt. He, therefore, acquitted the accused under sections 325 and 147 and convicted them under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code. On appeal that conviction was upheld.

The case has not been properly tried. If the accused had gone with the object of asking the complainant to get his son to divorce a certain woman without any intention of beating the complainant, they had gone for what might be described as a lawful purpose, but when the complainant refused to take any steps in the matter and a quarrel ensued, the call of Baqridi to his companions to beat the complainant and the joining of the other accused in beating him constituted a common object which ought to have been taken into consideration in fixing their common responsibility for the crime. If that common object be excluded from consideration, the conviction of Mian Jan, Mian Din, Hasrat Din and Lal Muhammad under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code will still stand though that of Baqridi will have to be altered into one under section 109, read with section 323, of the Indian Penal Code, unless section 34 of the Code be made applicable to him. As the accused have been acquitted under sections 149 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code no further notice need be taken of the matter. The beating was started at the instance of Baqridi, and section 34 of the Code will, therefore, apply.

The application is dismissed.

Inasmuch as an accused cannot give evidence while on his trial, secondary evidence of an identification of a co-accused by him is clearly inadmissible. Evidence by an official witness of identification is only admissible, if the identifying witness is called to support his identification on oath. [p. 63, cols. 1 & 2.]

The fact that a witness makes mistakes in identification is no reason for discrediting his evidence in other matters. [p. 64, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 17th October, 1922.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case five men, Daryao Singh, Umrai, Sibba Singh, Khetal and Bhopal Singh, appeal against their convictions for dacoity by the Sessions Judge of Shahjahanpur. They have been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. It is a bad case. Owing to the mistakes of the Sessions Judge, and to what appear to me to be errors of judgment on the part of the Deputy Superintendent of Police, due in part to a strange order by the Magistrate in refusing an application for pardon, I have had difficulty in disposing of the case. I am compelled to allow two of the appeals, but in one case it seems to me a miscarriage of justice.

The learned Judge has based his decision almost entirely upon the confessions of Daryao Singh and Sibba Singh. He has worked from this stand-point, and has sought for corroboration of the confessions from independent evidence against each of the accused, except in the case of Daryao Singh where he has fallen back upon the confession of his co-accused Sibba Singh. This is a very usual method in such cases as this, but when both confessions are inadmissible, which is the case here, it has serious drawbacks. A great deal of the Judge's work has been thrown away, and I have had to do it again.

The dacoity took place in the night of the 4th and 5th June 1922, and on the 6th June, Daryao Singh and Sibba Singh were arrested. Both were old soldiers and had gun licences. Both were obviously persons who never ought to have been permitted to carry fire-arms. Both were willing to sell their comrades to the public for a pardon. I am quite satisfied that both were induced to make their confessions by the promise of being made an approver if possible.

At the end of his confession Daryao Singh said that he had been told by the darogha that he would be made an approver. He explained to the Magistrate in the most convincing fashion that he was telling the truth for this reason, and that he knew that what he said might procure his conviction or his release. The Magistrate wrote the usual certificate in an unusual form. He said, "I believe the above statement was voluntarily made although it is quite possible that the Police Officers may have told him that he will be made an approver." It seems incredible that this confession should have been admitted in the face of this. Section 24 of the Evidence Act makes a confession inadmissible if it appears to have been caused by any inducement or promise. Both the Sessions Judge and the First Class Magistrate, and even the assessors, under the misdirection of the Judge, held that it was made voluntarily. Of course it was, in the colloquial sense of that term. Everything done willingly under a promise or inducement is done voluntarily. Every Judge ought to know that this section requires a confession to be made spontaneously, and without any inducement, and voluntarily, only in that sense. This is elementary. In the case of this appellant there is no independent evidence against him and he must be acquitted.

I am satisfied that the confession of Sibba Singh was also caused by the same inducement. He not only says so himself, but the Deputy Superintendent of Police said at the trial that the confession of Daryao Singh was not clear or satisfactory to his mind. He, therefore, took Sibba Singh with him to the spot to verify his statements, obviously with the intention of making him an approver instead of Daryao. He applied to the Magistrate for a pardon to Sibba Singh. This, for some reason which has not been stated in evidence, was refused. This seems to have upset the judgment of the Deputy Superintendent and he abandoned the plan of putting forward any accused as an approver, apparently trusting to evidence of identification against these two men, and possibly also to their confessions. But neither of them has been identified. In addition to this it is to be noted that these two accused, while awaiting trial, were put up to identify their co-accused. If neither of them was to be made an approver, this would be a natural proceeding. But neither of them was, and the Sessions Judge allowed evidence of identification by them, which in substance came to little, to be given at the trial. The Judge has failed to see that, inasmuch as an accused cannot give evidence while on his trial, secondary evidence of identification by him is clearly inadmissible. Evidence by an official witness of an identification is only admissible if the identifying witness is called to support his identification on oath. Both these confessions ought to be rejected. But in the case against Sibba Singh there are other features which I will examine hereafter.

The case against Umrai rests upon the inadmissible confession of Sibba Singh, and a remarkable incident alleged to have occurred when he was arrested. Sibba Singh had been left at the village of the dacoity in the custody of two constables. He had first disclosed, and handed over, ornaments looted at the dacoity, which were hidden on his premises. He was driven back on an ekka accompanied by the two constables. In the Sadar Bazaar, Shah-jahanpur, he pointed out Umrai to the constables, who arrested him as one of the dacoits. The Judge says this was on the 12th July. But he has made several slips in his dates, and it must have been the 12th June. Umrai was not searched. This was a piece of gross negligence. He was driven on the ekka to the Deputy Superintendent's where he was searched and nothing incriminating was found. When the party came away from the Deputy Superintendent it was decided to leave the ekka. Two coats belonging to the two constables had been spread on the ekka, and the four men had sat on them, the two prisoners, unhandcuffed, sitting between the constables when the coats were removed from the ekka, three ornaments, two being basibunds, and therefore, of some size, were found concealed beneath. The evidence of the finding is hopelessly contradictory. The ekkawala says the constable took down the coat; the constable says the ekkawala did. One says they were picked up from the ground; another says they were found under the coat. One constable and the ekkawala contradict one another as to which coat Umrai sat upon. The Judge has noted only one discrepancy, but the witnesses seem agreed upon hardly a single detail. Umrai's costume was such that concealment of these articles must have been difficult. It must also have been difficult to put them under the coats upon which the four men were sitting. It is necessary to find that he had them on him when he went, one week after the dacoity, and sat in a shop in the Bazaar. There is nothing suggestive about the shop, and I am unable to accept this story of the finding of the articles in his possession as satisfactorily proved. There is no other evidence against Umrai, and he also is entitled to an acquittal.

As for Sibba Singh, there is a good deal of evidence against him which the Sessions Judge, presumably because he relied upon the confession, has not dealt with in detail. The discovery of the ornaments at his house is clearly a fact discovered within the meaning of section 27 of the Evidence Act, and is admissible in evidence. As the guilt of Umrai is not established, the discovery of Umrai is not a fact within the meaning of this section. The discovery of the gun by the Police with the assistance of Sibba would have been a fact if it were clearly established that this had been used in the dacoity. But the Judge has rightly formed the opinion that it was not, and that the gun exhibited in the case, which was dropped by a dacoit during the struggle with the villagers was the gun covered by Sibba's license. He has given strong reasons for this inference, but the fact is corroborated by the evidence of two witnesses. Ganga Ram at the trial pointed to Sibba as the man who dropped the gun. Narpat said the same thing. He also said that he had told the Investigating Officer this before the hearing by the Committing Magistrate but that he forgot it when giving evidence. This happens not infrequently in criminal cases, and is often due to the omissions of the prosecuting officer in examining the witnesses. It appears to be an honest and natural statement. Narpat made a hopeless mess of the identification at the Jail. Sibba of course was not put up, but Narpat said he did not see Sibba when he came to the village. The fact that a witness makes mistakes in identification is no reason for discrediting his evidence in other matters. It is, indeed, strong evidence that he has not been coached by the Police, but is merely an enthusiast who is not to be trusted in recognizing faces seen under such circumstances. But it is another thing when a man is seen in moonlight struggling with a gun which he is forced to drop. It must be accepted that Sibba was using the gun which had been dropped at the dacoity that he had two guns in his possession, and that he voluntarily disclosed the second in order to disclaim his connection with the one dropped. This is quite sufficient to establish his guilt.

With reference to Khetal and Bhupal, they were identified by eight and four witnesses respectively. Making due allowance for those who made mistakes, and ignoring the confessions of Daryao and Sibba, which I have not read, the balance of evidence against these men is ample, and their convictions were right.

The result is, that the appeals of Daryao and Umrai are allowed and they must be discharged. The appeals of Sibba, Khetal and Bhupal are dismissed and their convictions and sentences confirmed.

I direct that a copy of this judgment be sent to the District Magistrate with a view to his considering the propriety of instituting proceedings against Daryao Singh under the bad livelihood sections. I have held that the confessions were inadmissible in law. But Daryao's statement may afford clues to evidence as to his conduct. It appears also that he is an associate of Sibba Singh, and identified the brother, Sukha, in Jail. It would be well if the District Magistrate were to draw the attention of the Magistrate who took the statements of Daryao and Sibba Singh to what I have said about section 24, and to inquire why two accused persons, who were not made approvers, were put up to identify their co-accused, and why the Deputy Superintendent's application for a pardon of Sibba Singh was refused. He should also draw the Deputy Superintendent's attention to the negligence of the constables in failing to search Umrai when he was arrested.

KRISHNAJI V. SUKHDEO.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 150-B OF 1922.

February 23, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Prideaux, A. J. C.

KRISHNAJI—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT

versus

SUKHDEO—PLAINTIFF—NON-APPLICANT.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 36—Document insufficiently stamped—Admission in Trial Court—Revision, interference in, whether competent.

If a deed has been admitted in evidence before the Trial Court, even though insufficiently stamped, its admissibility cannot be questioned by a Court exercising revisional jurisdiction.

Application for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Khamgaon, dated the 28th August 1922, in Civil Suit No. 851 of 1921.

Messrs. S. B. Gokhale, P. B. Gole and G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

Sir Bipin Krishna Bose and Mr. V. K. Rajwade, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—In this case the plaintiff Sukhdeo Narayan sued Krishnaji Mahadeo for the amount of Rs. 412-3-3 due on shop dealings which have been evidenced by a ruzu. Defendant does not dispute the correctness of the account nor the amount claimed; but he does dispute plaintiff's right to bring the suit. His Pleader stated: "If it is held that the plaintiff is the owner of the shop, then the defendant admits the claim." The plaintiff has been found to be the owner of the shop but, as this revision application shows, despite that fact defendant denies plaintiff's right to recover.

The applicant's contention was that the real owner of the shop was one Tani, grand-daughter of Narayan Kadtaji. Plaintiff's case was that he was adopted by the widow of Narayan Kadtaji in 1906 and whatever rights Tani had in the property in the shop were relinquished by her in favour of the plaintiff by a registered deed of relinquishment dated 18th September 1919. The lower Court held that it was unnecessary to go into the question of adoption as the suit could be disposed of on other grounds. It held that Tani satisfactorily executed the deed of relinquishment in favour of the plaintiff of her own free-will and that there was no coercion as urged by the defendant in the matter, Tani has been examined as a witness and she admits the deed.

The contention here is, that the deed of relinquishment cannot operate as it is insufficiently stamped. Section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 23 of the Contract Act are quoted. It is argued that the object of executing the release on a five rupees stamp-paper was to defraud the Government of stamp-duty and that it is really conveyance. I am also referred to the following cases: Mulraj Khatau v. Vishwanath Prabhuram (1), Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (2); Dharam Chand Boid v. Mouji Shahu (3) and Narak Lal v. Thagoo Lal (4). It is argued that the release does not operate as a conveyance and plaintiff can have no title to the shop because of it.

The document itself (Exhibit P-3) is headed as a deed of relinquishment. It is in favour of the plaintiff by Tani. It states:—

"You are the adopted son of Narayan Patil. My father Sadu Patil had already relinquished his right to the estate. You, that is, Sukhdeo Narayan Patil, are the true and proper owner of the estate of the deceased Sadu, son of Narayan Patil, and that estate is in your possession as owner. I have no right to or interest in the said estate in any way. As others sometimes raise an objection that I have a right to and interest in the aforesaid estate, I hereby state that I neither have nor had a right to or interest in the aforesaid estate in any way....."

The deed goes on to state:—

"I have relinquished my right to the moveable and immoveable property mentioned above, worth about Rs. 60,250 without taking anything from you. I have executed this deed of relinquishment of my own free-will and pleasure after full consultation."

HOTA VEERABHADRAYYA V. VENKATAKRISHNAN RAO.

The document states that Tani, the executor, had no right to the property and that being so, it is not clear how she can relinquish what she did not possess. She herself, examined as a witness, states that the shop belongs to the plaintiff and she has no interest in the shop. It was held in a mortgage case by this Court, the defendants being different, that on Narayan's death his separated son Sadasheo succeeded in preference to the widow and he in turn was succeeded by his daughter Tani. Now, Tani, as already stated, comes forward and states she has no interest in the shop and that statement seems sufficient for the purposes of this suit. The fact of the adoption is not challenged here.

The deed of release has been admitted in the case. That being so, this Court cannot question its admissibility: See Shidapa v. Irava (5) and section 36 of the Indian Stamp Act.

I think it has been sufficiently established that plaintiff has a right to sue in the present case and I also think that the finding of the lower Court is correct. I, therefore, dismiss this application for revision with costs. I fix Pleader's fee at Rs. 15.

—Secondary evidence—Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 30, 47—Transfer of dominant heritage—Easement, division of—Discontinuance of easement—Extent of easement.

Where the terms of a contract are reduced to writing, the only evidence which is allowable under section 91 of the Evidence Act to prove the terms thereof is the document itself or such secondary evidence as is mentioned in section 63 of the Act. Any other kind of documentary evidence is inadmissible in evidence. [p. 68, col. 2.]

Where a portion only of a dominant heritage passes to another by a sale-deed, the whole of the easement right cannot be deemed to have been transferred, notwithstanding that no right was specially reserved by the vendor in the sale-deed. Under section 30 of the Easements Act when a dominant heritage is divided between two or more persons, the easement becomes annexed to each of the sharers provided that such annexation is consistent with the terms of the instrument under which the division was made. [p. 69, col. 2.]

Under section 47 of the Easements Act, a continuous easement is extinguished when it totally ceases to be enjoyed as such for an unbroken period of 20 years. Such period should be reckoned in the case of a continuous easement from the day on which its enjoyment was obstructed by the servient owner, and in the case of a discontinued easement from the day on which it was last enjoyed by any person as dominant owner. [p. 70, col. 1.]

The exact nature of the right of easement acquired by a party is determined by the accustomed user and where the user proved is only the erection of a dam of flimsy structure across a stream, there is no right to erect a permanent dam. [p. 71, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—These four appeals relate to a triangular dispute between the zemindars of Polavaram, Gutala and Gangole, who will hereafter be styled by their territorial names. In 1824 before the creation of the Gangole estate, the proprietors of Polavaram and Gutala entered into a compromise with regard to the use of the water of the natural streams passing their two estates, and in 1829 an agreement is said to have been entered into by the two proprietors. In order to understand the case, it is necessary briefly to state the respective positions of the lands, and the streams passing through them. One stream, Kovvada Kalva, with which we are chiefly concerned, runs from west to east through, first of all, the Gutala estate, subsequently through Polavaram and again through Gutala and Polavaram. A feeder channel, Nakkalagayya Kalva, joins Kovvada Kalva at a point in the Polavaram estate, and another channel, Pedralla Kalva, also does the same but further to the east. Apparently, water was taken by the lands of both the estates from all these streams, but the Polavaram proprietor wished to utilise the water of the Pedralla Kalva exclusively for his own lands and he built a masonry dam which effectively diverted its waters from the Kovvada Kalva. In return for this, a compromise was entered into between the proprietors of Gutala and Polavaram permitting the former to dam up the Kovvada Kalva at a point above its junction with the Nakkalagayya Kalva, so as to prevent water coming down below the point of damming. Apparently, the Gutala proprietor did erect such a dam across the Kovvada Kalva in the year 1830, but it was almost immediately washed away and for some years no further dam was constructed. In 1843 the Gutala proprietor sold certain villages of his estate to one Hota Gangayya by Exhibit A. It is argued for Gutala that this transfer did not amount to a sale but it is perfectly clear, as found by the lower Court, and from the language of Exhibits A-1 and A-2, that the transfer did amount to a sale. The land thus transferred is now what is called Gangole muttah. In 1849 the Gangole muttah was separately registered as an estate by the Collector, and from that date we have the three estates with which we are here concerned. In 1848 Hota Gangayya started the erection of a dam across the Kovvada Kalva, and when objection was raised by Polavaram, Gutala supported his vendee. Apparently, the dam was not fully constructed, although the Sub-Collector had approved of Gangayya's action, for, it appears from Exhibit D-30, that the masonry dam had not been constructed in 1852. Again, in 1863, a further attempt to build the dam was made and also in 1869, 1876 and 1880, but these attempts all failed owing to opposition of Gutala and Polavaram. Nothing apparently happened after 1880 until 1898 when the then proprietor of Gangole, plaintiff in Original Suit No. 2 of 1916, assumed charge. In 1905 a dam was put up, but the District Magistrate, on the complaint of Gutala, ordered the blocking up of the Sagupadi channel which was fed by the water retained by that dam and it was not till 1911 that a complete masonry structure was put up. The structure consisted of two parts, firstly, what is called the valanka, which apparently means a sort of training bund running from one bank up the middle of the stream, and, secondly, a cross-dam from the end of that bund to the opposite bank. The cross-bund was ordered to be removed in 1911, but the valanka was allowed to remain. Gangole has, therefore, brought this suit, Original Suit No. 2 of 1916, for a declaration of his right to construct a cross-bund of any material he pleases and for an injunction restraining the defendants, namely, the zemindars of Polavaram and Gutala, from interfering with his enjoyment. Gutala has filed a cross-suit, Original Suit No. 1 of 1917, against Gangole only, in which he asks for the removal of the Valanka built in 1911, and he also asks for a declaration of the parties' respective rights in the water of the Kovvada channel. The Government Agent in trying these suits has held that Gangole has no right to erect a permanent cross-bund in the channel, but he has not dismissed the suit but has declared that he is entitled to use such portion of the water of Kovvada Kalva as is reasonable to the enjoyment of his estate as an upper riparian owner. He has left the exact extent of that right and the manner in which it is to be enjoyed to be determined in execution. In the cross-suit, he has dismissed the suit entirely although in the first suit he has held that Gangole was not entitled to put up a permanent cross-bund.

Appeals are now filed against both decrees by Gangole (Appeals Nos. 283 and 304) and by Gutala (Appeals Nos. 334 and 350).

I have talked of this compromise in 1829 as an admitted fact. It is, however, admitted only by Gutala, and, while Polavaram does not entirely deny the existence of some compromise, he contends that the compromise evidenced by Exhibits E, E-1 and E-2 is not in accordance with the compromise actually effected. So far as Gutala is concerned, the compromise in terms of Exhibit E is admitted, and that document itself is produced by them. It is contended for Polavaram that Exhibit E has not been proved and that there is no other evidence of the terms of the compromise.

Exhibit E is a copy of the original document purporting to have been executed by the Polavaram zemindar in favour of the zemindar of Gutala. It is only a private copy and it is neither signed nor dated. The learned Government Agent, in considering its admissibility, has apparently relied on circumstantial evidence in proof of its genuineness. In one part of his judgment he seems to rely on section 90 of the Evidence Act on the ground that section 90 has been held to be applicable not only to original documents but also to copies. But he has gone considerably further than the presumptions warranted by section 90 without really considering the exact effect of that section, and sums up his finding as follows:—

“The copy produced appears to be genuine and ancient. It gives Polavaram what on the face of it is a reasonable quid pro quo. The original is lost. The custody is proper. All that is not proved is the signature and the handwriting, but the collateral evidence and the circumstances point to its genuineness. For these reasons I accept Exhibit E.” There is no doubt a considerable body of evidence which goes to show that there was some sort of compromise and that its terms were somewhat similar to, if not exactly the same as, the terms of Exhibit E: but there is absolutely no proof of the document. The writer is unknown and it does not even purport to be written by any particular person. The date of its making is also unknown and, therefore, it cannot be said with any certainty that it is thirty years old nor does it purport to be thirty years old. If, therefore, the document is to be admitted in evidence it must be proved in some way or another. It has not been proved by any witness and the presumption in section 90 cannot apply, for that only relates to documents which purport or are proved to be thirty years old and are produced from proper custody. This is not one of such documents and, therefore, the limited presumption of section 90 cannot apply. One of the cases relied on by the Government Agent for admitting Exhibit E is Ponnambalath Parapravan v. Karoth Sankaran Nair (1), but, from the brief judgment in that case, it does not appear that the copy was not proved, but, on the contrary, it would appear that there was some evidence adduced in regard to the copy. Here we have no evidence at all as to the making of the copy. The document not being proved to be thirty years old and being only a private copy proof would be necessary that it was compared with the original before it could be admitted in evidence. As there is no evidence that Exhibit A conforms to any of the provision of the Evidence Act (see section 63) in regard to secondary evidence it is not admissible in evidence and must be rejected.

Exhibit E-2 is a copy of the petition submitted by the zemindar of Polavaram and it contains the terms of the compromise though not in exactly the same language as Exhibit E. The same objections apply to this document as to Exhibit E, although we have got the evidence of one witness that the writing of it resembles the writing of one Vedlamani Seshayya, who was a clerk in the estate office. Here, again, the document is not proved, and does not purport to be thirty years old. Section 90 is, therefore, inapplicable.

There is also another objection to Exhibit 2 in that it is apparently a copy of a copy. We find that the words ‘compared by Patri Rayappa’ appear on the document and that the signature ‘Patri Rayappa’ is only a copy. It would, therefore, appear that Exhibit E-2 was a copy prepared by some private person unknown of the copy granted by the Collector's Office.

Exhibit E-1 is a copy of a petition purporting to have been submitted by the zemindars of Gutala and Polavaram. But here, again, the same objections apply. So far as Polavaram is concerned, therefore, the terms of the compromise have not been proved by Exhibit E series.

It is then suggested that there is a good deal of other documentary evidence which goes to prove these terms, but, unfortunately, section 91 of the Evidence Act prohibits any such evidence being given, for the only evidence of this contract which is allowable under that section is the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents: and none of the evidence which is now adduced comes within the category of secondary evidence contained in section 63.

An attempt has been made to show that he has acquired such a right by user and prescription, but it has been found in the lower Court and admitted in arguments, that until 1911 no masonry dam had ever been constructed. His prayer, therefore, for a declaration that he is entitled to put up a dam made of any substance he pleases must fail and his suit must be dismissed so far as Polavaram, the first defendant is concerned.

As Gutala has admitted Exhibit E and in fact relies upon it, it will be necessary to consider, so far as the proprietors of Gutala are concerned, what rights the plaintiff has. The Gangole muttah was sold to the plaintiff in 1843 and another deed was executed in 1849 at the time when the transfer of registry was effected by the Collector. The contention now is, that all the rights conferred by Polavaram upon Gutala in 1829 passed by that sale to Gangole. Neither of the sale-deeds contains any recital as to rights of water or any reference to the compromise, but it is urged that the right was appertaining to the land which was sold to Gangole. The right to dam the stream and prevent flow of water to the Polavaram estate which is given by Exhibit E is claimed to be an easement right, the dominant heritage being the Gutala estate, which at that time comprised also the Gangole muttah, and the servient heritage being the Polavaram estate. It is contended that, as no right has been reserved in the sale-deed, the whole of this easement right must be deemed to have been transferred. It must, however, be observed that the right when created was a right pertaining to the whole of the Gutala estate, and must be deemed to have been for the benefit of the whole estate. In fact, we have evidence that in 1830 a bund was constructed and the Sagupadi channel which takes off from that bund was extended so as to water not only the villages of Gangole muttah, but also the Gutala villages lower down the stream. It is, therefore, difficult to understand how this right, which included a benefit to the estate retained by the vendor Gutala, can be said to have passed wholly to Gangole, who became the owner of only a portion of the dominant heritage. Under section 30 of the Easements Act, when a dominant heritage is divided between two or more persons the easement becomes annexed to each of the shares, provided that such annexation is consistent with the terms of the instrument under which the division was made. Here the annexation of the right to Gangole alone would be to create an easement in Gangole as against the remainder of the Gutala estate, for the effect of damming up the waters in the Gangole muttah would not only deprive Polavaram of water but also the lower parts of Gutala. No doubt, an arrangement might have been made for watering these lower villages by means of a continuation of the channel which waters the Gangole estate. But in order to enjoy such a right it would be necessary for Gutala to have a right to enter upon the land of Gangole in order to reap such a benefit or, alternatively, an easement right to take water through Gangole would be conferred on Gutala. In the absence of a definite agreement to that effect, no such right can be presumed in Gutala, and, therefore, it appears to me that the terms of the sale are quite inconsistent with the idea that the easement right was wholly transferred to Gangole. Whether Gangole and Gutala still possess a joint right against Polavaram it is not necessary here to discuss, because so far as Polavaram is concerned, this suit must be dismissed, and no attempt has been made by Gutala in their litigation to assert such a right.

One fact relied on by Mr. Venkatarama Sastri for Gangole is that, in 1848, when Hota Gangayya commenced the erection of a dam, he was supported by the proprietor of Gutala: but it must be remembered that at that date Gangole had not been separately registered and consequently would not be recognised by the Revenue Authorities. The registered proprietor of Gangole muttah was at that time the Gutala zemindar and, therefore, there was nothing extraordinary in the zemindar of Gutala conducting the proceedings with reference to the dam in opposition to the Polavaram estate on behalf of his vendee. This one circumstance certainly cannot be deemed to prove that Gutala intended to part with all his rights under Exhibit E by the sale-deed in 1843. It is possible that Gutala did not, at that date, care very much whether the right was exercised by Gangole or by himself, but was anxious to assert his right against Polavaram. We see that in 1867 when further disputes arose Gutala definitely opposed Gangole's attempts to raise a dam and from that time forward there have been continuous disputes between the parties. I must hold, therefore, that the Gangole proprietor has failed to establish the right claimed in his plaint.

I think also for another reason that his suit must fail. Under section 47 of the Easements Act, a continuous easement is extinguished when it totally ceases to be enjoyed as such for an unbroken period of twenty years. Such period should be reckoned in the case of a continuous easement from the day on which its enjoyment was obstructed by the servient owner, and in the case of a discontinuous easement from the day on which it was last enjoyed by any person as dominant owner. Assuming that this is a continuous easement as contended for by Gangole, obstruction was begun in 1867, or certainly in 1876, and has continued up till the time of filing this suit. Admittedly, the permanent dam was never constructed until 1911 and, therefore, it is clear that the right had not been enjoyed for an unbroken period of at least twenty years prior to 1911. On that ground also Gangole's suit must fail.

These findings might be sufficient also to dispose of the connected suit in which Gutala sues for the removal of the masonry Valanka, but a great deal of evidence has been adduced to show that the Gangole proprietor has from time to time been putting up Valankas and cross-dams of a non-permanent character and thereby diverting the water of the Kovvada Kalva into his Sagupadi channel, and the Government Agent has ordered in his decrees that the extent of this right, which he terms the right of the riparian owner, should be determined in execution. No doubt, as the Government Agent is responsible for the due administration of the Scheduled District and for the peace and order therein, his decree may be said to be equitable as giving an opportunity to the parties to come to terms as to their respective rights to the user of the water a question which can only be accurately settled with great difficulty. Treating the question as one of law, it seems to me clear that the Government Agent's decree cannot stand. When he found that Gangole had no right to build a permanent cross-dam, he ought to have dismissed Original, Suit No. 2 of 1916. Similarly as regards the Valanka, which apparently is now a solid structure extending some 200 yards into the stream, an order for its removal or at least diminution should have been passed. It is suggested that in the case of the Valanka which only diverts the water of the stream and does not dam it up, it is really immaterial whether it is constructed of sand or tatties or loose stones, or whether it is made of stones and mortar. It is, however, quite clear that the temporary flimsy structures which had been put before were constantly washed away and, therefore, for long periods constituted no obstruction at all to the flow of water to Polavaram and lower Gutala were as the existence of a permanent masonry Valanka must always divert a certain quantity of water, which in times of low water might be of considerable importance to the lower proprietors. Gangole has in no way established his right to put up such a permanent structure, for I have held that the right under

RAMJAS AGARWALA & MESSRS. LINTON MOLESWORTH & CO., LD.

Exhibit E has not passed to him, and, therefore, I think, that an order must be made for the removal of Valanka. It is, perhaps, unfortunate that Gangole should be driven to building temporary structures, which naturally entail considerably additional expense, as they are repeatedly washed away and have to be rebuilt; but, as a question of right, it must be held that nothing further has been established by him. The right he has obtained can only be a right by user or prescription and it is incumbent on him, if he claims any particular right, to prove that he is entitled to it. In this Court in Second Appeal No. 11 of 1904 the erection of a permanent dam having been constructed prior to 1922, no right to such a dam can have been acquired by prescription. The user proved is only the erection of the flimsy structures. As pointed out in Bakhtavathsala Ammal v. Secretary of State (2), the question in each case must be, what is the exact nature of the right which is shown by the evidence to have been acquired by the party? In this case Gangole has failed to show that he is entitled to a permanent Valanka as now existing and, therefore, his defence in Original Suit No. 1 of 1917 must fail.

As a rule, Original Suit No. 2 of 1916 must be dismissed with costs two sets, and in Original Suit No. 1 of 1917 there will be a decree, directing the removal of the Valanka within four months with costs and that in default plaintiffs be at liberty to remove it and recover costs thereof, to be determined by the lower Court, from defendant. Gangole will pay costs in Appeal No. 283 (2 sets) and in Appeal No. 350 (one set). In the other appeals parties will bear their own costs.

Devadoss, J.—I agree.

Defendants second party agreed to sell certain land to plaintiff No. 1. They subsequently sold the land to defendants first party and plaintiff No. 2 in certain shares. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 sued the defendants for specific performance of the agreement in favour of plaintiff No. 1, for possession of the entire land and for damages and mesne profits and in the alternative for partition of the share sold to plaintiff No. 2 and for accounts and profits of that share.

Held, (1) that the right to the reliefs claimed by the plaintiffs did not arise out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions; [p. 73, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This is an application by the plaintiffs against an order, dated the 9th March 1922, passed by the Subordinate Judge at Dhanbad, whereby he has held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. The material allegations of the plaintiffs as set out in the plaint are shortly these:—

Defendants Nos. 3 to 20 entered into a partnership and acquired 66 bighas 11 cottas of land and started a colliery therein

RAMJAS AGARWALLA V. MESSRS. LINTON MOLESWORTH & CO., LD.

In August 1918 they negotiated for sale of the land and the colliery with the plaintiff No. 1 and in June 1919 the terms of the alleged sale were settled between plaintiff No. 1 and the defendants Nos. 3 to 20. It was agreed that the defendants Nos. 3 to 20 would attend the office of the plaintiff's Solicitor the next day, to execute a formal agreement and receive a sum of Rs. 5,000 as earnest-money, but that the defendants Nos. 3 to 20 failed to do so, that thereafter the defendants Nos. 3 to 20 carried on negotiations for sale with others and ultimately they negotiated with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and on the plaintiff No. 1's coming to know of this fact, he served a notice through his Solicitor upon the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 20 informing them of the agreement with him and calling upon the latter to carry out the agreement. The defendants Nos. 3 to 9, however, sold 13 annas odd share in the land and the colliery to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in November 1919 and the defendants Nos. 10 to 20 sold the remaining share to the plaintiff No. 2 in September 1919. Thereupon, in December 1919 the present suit was brought by both the plaintiffs and the reliefs asked for in the plaint are as follows:—

(1) That a decree be passed for specific performance of the agreement with the plaintiff No. 1; (2) that a declaration be made that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 cannot retain possession of the property in suit; (3) for possession of the entire property; (4) for damages and mesne profits; (5) for dissolution of partnership and appointment of a Receiver pending the dissolution; (6) that if a decree for specific performance be not passed then a decree for partition may be passed; and (7) for recovery of profits after taking accounts.

Issues were settled on the 8th of March 1922 and Issue No. 2 was to the effect, "is the suit bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action?" The learned Subordinate Judge tried this issue, and by his order dated the 9th of March 1922 held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and he gave an opportunity to the plaintiffs to elect as to which of them should proceed with the suit and for which relief and to amend the plaint accordingly, and he gave them time till the 27th of March within which the plaintiff should make the election and make the necessary amendment, and it was ordered that in the event of their failure to do so, the suit should stand dismissed. The plaintiffs apply for revision of this order.

In my opinion the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is perfectly right and cannot be interfered with. It will appear that upon the allegation made in the plaint the two plaintiffs cannot properly join in the present action. The claim of the plaintiff No. 1 is based upon an agreement alleged to have been entered into by and between the defendants Nos. 3 and 20 and himself for sale of the land and the colliery. The claim of the plaintiff No. 2 is based upon his purchase of September 1919 from the defendants Nos. 10 to 20. The plaintiff No. 1 has absolutely nothing to do with the claim of the plaintiff No. 2 so far as possession and partition of the plaintiff N. 2's share is concerned. Similarly, the plaintiff No. 2 has no concern with the relief claimed by the plaintiff No. 1. If the two plaintiffs had brought the suits separately there would not be any question of law or fact which would be common to the two suits. The rights to the reliefs claimed by the two plaintiffs did not arise out of the same act or transaction, or series of acts or transactions, and the joinder of the two plaintiffs and the causes of action alleged by them is not authorised by any law or principle.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner relies on the cases of Fakirapa v. Rudrapa (1) and Pinapati Mrutyumjaya v. Pinapati Janakamma (2), but these two cases have absolutely nothing to do with the facts of the present case. In the first case the suit was brought by the widow and the alleged adopted son of one Irapa for a declaration that a certain property attached in execution of a decree against one Rudrapa belonged to them and not to the judgment-debtor, and the suit was brought to set aside the attachment. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's suit, but on appeal by the defendant the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the interest of the two plaintiffs were antagonistic and it held that the suit was bad for misjoinder; of parties. On second appeal to the High Court it was held that there was no misjoinder; the two plaintiffs were both jointly interested in disproving the defendant's title and their claims were in no way antagonistic and that they could, therefore, issue jointly. In the second case the widow and the adopted son of a deceased person joined together as plaintiffs and brought a suit to recover a certain sum of money payable by the defendants to the deceased. The money was undoubtedly due to one or the other of them and they were agreed that either should take it. The widow joined as plaintiff because the right of the adopted son was questioned. It was held that the suit was not bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs. It is argued by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that in the present case the plaintiff No. 2 agrees to give up his interest in favour of the plaintiff No. 1 if he succeeds in establishing his agreement, and, therefore, the interest of the two plaintiffs are not antagonistic; but that would not have given them a right to join two totally dissimilar claims in the same action. In my opinion, the right to relief claimed by the two plaintiffs is not in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction, nor is there any common question of law or fact arising out of the separate claims of the two plaintiffs and, therefore, the joinder of the two plaintiffs and their causes of action in the present case is not authorised by the provisions of O. I, r. 1, or any other provision of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(2) 26 M. 647 (F. B.).

NAGESHWAR PRASAD v. JAI NARAYAN.

Moreover, the present application is made against an interlocutory order passed by the Subordinate Judge, and it is settled law that the High Court will not interfere in revision with such orders unless some irreparable injury is caused to any party thereby. Here, we are informed that the plaintiff No. 2 has paid no Court-fee upon the reliefs claimed by him and there is no irreparable injury caused to any party by the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs two gold mohurs. The plaintiffs may make the election and the necessary amendment of the plaint within two weeks of the arrival of the record in the Court below, failing which the suit shall stand dismissed.

Mullick, J.—In my opinion the frame of the suit is bad, both under O. I, r. 3 and O. II, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. I am also of opinion that this Court cannot interfere in this case in exercise of its powers of revision, and that no case has been made out for the exercise of our powers of superintendence.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order re-transmitting a decree for sale of ancestral property to the Collector for execution. The decree had originally been transmitted to the Collector for execution on the 18th January 1917. Subsequently, it transpired that Walayat Husain, one of the judgment-debtors, had died and Basdeo, one of the decree-holders, was also dead. The Collector sent the papers back for necessary action with a report of these two deaths. The Court in charge of the execution proceeding issued notice to Hashmat Ali to show cause why his name should not be substituted in place of Walayat Husain, deceased. The date fixed was 3rd September 1920. On that day Hashmat Ali's summons was returned unserved. The decree-holder was ordered to file his correct address and 16th November 1920 was fixed. Between these two dates, on 13th September 1920, the decree-holder put in an application in which he said that the heir of Walayat Hussain was Hashmat Ali and that Hashmat Ali's name was already arrayed among the judgment-debtors. Upon this application an order dated 29th October 1920 was passed that Walayat Hussain's name was to be struck off and that the decree-holder was to amend the execution application. The case was then put up on 16th November 1920. There was no appearance for the decree-holder; the judgment-debtors also were not present. The execution application was struck off in default. That order was proper.

Under the order of 3rd September 1920 the decree-holder had been directed to file a correct address and process-fee for giving notice to Hashmat Ali. He had never been excused from this. Under the order dated 29th October 1920 he had been directed to amend the execution application. No doubt, the amendment in such cases should be made by the Court itself, but before making the amendment the Court was entitled to be satisfied that Hashmat Ali was in fact the heir of Walayat Husain.

When this case went back on remand evidence was given that Walayat Husain in fact left a son who is heir. The decree-holders' Counsel says that he was under the impression that the order dated 29th October 1920 was an order which in some way excused him from making an appearance on 16th November 1920. He also says that he did not communicate with his client. We see no justification for his omission. Later on, application was made for transmitting the decree again to the Collector and this application was granted by the Subordinate Judge. That order was appealed against to this Court on the ground that it was without jurisdiction, and the case was remanded, with a direction to the learned Subordinate Judge to determine, after taking such evidence as the parties may adduce, whether there was any sufficient reason for the revival asked for.

It is to be borne in mind that O. IX, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to execution proceedings. Execution applications are practically never restored, the reason is that fresh applications can be filed. In the order of remand it was said: "At least as strong grounds would be required to justify an application under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, as would be required on an application for review."

The only ground set up here is that Hashmat Ali, the alleged heir of Walayat Hussain, was already a party to the execution proceeding so that nothing was required to be done beyond the striking off of Walayat Husain's name. But as we have shown the Court was bound to satisfy itself that Hashmat Ali was the heir (which indeed it was not); and the application was rightly struck off for the non-appearance of the decree-holders. This being so, there was no ground for restoring the application.

We allow the appeal, set aside the order transmitting the execution to the Collector and we restore the order dated 16th November 1920 under which the application for execution was struck off. The respondents will pay costs of the appellant.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 10, 24-(1)(a), proviso, 35—jurisdiction of District Court—Residence, what amounts to—'Unable to pay his debts,' meaning of.

LAKSHMINARAYANA AIYAR v. SUBRAMANYA AIYAR.

A debtor who remains within the limits of the jurisdiction of a District Court is resident therein and is entitled to present an application to that Court to adjudicate him an insolvent although he has no permanent or continuous residence within the District and may have even occasionally gone outside the District and returned. [p. 76, col. 1.]

Where all the properties of a debtor are under attachment to a creditor and his petition for permission to execute a private sale of the properties is negatived, the mere fact that there is an apparent surplus of assets over the gross debts does not prove that the debtor is not unable to pay his debts within the meaning of section 10 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 76, col. 1.]

Under the proviso to section 24 (1) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, a debtor is required to furnish only prima facie proof of the fact that he is unable to pay his debts for the purpose of being adjudicated insolvent. [p. 76, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

A. A. O. No. 171 of 1922.

This is an appeal against an order by the District Judge of Tanjore West annulling the adjudication of the appellant-debtor under section 35, Provincial Insolvency Act. The lower Court has given two reasons for its orders. First, that the debtor was not resident on the date of the presentation of the petition within its jurisdiction; secondly, that he was not proved to be, as section 10 requires, unable to pay his debts.

As regards the question raised by each of these grounds of decision, it must be pointed out that the amount of proof which can be expected of the debtor, the burden undoubtedly being on him, will vary very greatly with reference to the circumstances of the case.

Here the debtor throughout has alleged that he was, at the date of the petition, a resident in West Tanjore District, and there is the verified statement in his petition to that effect and also a counter-affidavit filed in the present proceedings in the lower Court. It is further not shown that he was cross-examined in any way on his allegations. Against that, there is only the fact that the present respondent, first creditor, did not actually deny the residence in the District and has never said where, in his opinion, the debtor in fact resides, but only in his petition under section 35 put the debtor to proof of his residence in the following terms: "The alleged insolvent has not given prima facie proof of his right to present the petition or that the District Court has jurisdiction to entertain the same." The contentions of the opposing creditor being thus indefinite, in our opinion, it was not necessary for the lower Court to complain of the absence of additional affirmative evidence on the part of the debtor. It in fact proceeded mainly with reference to the returns on certain processes addressed to it. There is, first, the return dated January 1920, that he was not to be found in his house at Tirupapuliyar, South Arcot District, because he had left it for a place in West Tanjore. That return, however, so far as it is evidence on the material point, the debtor's possession of a house and residence in Tirupapuliyar, does not necessarily involve more than that the process-server adopted for his purpose, the assertion of the present respondent, at whose instance the process was issued, that the debtor was residing in Tirupapuliyar, and further this piece of evidence, so far as it is admissible, relates to a date 8 months before the date of the presentation of the debtor's petition. Next, reference has been made by the lower Court to the fact that, when another notice was sent on 25th March 1920, the return was that the debtor had gone away and his whereabouts were unknown. There is also the fact that the insolvent in his counter-petition in these proceedings gave his address as Kuttalam in the Mayawaram Taluk. That is no doubt just outside the border of the West Tanjore District, but it is very near to the adjoining border of East Tanjore District. We have been referred to definitions of "residence" adopted by two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court for the purpose of construction of O. IX, Civil Procedure Code, in Kumud Nath Roy Chaulhry v. Jatindra Nath Chaulhry (1). But we are not prepared to adopt those definitions as exhaustive. We can quite understand that a person, especially a person in the financial position of the debtor, may not have any permanent or continuous residence. It is, in our opinion, sufficient that we have no reason for doubting that he has remained, as he said, within the limits of the District of West Tanjore, though he may have occasionally gone outside the District and returned to it. It should be said that the debtor in the lower Court and in his ground of appeal here was foolish enough to rely on a case of residence in a house in Kuttalam, which belonged to him and which he had let to somebody else. That he has given a bad reason in support of his contention does not debar us from holding that it is sufficiently supported otherwise by his own statement in his petition and his counter-affidavit, which has not been shown to be incorrect.

Turning to the second ground on which the lower Court annulled the adjudication that the debtor was not proved to be unable to pay his debts, we refer to the proviso to section 24 (1) (a), Provincial Insolvency Act, as showing that the debtor can, for the present purpose, be required to furnish only such proof as to satisfy the Court that there are prima facie grounds for believing his allegation. The facts as set out in his petition, and those facts were not disputed in the lower Court and are not disputed here, are that his debts amount to over Rs. 40,000 and his assets to over Rs. 51,000. No doubt, there is, on these figures, a balance of about Rs. 8,000 in his favour. But he has contended further that, all his property being under attachment by the second respondent and his petition for permission to execute a private sale of the properties having been practically negatived, the surplus of assets over debts is only apparent. We have not been given the exact terms of the proposal for a private sale or of the order of the Court rejecting it. It is, however, sufficient that the properties are under attachment and presumably would be sold and that it is accordingly not possible for the debtor to realize the price himself or to use them for the payment of his debts.

There is, next, the material consideration that the realisation by the debtor under pressure or by the Official Receiver or otherwise by the Court by public sale is not likely to be advantageous and it is even less likely to result in the property fetching a fair price. That is the common experience of private sales under pressure and of Court sales. It is, of course, impossible to say with any accuracy how for the price which would be realized in these circumstances, would be less than the fair value of the properties, if realized with reference to ordinary considerations. It is not, in our opinion, clear that the margin between what, it is not disputed, would be the fair value of the properties and the debts will not be wiped out in the course of an immediate realization. There is enough in the undisputed allegations of the debtor as to his circumstances to satisfy the requirements of the provision of law already referred to, and there is nothing in evidence on the other side. We, therefore, must dissent from the lower Appellate Court's conclusion that the debtor has failed to prove inability to pay his debts.

These findings entail the success of the appeal and the setting aside of the lower Court's order with costs throughout. The cases will go back to the Official Receiver who will proceed with the administration of the estate.

A. A. A. O. No. 37 of 1922.

The order annulling the adjudication of the present appellant debtor having been set aside, we must set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court in Appeal against Appellate Order No. 37 of 1922 and remand the appeal to it for disposal in the merits.

Costs to date will be costs in the cause and be provided for in the order to be passed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 50, presumption under—Rent receipts for twenty years, production of, whether necessary.

Under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act what has to be established is, not that rent has been actually paid at a uniform rate during twenty years, but that the tenant has held at a rate of rent which has not been changed during twenty years. Such holding may be established even if it is not proved that rent has actually been paid during a portion of the twenty years.

Mohini Kanta Saha v. Preo Nath Neogy, 67 Ind. Cas. 381; 35 C. L. J. 309; (1922) A. I. R. (C) 141; 49 C. 661, followed.

To entitle a tenant to the benefit of the presumption embodied in section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is not necessary for him to produce receipts for a continuous series of twenty years. If some of the receipts are missing uniform payment may be proved for the wanting years by other proof and from surrounding circumstances.

Kattyani Debea v. Soonduree Debea, 2 W. R. Act X Rul. 60, Elahae Buksh v. Roopun Teles, 7 W. R. 284, followed.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 18th May 1918, affirming that of the Revenue Officer, Krishnagar, dated the 14th December 1916.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Barnashi Bashi Mukherjee), for the Appellants:—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We were recorded as settled *raiya*s. The first Court considered a number of rent receipts from 1886 downwards for more than 20 years showing a uniform rate of rent. It held that we were not entitled to a presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On appeal the same view has been held by the Court of Appeal below on the ground that it is necessary to produce rent receipts for 20 consecutive years prior to the suit to entitle the tenant to the benefit of the presumption. I submit that view is clearly wrong. See Mohini Kanta Saha v. Preo Nath Neogy (1).

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar (with him Babus Amarendra Nath Bose and Upendra Narain Bagchi), for the Respondents.—The appeal is concluded by findings of fact although they may be grossly wrong. The Courts below have doubted the genuineness of all the rent receipts produced. I submit, under such circumstances, and for the reasons assigned by the Courts below, it is clear that the presumption under section 50 would not apply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the tenants in a proceeding instituted by their landlords under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for assessment of fair and equitable rents in respect of the lands in their possession. The question in controversy is as to the status of the tenants. They were recorded as settled *raiya*s in the finally published Record of Rights. The landlords thereupon instituted the present suit for settlement of fair and equitable rent. The tenants contended that they were *raiya*s at fixed rent. In order to establish their allegation, they relied upon the presumption embodied in section 50, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that if it is proved in any proceeding under the Act that either a tenure holder or raiya and his predecessors-in-interest have held, at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the 20 years immediately before the institution of the proceedings, it shall be presumed until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. On establishment of this presumption, sub-section (1), the raiya becomes entitled under section 50 (1) to protection from enhancement of rent. The tenants produced rent receipts from 1885 to 1895 and from 1904 to 1911 in order to show that they held the tenancy at the uniform of rent of Rs. 13-13-13 gds. The Settlement Officer held that as no receipts were produced for the years 1896 to 1903 the tenants were not entitled to the benefit of the presumption. In his opinion, it is necessary to produce rent receipts for 20 consecutive years antecedent to the suit, to entitle the tenant to the benefit of the presumption. On appeal the Special Judge has adopted the same view of the law. He has, however, stated in his judgment that the receipt produced for the year 1890 was suspicious and he has added that the genuineness of the receipt from 1885 to 1889 was doubtful. The reason assigned by the Special Judge for his conclusion that the receipt produced for the year 1890 was suspicious has been criticised in this Court, and it has been pointed out that, although the receipt bears on the face of it the figures "1269" instead of "1297" in writing, we find words which leave no doubt that the receipts were genuine. We are, however, not directly concerned with the reasons assigned by the Special Judge for his conclusion upon a question of fact. The fact remains that even if we accept the view that the receipt for 1890 was suspicious and that the receipts for 1885 to 1889 were of doubtful genuineness, still we have receipts from 1904 to 1911. A period of 20 years intervenes between the earliest and the latest of these receipts. Consequently, the question cannot be avoided whether it is necessary for a tenant to produce receipts for a continuous series of 20 years to entitle him to the benefit of the presumption embodied in section 50. There can be no doubt that the view taken by the Courts below upon this matter is erroneous.

In the case of Kattyani Debea v. Soondures Debea (2) it was laid down as follows:—"It is not absolutely necessary that dakhilas should be for 20 consecutive years before the date of suit, for it might frequently happen that parties, with every right to the presumption, might lose one or two dakhilas here and there, during such a long period, and it would be manifestly unjust to deprive them of the benefit allowed by law when no suspicion could arise of misfeasance, merely because one or two of these receipts has been mislaid or lost. In the present case, the missing dakhilas are for years about the middle of the period, and we do not think that their non-appearance should defeat the special appellant's claim to the presumption." The same view was affirmed in Elahee Bukhsh v. Roopun Telee (3) where Mr. Justice Pundit said as follows: "When receipts are filed, not for the entire period of 20 years preceding suit, but some are wanting here, and some there in that interval, still uniform payment may be proved otherwise for the wanting years by other proof, and from surrounding circumstances." This view is undoubtedly correct, upon a true interpretation of the language used by the Legislature in section 50. What was to be established is, not that rent has been actually paid at uniform rate during 20 years, but that the tenant has held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during 20 years. Such holding may be established, even if it is not proved that rent has actually been paid during a portion of the 20 years. This is precisely the interpretation adopted by this Court in Mohini Kanta Saha v. Preo Nath Neogy (1). To return to the concrete facts of this case, assume it to be established that the rent has been paid at the rate alleged by the tenants during the year 1891 to 1895 as also during the years 1904 to 1911. It is theoretically possible that in the interval there may have been an enhancement of the rent followed by a reduction, so as to make the rent payable in 1904 identical with that paid in 1895. But it is really for the Court of fact to decide, from all the circumstances of the case, whether the principle of continuity or the principle of discontinuity should be applied. In this connection, it must be observed that it is open to the landlord to rebut such evidence as may be produced by the tenants, by the production of counter-foils of receipts and collection papers. It is clear that the case has not been considered from the right point of view by either of the Courts below.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case sent back to that Court to be re-considered. We leave it to the Special Judge to decide whether the parties should be allowed to adduce additional evidence. Costs will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

PESHAWAR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 115-68
OF 1921.

July 3, 1922.

Present.—Mr. Pison, J. C.

ABDUL MANAN, SON OF ABDUL WAHAB —APPELLANT

versus

Musammat FAROQA AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.Custom—Will—Muhammadzai Pathans of Charsadda Tahsil, Peshawar District—Sonless proprietor—Will in favour of daughters.

Custom is a mere crystallisation of public opinion in matters affecting the social and economic life of a community. [p. 85, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the practice of gift-making has established itself, the effect must be to incline public opinion favourably towards the practice of testamentary bequests, which are really in the nature of deferred gifts which are more easily revocable. [p. 80, col. 1.]

Bano v. Fateh Khan, 48 P. R. 1903; 111 P. L. R. 1903 (F. B.), referred to.

Restrictions placed upon testamentary disposition with a view to safeguarding the interests of sons have little force as presumptive evidence that a sonless proprietor is governed by similar restrictions safeguarding the interests of mere reversioners. [p. 81, col. 2.]

When the practice of Will-making establishes itself, it is the sonless proprietor who obtains the first power of bequest. [p. 81, col. 2.]

A sonless Muhammadzai proprietor of the Peshawar District is competent to bequeath the whole of his estate to his daughters, married or unmarried, in the presence of reversioners. [p. 86, col. 2.]

The history and conditions of the settlement of Pathan tribes in the different Districts of the North-West Frontier Province are widely dissimilar, and, in ascertaining the customs of the Pathans of the Peshawar District, no useful inferences can be drawn from customs obtaining in the other Districts of the Province. [p. 80, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Peshawar, dated the 28th July 1921, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Charsadda, dated 27th May, 1920.

JUDGMENT.—The parties in this case are Muhammadzai Pathans of the Charsadda Tahsil in the Peshawar District. Fazal Rahman, a sonless proprietor, executed a Will bequeathing the whole of his estate to his four daughters, subject to a life-interest in favour of his widow. Two of the daughters are married and two are unmarried. The nephews of the deceased proprietor sue for a declaration that it is invalid as against their reversionary rights. The question of the life-interest secured to the widow by the Will need not be further considered, inasmuch as the creation of such a life-interest is strictly in accordance with custom independently of the Will, and cannot be challenged. The question which I have to decide is, whether or not a sonless proprietor of Muhammadzai tribe is competent, by custom, to bequeath the whole of his estate to his daughters as against the interests of his reversionary heirs.

The issue may be regarded as implying two questions—(a) whether a sonless proprietor can make a Will in favour of his daughters at all, and (b) whether, if he can do so, his power is limited to a portion only of the estate, and cannot cover the whole. To arrive at a correct decision upon this issue, we have three classes of material:

(1) The Official Records of tribal custom as compiled in the Riwajnama of 1870 and in Lorimer's Customary Law of the Peshawar District compiled at the Settlement of 1895, and corrected by the author in 1897.

(2) Judicial precedents affecting either the Muhammadzai tribe itself, or adjoining tribes, whose customs may be presumed to be similar.

(3) Special local enquiries made during the present proceedings, I proceed to deal with the evidence derived from each.

(1) The Riwajnama of 1870 is actually silent as regards the practice of Will-making. But it deals with the power of proprietors to alienate by gifts. Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, paragraph 56 (b); and Bano v. Fateh Khan (1) are authorities for holding that the distinction under Customary Law between power of gift inter vivos and power of testation is a matter of degree and form only, and where power of gift is shown to exist, an initial presumption arises that there is a co-extensive power of testation. This view, it is true, was challenged by Mr. Barton, Judicial Commissioner of this Province, in his published ruling,

ABDUL MANAN V. FAROQA.

Judicial Record 78 of 1915. It may perhaps be going too far to say that power of unrestricted gift necessarily implies a power of unrestricted testation. There is no doubt that the custom of gift tends to be more prevalent than that of testamentary disposition. The most correct view is probably that taken by Mr. Barton in the ruling quoted above, where he says that, "I am prepared to admit that where the practice of gift-making has established itself, the effect must be to incline public opinion favourably towards the practice of testamentary bequests which are really in the nature of deferred gifts which are more easily revocable." The recorded custom on the subject of gifts laid down in the Riwojnama of 1870 is, therefore, at least relevant, though it may not be conclusive. Sections 3 and 5 of the Riwojnama imply that, in the absence of sons, a Muhammadzai proprietor could dispose of his entire estate to his daughters or their issue. In Mr. Lorimer's Customary Law, compiled 25 years later, the Muhammadzai representatives stated categorically that they recognized no restrictions upon the power of bequest. In this connection it may be observed that when Mr. Barton declined to follow Mr. Lorimer's Customary Law in admitting an absolutely unrestricted power of bequest, one of his main reasons for doing so was that the Riwojnama of 1870 did imply certain restrictions. The restrictions which he alluded to were that, in the presence of sons, a landed proprietor could gift only a part of his property to a daughter or son-in-law. But no restrictions on the power of gift by a sonless proprietor to daughters were ever stated in 1870. If the principle be accepted that a power of gift is evidence of a power of testation, it cannot be denied that both the Riwojnama of 1870 and the Customary Law of 1895 are unanimous in acknowledging the unrestricted power of a sonless proprietor to bequeath his estate to his daughter. The unanimity of the two records in this respect is clearly entitled to considerable weight.

2. I now turn to the question of judicial precedents. There is no judgment relating to the Muhammadzai tribe which specifically covers the question now in issue. The rulings which are relevant are of two classes; those which, when dealing with the power of Will-making among Muhammadzais, indicate a view bearing upon the present issue, or contain obiter dicta relevant to it, and those which deal with the customs of adjoining tribes in this respect. There are undoubtedly special customs upon special points existing among the various Pathans tribes of the Charsadda and Peshawar Tahsils, but there is a strong presumption that their customs are substantially similar, unless some special reason for divergence can be established. I may remark, however, on this subject, that ruling relating to Pathan residents of other Districts are, in my opinion, entirely irrelevant, and are apt only to be misleading. The history and the conditions of the settlement of Pathan tribes in the five Districts of this Province are widely dissimilar, and in ascertaining the customs of the Pathans of the Peshawar District, no useful inferences can be drawn from customs obtaining in Hazara, Kohat, Bannu or Dera Ismail Khan. I must rule out absolutely the judicial precedents which relate to the latter four Districts.

In civil appeal Risaldar Firdaus Khan v. Shah Sower, I have recently had an occasion to discuss in some detail the recorded judicial authorities upon the practice of Will-making in the Peshawar District. That judgment is of some importance on the general question, and will shortly be published*. As I have there pointed out, it cannot be denied that there has been a certain conflict of opinion upon the subject in the highest Court of this Province, and that the present position is not altogether satisfactory. That particular case related to the Kamalzai Tappa. It had been held in Judicial Record 26 of 1905 that among Kamalzais the power of Will-making was absolutely unrestricted. The importance of that judgment lay in the fact that although it referred only to the Kamalzai Tappa with which we are not now concerned it was based largely upon two considerations (a) the weight attaching to Mr. Lorimer's Record of 1895, and (b) the general theory of what Mr. Bunbury described as the "absolutism of the Pathan ownership." For many years this ruling was followed as an unchallenged authority in support of the unrestricted power of bequest among Pathans of the Peshawar District. Some seven years later, however, Mr. Barton, the Judicial Commissioner, upset the premises upon which his predecessor's judgment had mainly been based. The tendency of all subsequent rulings was both to discredit Mr. Lorimer's Customary Law and to impugn the theory of the absolutism of Pathan ownership. From that time onwards Courts have admitted restricted power of bequest, and the question before them for decision has been the exact extent of restrictions alleged in each particular case. The general tendency has been to disregard the statements of custom recited in Mr. Lorimer's Customary Law and to establish various restrictions based upon grounds of equity, upon inferences drawn from previous rulings, upon special enquiries, made from the members of the tribes concerned; or upon the negative evidence of the absence of actual Wills inconsistent with the alleged restrictions. Generally speaking, the earlier record of custom, the Riwajnama of 1870, has been, to a large extent, ignored.

* See 69 Ind. Cas. 853—[Ed.]

ABDUL MANAN V. FAROQA.

I now turn to the rulings which affect the Muhammadzai tribe to which the present parties belong. In Judicial Record 14 of 1903 Mr. Bunbury laid down that among Muhammadzais the power of gift inter vivos was unrestricted. I have mentioned, above what I believe to be the correct view of the analogy of the power of gift as bearing upon that of bequest. The analogy is not conclusive, but it is always relevant. The only qualifications laid down in that judgment were that the gift to be valid must be embodied in a written document; and that it must be followed by the delivery of possession. It might be argued, of course, that the condition of delivery of possession is fatal to the completeness of the analogy when applied to Wills. The essential of a Will is, that it is revocable up to the death of the testator, and that possession is not transferred until his death. But it is clear that the two conditions laid down to validate a gift are not prescribed with the object of limiting in any way the donor's power, but are aimed at preventing any possibility of dispute arising. The idea clearly is that, so long as a man is alive, he may attempt to repudiate a gift, and that it is essential that it should be put beyond his power to do so. It would be almost impossible for him to repudiate a transaction when once it had been reduced to writing and when effect had actually been given to it by the delivery of possession. In the case of a written Will, it is obvious that the danger of repudiation has come to an end when the testator has died. On the theory that the condition requiring delivery of possession is simply aimed at ensuring the irrevocability of the transaction, a Will does not require such a condition, because the testator's death equally ensures its irrevocability. There is, therefore, much to be said for the view that the unrestricted power of gift inter vivos in the Muhammadzai tribe laid down in Judicial Record 14 of 1903 is, if that judgment is correct, strong presumptive evidence of an equally unrestricted power of Will. As against this, we have the very important ruling of Mr. Barton, published as Judicial Record 62 of 1912, which laid down that, among Muhammadzais, a proprietor had not power to Will away his entire estate to his widow to the exclusion of his sons. There had been a previous ruling of the same Judicial Commissioner, published as No. 59 of 1912, which held that in the Kamalzai tribe minor sons could not be disinherited. This last ruling is one of several authorities for the view that, when the practice of Will making establishes itself, it is the sonless proprietor who obtains the first power of bequest. It is important to keep this principle in mind; and to remember that restrictions placed upon testamentary disposition, with a view to safeguarding the interests of sons, have little force as presumptive evidence that a sonless proprietor is governed by similar restrictions safeguarding the interests of mere reversoners. It will be as well, however, before dealing in detail with precedents which relate to other tribes, to summarise first those which relate to the Muhammadzai tribe with which we are now concerned. There is an unpublished ruling by Mr. Barton, No. 6 of 1916, which deals with a case in which a proprietor had made a Will providing the devolution of his property in accordance with the shares which they would have received under Muhammadan Law. The testator's son sued to upset the Will as the sole heir under custom. It was held that the son could not be said to be disinherited, and the bequest in favour of a daughter was upheld on the ground that bequest should be allowed to dependents or near relatives of the testator up to a reasonable limit. The term "dependent," and the qualifications of a reasonable limit are, as will be shown below, of considerable importance as affecting subsequent judicial rulings. In 1919 a case, where a sonless Muhammadzai proprietor had bequeathed his whole property to two widows to the exclusion of his collaterals, came before the Divisional Court (Faqir v. Mussammatt Shamso Civil Appeal No. 219 of 1918) the Divisional Judge, quoting an unpublished Revision (No. 51 of 1917) as authority, held that a sonless Muhammadzai proprietor could only dispose of a portion of his estate, and could not disinherit distant collaterals. The value of this judgment, as a precedent, is not very great, as it was not fought out in the Judicial Commissioner's Court, where it was compromised. So far as the above rulings go, and the same thing will be apparent from precedents relating to other tribes, the power of a sonless proprietor to make a bequest in favour of his daughters is established, and the real question is whether that power is limited to a portion only of the estate, and whether any restrictions are involved.

Rulings relating to neighbouring tribes are naturally of considerable importance. One of the earliest rulings is Kalandar Khan v. Ataullah (2) which laid down that among Khalils a Will in favour of daughters could not be upset by collaterals in the fourth degree. Judicial Record 17 of 1903 deals with the question of a gift made by a sonless proprietor of the Daudzai tribe. The more important case, however, was a simultaneous one in which the ruling was not published, dealing with the question of the validity of the Will by the same proprietor in favour of his widow and daughters. The unpublished ruling in question is No. 49 of 1903 by Mr. Bunbury. Its importance lies in the fact that the reversioners, who were attacking the result of the Will, never contended in their pleadings that the testator was incompetent by custom to make such a Will. On the contrary, they attempted to set up a rival Will in their own favour. The fact is almost startling when we find, some thirteen years later, that the competency of a sonless proprietor to make a Will in favour of a widow and daughters was successfully challenged. It is difficult to understand why in 1903 the reversioners should have omitted a plea which, if the subsequent view of the Courts be correct, was by far their most potent weapon. The Daudzai tribe adjoins the Muhammadzai, and there is a presumption that their customs are parallel, or rather, as I shall show below, that the Muhammadzais have even wider powers than the Daudzais in this respect. I have already alluded to Judicial Record 26 of 1903 which laid down an unrestricted power of bequest among Kamalzais. There is no necessary presumption that the customs of the Muhammadzais and Kamalzais are parallel, but, as I have shown above, the importance of that ruling lay in the fact that it was based upon a general theory of the character of testamentary power among Pathans of the Peshawar District. The ruling published as Judicial Record 50 of 1910 which relates to the testamentary competency of a sonless proprietor in the Khalil tribe deserves only a passing reference. The question before the Court was whether, when the legatee under the Will had also died sonless, the reversioners of the original testator were entitled to oust the beneficiaries under the legatee's Will. The curious feature of that case was that the competency of the original testator was not denied, and that, nevertheless, the learned Judicial Commissioner eventually found that it was operative, only to the extent of one-third, i.e., that fraction allowed by strict Muhammadan Law. That ruling has never been followed, and, as pointed out by Mr. Barton in a latter ruling, Judicial Record 87, it really amounted to a compromise.

In Judicial Record No. 66 of 1913 Mr. Barton dealt with a case in which a sonless

ABDUL MANAN v. FARQA.

Daudzai proprietor had made a Will in favour of his daughter and step-mother. The Will was set aside as regards the step-mother but upheld in favour of the daughter. This was the first occasion on which the principle was definitely laid down that a Will ordinarily was only valid when in favour of dependents and near relatives of the testator, and these were then defined as sons, daughters, sons-in-law and wives. The grounds on which the finding was based may be summarised as follows:—(1) The history of the genesis of Will-making was regarded as fatal to the theory of the absolutism of Pathan ownership. (2) In the case of Wills, as opposed to sales and mortgages, the influence of family opinion must be reckoned with where a disposition of property affects reversionary rights. Public opinion, it is stated, would stigmatise the free exercise of the practice of Will-making. (3) The Daudzais, unlike the Muhammadzais and others, did not, in 1895, assert an unrestricted power of Will-making but referred Wills to the test of Muhammadan Law. (4) Enquiry showed that in some forty-two years there had only been six Wills in the Daudzai tract, and they had not conformed to Muhammadan Law. (5) The conditions of a valid Will were not easy to ascertain, but the power being restricted and Muhammadan Law not being followed, the only conclusion to be safely drawn was that Wills were only valid when in favour of dependents or near relatives. I have dealt with the above case at some length, because it was the basis for the ruling quoted above (Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1916 unpublished) which relates to Muhammadzais, and directly bears upon the case now before me. In Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1916, Mr. Barton went on to hold that among Muhammadzais also, a bequest should only be allowed when in favour of dependents or near relatives, and then only up to a reasonable limit. But I am constrained to remark that the extension of the principle from the Daudzai to Muhammadzai tribe seems hardly justified when the ground for applying it, in the first instance, to the Daudzais are closely examined. Of those grounds which are recited in detail above, Nos. 3 and 4 are peculiar to the Daudzai tribe, No. 3 in particular would justify a contrary rather than a similar inference as regards Muhammadzais. Unlike the Daudzais, Muhammadzais in 1895 did assert an unrestricted power of bequest. The other grounds are merely in the nature of general assumptions than facts based upon evidence. The greatest weight is naturally to be attached to my learned predecessor's authority and experience, but his dictum that public opinion would stigmatise the free exercise of the power of Will-making is really no more than personal observation. When applied to the Muhammadzai tribe, it is to a large extent contrary to our records of Muhammadzai public opinion as shown in 1870, in 1895, and also in 1921, when (as I shall show later) a special inquiry was made in the present suit. I may further add that the restrictions laid down for special reasons for the Daudzai tribe were not only adopted in their entirety for the Muhammadzais, but were actually extended, the condition of "reasonable limit" being added. This condition was possibly implied in Judicial Record No. 66 but was certainly not specifically stated. There had, however, been an intermediate ruling, Judicial Record 78 of 1915, which held that among Awaras of the Khalsa tract only a small portion of an estate could be bequeathed to a distant relative as against sons and grandsons. The particular Will dealt with was upheld in that case as "not altogether unfair." In an unpublished ruling (Civil Appeals Nos. 37 and 40 of 1918) relating to a Will in favour of daughters and a widow, to the exclusion of sons and grandsons, Mr. Barton reiterated the principle that bequests were only valid when reasonable and when in favour of dependents and widows. But he extended the restriction by excluding married daughters from the benefit of bequests. No reasons are given for the distinction made between married and unmarried daughters. It must be presumed that the distinction rests on the theory that married daughters are "not dependents." This ruling was followed by Mr. Rennie in an unpublished ruling (Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1920) which related to Daudzais, and accepted as established principles (1) that only a fraction of the estate could be bequeathed and (2) that married daughters were not dependents. A Will in favour of married daughters in that case was set aside in its entirety. In a later case (Civil Revision No. 52 of 1920 unpublished) relating to the Khalil tribe it was held by the same Judge that, where the whole estate had been willed to a sister-in-law and sisters, the bequest to the sisters was invalid on the grounds that it was not a reasonable portion, and that sisters were not dependents. Now, with the greatest respect for the authority of my predecessors, I cannot help thinking that the two restrictions accepted by them (a) that only a small portion or "reasonable" portion can be bequeathed, and (b) that while unmarried daughters may receive a bequest, married daughters cannot; both rest on the very slenderest foundation. Restriction (a) was based primarily on a finding which related only to the Daudzai tribe, which had asserted, unlike others, that conformity to Muhammadan Law was the test of the validity of Wills. Yet this precedent was followed as binding upon other tribes who had never suggested the existence of such a test. When the rulings in this respect relating to other tribes are closely examined, no other ground for the findings is apparent except the existence of that obviously inapplicable precedent, and general considerations of equity. Small bequests have been allowed because, inter alia, they are not inequitable. Though this equitable consideration was only one ground for validating a particular Will, it was assumed, I think, almost hastily, that bequests of more than small portions were conversely invalid. This converse proposition was not nearly a justifiable inference, and, though a Court may reasonably consider the question of equity when dealing with a particular case, it is, in my opinion, exceeding its legitimate functions when it assumes that that principle of equity qualifies the custom in all other cases and that it must be regarded as an integral feature of the custom itself. As regards restriction (b), which disqualified married daughters from benefiting under a Will, I have some difficulty in understanding how the conclusion was arrived at. It appears simply to be based upon a somewhat meticulous interpretation of the word "dependent." Now, the word dependent was not originally introduced upon any real evidence of custom, but simply to explain the general theory that a proprietor, whose power would be otherwise restricted, should be equitably allowed to make bequests in favour of those who were near and dear to him. The expression first used was "dependents or near relatives," and it is a little difficult to see why daughters have now been given the character of dependents to the extent of disqualifying them, if they cannot be actually dependents. I can see nothing to justify this amplification of the original theory. As I have already pointed out, it seems to depend upon the strict interpretation of a mere expression used somewhat vaguely and loosely in the first instance. Further, the theory that unmarried daughters have a status entirely different from married daughters as regards bequests, seems to me, when closely examined to rest upon a fallacy. The idea presumably is that when a daughter is married, she ceases to be dependent for her maintenance upon her father. But this fact can hardly be relevant unless such bequests were conditional or implied the creation of a limited interest expiring at death or re-marriage. The bequests with which we are dealing are in no way of this character. It has never been suggested that they are anything but out and out bequests, conferring an absolute title upon the beneficiaries. If it is assumed that a distinction exists between the status of married and unmarried daughters, we may reasonably ask the question, what would happen if an unmarried daughter was to marry after the date of the Will, but before the testator's death? Would she lose the bequest because she had meanwhile married? It could hardly be argued that she would lose it, inasmuch as the bequest is simply one to her personally and is not in any way conditional upon her retaining the status of an unmarried daughter. Or, again, a daughter might marry after she had actually inherited on the testator's death. Could it be argued that she would have, on marriage, to relinquish the estate which she had already obtained? Certainly, this could not be argued for a moment unless the Will laid down expressly or by implication that the bequest should be null and void in the event of marriage. It does not seem to have been suggested in any of the cases, where unmarried daughters have been allowed to take under a Will, that they have been given a limited and not an absolute interest. To my mind, it is perfectly clear that the distinction laid down in these precedents rests really upon no foundation. It is based either upon general considerations of equity which represents only a personal opinion, however weighty, or upon an incorrect inference drawn from the interpretation of "dependent," when the use of that term itself had no sound justification.

Before leaving the question of judicial precedents, I may remark, though the question as regards this case is perhaps of academic interest only, that in Judicial Record 98 of 1917 Mr. Barton finally overruled Judicial Record No. 26 of 1903, and held that the testamentary power of a Kamalzai proprietor was subject to the restriction that he could not disinherit minor sons, or adult sons except for disloyalty. I say that the question is here of academic interest only, inasmuch as we are now concerned with the power of a sonless proprietor as against the interest of collaterals. As I have already pointed out, a restriction in favour of sons is not authority for applying similar restrictions in case of reversioners, and we have good authority for the view that when the practice of Will-making establishes itself, it is the sonless proprietor who obtains freedom first.

3. There remains the material to be gathered from the special inquiry made in 1921 in the present case. The enquiry was made by the Assistant Commissioner of the Charsadda Sub-Division, an officer who had naturally special opportunities for ascertaining the feeling of the Muhammadzai tribe, and of estimating the relative importance of opinions which were expressed. That enquiry shows definitely to my mind that there is, among the leaders of the tribe and among those members who were not personally interested in the present case, an overwhelming opinion that a sonless Muhammadzai proprietor is perfectly free to will away the whole of his estate to his daughters. It is often argued in such cases that the opinions of the leading members of the tribe are apt to represent rather what they consider that the custom should be than what it actually is. But these opinions cannot, possibly be disregarded, and, as Mr. Barton remarked in Judicial Record No. 66, "custom is a mere crystallization of public opinion in matters affecting the social and economic life of a community." The statement of custom now put forward carries enhanced weight by the fact that it is directly in accordance with that which the leading members of the same tribe put forward by implication in 1870, and categorically in 1895.

It is possible now to review as a whole the evidence which we have as material for deciding the present case. I consider that it completely establishes the theory that a sonless Muhammadzai proprietor has an absolutely unrestricted power to will away the whole of his estate, if he wishes, to daughters whether married or unmarried. I am even inclined to think that we have no real evidence of any restriction upon the powers of a Muhammadzai proprietor except those now firmly established which prohibit him from disinheriting his minor sons, or his adult sons on grounds other than disloyalty. If judicial precedents alone are considered, I have already pointed out that the theory that bequests to daughters are limited to a small or reasonable portion of the estate and that married daughters cannot receive bequests at all, is based upon what I consider to be an unwarranted inference and an unsound line of argument. In saying this I do not wish to detract from the weight and authority which attaches to the interesting analysis of the history and genesis of Will-making so ably expounded by my learned predecessor Mr. Barton. That analysis forms undoubtedly a most important contribution to the case-law on the subject. Further, the restrictions which he evolved upon the power of a Pathan proprietor as regards the disinheritance of sons, are now fully established, and have remained practically unchallenged. There can be no doubt that the general view of Pathan ownership taken in Judicial Record No. 26 of 1903 was too wide, and its amendment was justified fully by the results of special inquiries, by instances and illustrations, and by the continued acceptance, by the members of the tribes, of the protection of the interests of sons. To extend that protection to the interests of mere reversioners is, I think, to emphasise only one side of the theory of Pathan Will-making. It has been argued that sons are protected, because a tribe, prior to the advent of British rule, could hardly tolerate the introduction of women or of outsiders. As a matter of fact, I am now inclined to think that Mr. Barton went perhaps rather far in saying, that the practice of Will-making could not have existed at all before the advent of British rule. In any case, the protection of the interests of sons is clearly to be attributed also to another consideration. A father has, towards his own flesh and blood, a natural and moral duty, which does not extend to collaterals. To allow a father to disinherit his own sons for trivial or futile reasons may be to open the door to the destruction of family life, and to its invasion by intrigue and undue influence. I am unable to see that restrictions against the disinheritance of sons raise, in themselves, any presumption that reversioners must be similarly protected. To assume that it does is to ignore even the principle enunciated by Mr. Barton that sonless proprietors are the first persons to obtain the right of Will-making. It appears to me that in every case, where Courts have restricted testamentary bequests in the interests of reversioners, there has been a complete absence of real evidence, and that too much weight has been allowed to purely personal views upon what appears equitable, and what seems to harmonize with a preconceived idea of Pathan sentiment. In other words, custom has been interpreted more by a view of what it ought to be than what it is. I regard as extremely important the case referred to above where, in 1903, reversioners attacking a Will which excluded them in favour of daughters could not deny the validity of the Will, and were driven to set up an imaginary rival Will in their own favour. One might almost be inclined to infer that in 1903 the Pathan public hardly imagined that it was possible for reversioners to challenge the power of a testator to bequeath to his daughters, and that the practice of challenging their power arose out of nothing more than the prevalent idea that Courts had adopted a new policy towards Wills and that they now looked favourably upon the extension of restrictions on bequests. Again, when we come to the evidence of the tribesmen themselves we find that they speak, and always have spoken, with no uncertain voice. It is almost startling to observe that on every occasion on which the tribe has been consulted in 1870, in 1895 and in 1921, their exposition of their own custom has been exactly the same. It is impossible to over estimate the value of this evidence, and it is not in the least upset by the merely negative evidence of any lack of instances of unrestricted bequests. In fact, it may almost be said that when a tribe, as a whole, publicly enunciates the theory that the power of bequest is unrestricted, it does so, because it is aware that this power has not been abused in the past and will not be abused in the future. The infrequency of its exercise is, in my opinion, no bar whatever to its existence. I have already stated that I am inclined to think that no restriction exists upon the testamentary power of a Muhammadzai proprietor except that which prohibits, in certain circumstances, the disinheritance of sons. This wider question, however, is not at issue in the present suit, and the above can only be regarded as an obiter dictum. For the purposes of this suit I hold that a sonless Muhammadzai proprietor is competent to bequeath the whole of his estate to his daughters, married or unmarried, and I, therefore, agree with the two Courts below that the present suit must fail. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

BENCH:

IN S. A. 286 OF 1922.

Oldfield, J.—The first question we have to decide is whether this suit was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif, by whom it was tried: The valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction is under section 8, Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), the same as the valuation for the computation of Court Fees. The reliefs asked for and to be valued are, as appears from the pleadings which are given at unnecessary length in the District Munsif's judgment, three:—1. Removal of first defendant from tavazhi management.2. A declaration that a Karipanayam dated 2nd July 1916 is not binding on any of the seventeen items in A Schedule and a direction to defendants in respect of Items Nos. 1 to 15, which (it is not disputed) would be equivalent to a decree for delivery thereof.3. A declaration in respect of another Karipanayam and a decree for surrender of it and connected documents.

NADUVIL ETOM KARNAVAN V. CHERIYA PARVATHI NETHIYAR.

There is no dispute as to the valuation of the first and third of these; and the question, it is agreed, is only whether the second should be valued as plaintiffs have valued it at Rs. 500 for delivery of Items Nos. 1 to 15 with reference to the revenue payable thereon under Court-Fees Act, section 7-V (b) and Rs. 10 for the declaration asked for, regarded as one relating to all the seventeen items under Schedule II, Art. 17 (iii) or whether it should be valued, as defendants contend, under section 7-V (b) for Items Nos. 1 to 15 and under section 7-IV (c) for the relief asked for in respect of Items Nos. 16 and 17, at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint. The importance of the latter contention lies in the fact, which is not disputed, that it entails enhancement of the total valuation of the suit beyond the District Munsif's pecuniary jurisdiction, since, as appears from the reference in plaint paragraph 11-B (2), the value of the buildings on Items Nos. 16 and 17 is over Rs. 3,000.

The lower Appellate Court decided for plaintiffs, partly on the ground that the inclusion of a prayer in respect of Items Nos. 16 and 17 was, as alleged by plaintiff's Vakil before it, a mistake and that no relief was asked for in respect of them. But it is sufficient that the plaint was not in fact amended consistently with any such statement and that here Mr. Madhavan Nayar for plaintiffs was ready to withdraw the claim to relief in respect of these items, which is certainly made in the plaint, only in case our conclusion as to jurisdiction should be against him. On the merits, the matter is concluded by the decision in Shidappa Venkatrao Jadhav v. Rachappa Subrao Jadhav (1), in which I respectfully concur. That decision is based on the application of section 17, Court-Fees Act; and that section is applicable to the case before us, since there is, to my mind, no reason for following the opinion expressed in Durga Prasad v. Purandar Singh (2), and holding that the "distinct subjects" referred to must necessarily be distinct causes of action. It further does not seem to me that the conclusion as to valuation in the Bombay case cited is affected by the judgment of the Privy Council in appeal, Rachappa Subrao v. Shidappa Venkatrao (3). The reference to the real value of the property in suit as undisplaced for purposes of jurisdiction by the notional value was made in connection with the portion of the claim for which the fixed fee was payable under Schedule II; and it was in that connection there, as it is here, that the admissibility of the real value as determining jurisdiction was material, the succeeding paragraph relating to the other part of the suit. And in fact the decision in plaintiff's favour was given not on the ground that the technical objection relied on by defendant was unsubstantial, but because, owing to the failure to take it earlier, a merely technical objection could not prevail.

The valuation adopted by plaintiff in the present case being incorrect for purposes of jurisdiction and the District Munsif, therefore, incompetent to try the suit, the question is whether this entails the success of the second appeal. In Rachappa Subrao v. Shidappa Venkatrao (3) it was sufficient that objection had not been taken to the jurisdiction on this ground until the argument in the High Court and it was, therefore, unnecessary for the Judicial Committee to refer in its judgment to the provision of law, section 11, Suits Valuation Act, on which our decision must turn. For it is not disputed here that an objection was taken and an issue framed regarding it before the District Munsif, although (for reasons which are not clear) he said that an adjudication was unnecessary.

Section 11, Suits Valuation Act, provides that, where objection to the jurisdiction has been taken by reason of over or undervaluation in the Court of first instance, it shall receive effect, only if the Appellate Court is satisfied that "the over or undervaluation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits." That language is general and certainly it is difficult to understand what special circumstances are contemplated in it or to say whether it can be applied to a case, such as that before us, in which no prejudice to the disposal of the suit has been specified in the Memorandum of Appeal or in the argument. Yet, in accordance with the ordinary canons of construction, that language cannot be deprived of effect, as though the intention were that in all cases of incorrect valuation the proceedings in the Court of first instance should be treated as invalid. The test contemplated in the language used cannot ordinarily be supposed to be the convenience or preference of the parties since they will seldom agree on those matters and it will be impossible to decide between conflicting local and personal considerations of an indefinite nature. It is then argued that, when (as in the present case) actual prejudice is not demonstrated, the Appellate Court must consider whether it can be presumed. But if prejudice based on presumption is contemplated by the section, it is still necessary to consider how any presumption can be made. None can be made, because the Court of a District Munsif is substituted for that of a Subordinate Judge or vice versa in consequence of the incorrect valuation, since, the powers of both to deal with litigation legitimately before them being the same, there is no substantial reason for presuming that the decision of one is more likely to be right than that of the other, this being particularly exemplified in cases, such as the present, where the objection to valuation is sustained first in second appeal and the decision of both Courts on fact and law are the same; and this view has, in fact, been taken in Raghava Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (4). This failing, application may, perhaps, be found for the words of the section in cases in which the incorrect valuation entails that the Small Cause, instead of the ordinary procedure will be followed, although it is doubtful whether both procedures being regarded by the Legislature as affording a satisfactory method of trial, there can be any question of prejudice to the disposal on the merits. The last suggestion made is that prejudice is contemplated as arising from the difference in the course of appeal and the number of appeals, which incorrect valuation will entail, and in particular from the loss in cases of under-valuation of the right of appeal on the facts to the High Court. This possibility no doubt has not been considered in the decisions we have been shown. But first the forfeiture of a particular right of appeal, arising after the disposal of the suit, cannot be regarded as in the words of the section "prejudicially affecting the disposal of the suit on the merits." Next, this possibility is irrelevant in cases of over-valuation; and necessity for separate reference to them is on the assumption involved wanting. And, thirdly, this explanation is based on a presumption that adjudication on the facts must be prejudicially effective if the hearing is by an inferior Court which is no more sustainable with reference to appellate than original proceedings. This also failing, it must be supposed that the very general wording was adopted to provide ex abundanti cautela for any exceptional cases, in which prejudice to disposal on the merits may be demonstrable, but of which the nature cannot be more exactly defined. In the present case no such prejudice has been alleged or shown to have occurred. I would, therefore, proceed with hearing of the second appeal.

But as my learned brother differs and as the difference between us relates to a preliminary point requiring decision before we can proceed to disposal on the merits, I agree to refer to a Full Bench the question whether the second appeal should be heard on the merits or whether the plaint should be returned.

In Second Appeal No. 287 of 1920. Our judgments also apply to this point, as it arises in the connected second appeal No. 287 of 1920. We make a similar reference in that case also.

Devadoss, J.—This is an appeal by the 15th defendant against the decree of the District Judge of South Malabar, affirming the decree of the District Munsif of Alatur in Original Suit No. 328 of 1916, in which the plaintiffs sued for the removal of the karnavan of their tavazhi, the first defendant, and for a declaration that certain alienations were not binding on the family, and that certain properties were the properties of the family of the plaintiffs and the first defendant. The District Munsif granted decree in favour of the plaintiffs, and the District Judge has upheld it.

In the plaint several reliefs were claimed: (1) the removal of the first defendant from the tavazhi management; (2) the appointment of the second plaintiff or any other plaintiff as manager; (3) a declaration that a Karipanyom deed executed by the first defendant to the second defendant, dated 2nd July 1916, for Rs. 4,823-8-0 was not valid and binding on the plaintiffs and for possession of Items Nos. 1 to 15; (4) a declaration that the amount of the Karipanyom deed executed by defendants Nos. 11 to 13 to the 14th defendant, belonged to the tavazhi of the plaintiffs; (5) a direction to the first defendant to deliver to the plaintiffs all documents, accounts, etc., and some other reliefs. The plaintiffs valued the first relief at Rs. 1,233-5-4, the third at Rs. 500 being five times the annual assessment, the fourth at Rs. 100 and the fifth at Rs. 5.

The defendants pleaded that the suit was under-valued; that for the purpose of declaration, the valuation was the full value of the property, and that Items Nos. 16 and 17, in respect of which a mere declaration was prayed for, were worth more than Rs. 3,000.

The District Munsif valued the first relief at Rs. 2,182-12-9, but held that the other reliefs were properly valued, and that he had jurisdiction to try the suit, and took evidence and decided it on the merits.

The 15th defendant who appealed against the decree of the District Munsif, raised the contention that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit and that the suit ought to have been dismissed on that ground, but the District Judge overruled the contention, holding that the under-valuation, if any, did not prejudicially affect the disposal of the suit on the merits.

It is argued before us that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit, as the value of the reliefs claimed was over Rs. 5,000 and that the decree of the District Munsif, should, therefore, be set aside.

It is admitted by the respondents that the value of all the reliefs claimed exceeded Rs. 5,000, that Items Nos. 16 and 17 are worth more than Rs. 3,000, and that, as a mere declaration was asked for in respect of them, the valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction should have been at their market-value, and that, in respect of the other items plaintiffs claimed a consequential relief, and, therefore, they were justified in valuing them at any figure which they thought proper under the Court-Fees Act, section 7, clause 4 (c).

The point for decision is whether the District Munsif's decree should be set aside on the ground that the value of the suit exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif. The appellant, in support of his contention, relies upon a case reported as Shidappa Venkatrao Jadhav v. Rachappa Subrao Jadhav (1). In that case, the plaintiff valued for the purpose of declaration his plaint at Rs. 135 and filed it in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge who passed a decree in his favour. On appeal to the District Court a preliminary objection was taken that the appeal lay to the High Court as the value of the subject-matter of the suit was above Rs. 5,000. The District Judge held that there was no failure of justice consequent on the lower Court's erroneous assumption of jurisdiction and that neither party was entitled to complain of want of jurisdiction and heard the appeal on the merits and dismissed it. The defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court, Chandavarkar and Batchelor, JJ., held that the plaintiff had not properly valued the suit, and that the valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction was Rs. 69,016-9, and that, therefore, the appeal lay to the High Court. They set aside the decree of the District Judge and directed the appeal to be presented to the High Court, which was done. The learned Judges heard the appeal on the merits and dismissed it. Against this decree of the High Court, the defendant preferred an appeal to the Privy Council and the judgment of the Privy Council is reported as Rachappa Subrao v. Shidappa Venkatrao (3). Their Lordships of the Privy Council dismissed the appeal, holding that the plaintiff's valuation was incorrect, that the proper valuation for the purpose of declaration exceeded Rs. 60,000 and that "no objection was taken to the Court's jurisdiction in the written statement or the issues and it was not even suggested in the Memorandum of Appeal to the District Judge or the High Court," and that it was "be cause the defendant did not take the objection at the proper stage that he has been able to prolong the litigation commenced so far back as 1909 by an appeal to this Board." "Their Lordships are of opinion that they would not be justified in assisting an objection of that type; and more than that, they hold that even the technicality on which the defendant relied could not prevail."

Under the Madras Civil Courts Act, District Munsifs have jurisdiction up to Rs. 3,000 and appeals against their decisions lie to the District Court and Subordinate Judges have unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction, but appeals from their decisions lie to the District Court "except when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit exceeds five thousand rupees in which case the appeal shall lie to the High Court." In this case, the valuation of the properties being admittedly over Rs. 5,000, if the suit had been brought in a Subordinate Judge's Court, the unsuccessful party would have had the right to appeal to the High Court.

The respondents' Counsel relies upon section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act which is in these terms—I shall extract only portions of it:—

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an objection that by reason of the over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit or appeal a Court of first instance or lower Appellate Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto shall not be entertained by an Appellate Court unless (a) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded, or in the lower Appellate Court in the Memorandum of Appeal to that Court, or (b) the Appellate Court is satisfied for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, that the suit or appeal was over-valued or under-valued and that the over-valuation or under-valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits."

"(2) If the objection was taken in the manner mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1), but the Appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in clause (b) of that sub-section and has before it the materials necessary for the determination of the other grounds of appeal to itself, it shall dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction in the Court of first instance or lower Appellate Court.

"(3) If the objection was taken in that matter and the Appellate Court is satisfied as to both those matters and has not those materials before it, it shall proceed to deal with the appeal under the rules applicable to the Court with respect to hearing of the appeals."

This section enacts that no objection on the ground of over-valuation or under-valuation shall be entertained unless (1) the objection is taken in the Court of first instance at or before the first hearing, or (2) the Appellate Court is satisfied for reasons to be recorded by it in writing that the over-valuation or under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits and if the Appellate Court is satisfied as to both these matters, then, and then only, it shall proceed to deal with the appeal as regards the question of jurisdiction. In the present case the objection was taken in the First Court in the written statement and before the first hearing and in the Memorandum of Appeal to the Appellate Court also the objection to jurisdiction was raised. It cannot be said that the disposal of the suit has in any way been prejudicially affected by the under-valuation. It is not easy to conceive of a case where the disposal of a suit or appeal would be prejudicially affected merely by reason of over-valuation or under-valuation. Mr. Madhavan Nayar found it difficult to suggest any instance where the disposal on the merits could be said to be prejudicially affected by reason of over-valuation or under-valuation. He suggested that by proper valuation a suit may be brought in a Sub-Court which may be able to enforce the attendance of witnesses of either party. It is difficult to see how a Court of a Subordinate Judge could enforce the attendance of witnesses which a District Munsif could not do. If it is suggested that the change of venue would be more convenient to one party or the other, that would not depend upon the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Court, so that instance is no instance at all. He relied upon a case reported as Raghava Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (4). In that case the facts were: the plaintiff and the defendant were executors of the Will of one Krishnaswami Ayyangar. Under the Will they were appointed co-trustees for the two widows and the minor adopted son of the deceased and also for carrying on a charity. The plaintiff sued to remove the defendant from the co-executorship and co-trusteeship on the ground of his misappropriation of the trust funds and his failure to co-operate in the execution of the Will and the trust. The defendant objected to the suit being within the Court's jurisdiction both under the Trusts Act of 1882 and on account of the whole of the trust property being of more than the Court's pecuniary limits. The plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court, but the District Court reversed the order of the District Munsif and directed the Court of first instance to receive the plaint and dispose of it on the merits. The District Munsif entertained the suit and found that the defendant had failed to account for two sums of Rs. 1,306 and Rs. 115, and passed a conditional decree that, if the defendant did not pay the amount within three months, he would be removed from office. On appeal, the District Court affirmed the decree of the District Munsif. On second appeal it was contended that the subject of the trust being admittedly above Rs. 20,000 in value the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suits. Sir T. Muthuswami Aiyar and Handley, JJ., held that "the value of the trust property ought to have been taken as a guide to the determination of the question of jurisdiction. The objection was taken both in the Court of first instance and in the lower Appellate Court. According to section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act we are precluded from entertaining the objection unless we are satisfied that the under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits. The mere change of forum consequent on the under-valuation cannot of itself be treated as prejudicially affecting the disposal of the suit on the merits within the meaning of the section, for that is the very case premised and provided for by the section. Reading the section together with section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we consider that the words 'prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits' must be construed in the same way as they would be construed with reference to any error, defect, or irregularity contemplated by that section. The effect of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is simply to place over-valuation or under-valuation of suits on the same footing with other irregularities contemplated by section 578 except that the objection must be taken either in the Court of first instance or in the lower Appellate Court. In the present case we do not consider that the under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits." This case was followed by the Madras High Court in Ammalu Ammal v. Krishnan Nair (5) and Vedaji Baskara Tirumal Rao v. Subramania Gurukkal (6), and in Narayani Ammal v. Secretary of State (7).

The question that presents a real difficulty is this:—Is the plaintiff justified in under-valuation a suit and bringing it in a Court which would not have jurisdiction over it, if properly valued, and thereby deprive the other party of the right to appeal on facts to the High Court? If a suit were valued at more than Rs. 5,000 it would have to be brought in the Subordinate Judge's Court and an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge in such a suit would lie to the High Court on facts. But, by bringing such a suit in the District Munsif's Court, the right of appeal to the High Court is taken away, and the appeal in fact lies to the District Court, and a second appeal to the High Court lies only on questions of law. The object of the Madras Civil Courts Act, in limiting the jurisdiction of Civil Courts, is not without an object, and the defendant should not be deprived at the whim and fancy of a plaintiff of his right to appeal to the highest Court in the land on facts. If section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is strictly interpreted, an Appellate Court would be unable to interfere with the decree of a District Munsif, whatever might be the value of the property in suit, on the ground that the party appealing against the decree is unable to show that the disposal has been prejudicially affected by under-valuation. It is not easy to conceive of cases where the disposal could be said to be affected prejudicially on the merits merely by reason of under-valuation or over-valuation. It is strongly urged by the respondents' Counsel that the Legislature in enacting section 11 in those terms did not want the decrees of Courts to be interfered with merely because the subject-matter exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of such Courts. No doubt, a literal interpretation of clause (1) (b) of section 11 would lead to that result. But it is difficult to hold that the Legislature intended to give a plaintiff the right to sue in whatever forum he might choose, and thereby to take away the right of appeal on facts to the High Court. Under the Madras Civil Courts Act, Courts of different pecuniary jurisdictions are established. The very object of having Judicial Officers of different cadres would be defeated if the Court of the lower pecuniary jurisdiction could be allowed to try and dispose of suits, the subject-matter of which exceeds its pecuniary jurisdiction. A defendant is entitled as a matter of right to have his case heard by a Judge of a higher grade and of greater experience, if the value of the claim against him exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought. Where there are two Legislative enactments, one creating and regulating the jurisdiction of Civil Courts and the other mainly intended for fiscal purposes, the provisions of the former should not be lightly treated in dealing with questions of jurisdiction affecting rights of parties. Under section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code an objection to territorial jurisdiction should be taken at the earliest opportunity, and an Appellate Court will entertain it only if there is a consequent failure of justice. In Hamidunnissa Bibi v. Gopal Chandra Malakar (8), the learned Judges after referring to various cases before and after the passing of the Suits Valuation Act, observe thus:—"It is, no doubt, a sound rule that Courts should not allow parties to evade the law relating to matters of jurisdiction, and that, where it is found that a party is intentionally exaggerating his claim in order to bring his suit in a Court which otherwise would not have jurisdiction to try it, before the merits of the claim have been gone into the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court. But, this rule must be taken with qualifications; and the one important qualification is that embodied in section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, which is this, viz., that where the suit has been tried on its merits by the First Court, and the over-valuation or under-valuation of the suit is not found by the Appellate Court to have prejudicially affected a suit on its merits, the objection as to jurisdiction should not be given effect to. A plaintiff who alters the valuation of his suit for the purpose of evading jurisdiction may be punished by having no costs allowed to him; but it would not, in our opinion, conduce to promote the ends of justice, if an Appellate Court were to set aside a decision which is found to be correct on the merits, simply because the valuation of the suit had been designedly increased, or diminished to evade jurisdiction."

Considering the high authority of Sir T. Muthuswami Ayyar, who decided the case reported as Raghava Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (4), and that of Mr. Justice Bannerjee in Hamidunnissa Bibi v. Gopal Chandra Malakar (8), one would be very reluctant to differ from their opinion. But, in none of the cases, so far as I have been able to examine them, the question of right of appeal on facts was raised. That question was specifically raised only in Shidappa Venkatrao Jadhav v. Rachappa Subrao Jadhav (1), where the learned Judges reversed the decree of the District Judge and directed the appeal to be presented to the High Court. This judgment of the Bombay High Court, was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. If their Lordships thought that section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act was an answer to the defendant's contention, I think they would not have rested their judgment on other grounds. While their Lordships refer to section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act as regards the mode of valuation and also to section 7 as regards the computation of fees payable for certain suits, and sections 6 and 7 of the Court-Fees Act as regards the fees payable in respect of reliefs, they rest their decision upon the fact that the objection was not taken at the proper time and that a defendant who did not choose to take the objection in the Court of first instance should not be helped. But for their Lordships' decision reported as Rachappa Subrao v. Shidappa Venkatrao (3), I would have felt very great difficulty in not following the decision in Raghava Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (4), and other cases. It has not been shown by the appellant that the disposal of the suit on the merits has been prejudicially affected by the under-valuation. At the same time, I feel strongly that the right of appeal to the High Court, which the defendant would have had if the suit had been instituted in the Subordinate Judge's Court, had been improperly taken away by the suit being instituted in the District Munsif's Court; and no party should have the right to take away the right of his adversary to appeal to the highest Court in the land on facts. It might be said that he got the right of a second appeal, which he would not have had, if the suit had been filed in the Sub-Judge's Court in the first instance. I do not think this argument needs serious consideration. A decision of a Bench of two Judges of the High Court on facts, I consider, would be more satisfactory than the decision of a single Judge of the District Court. On this ground, the under-valuation of the suit has prejudicially affected the defendant's right of appeal. Relying upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rachappa Subrao v. Shidappa Venkatrao (3), I respectfully dissent from the decision of Sir T. Muthuswami Ayyar and other learned Judges in the three Madras cases referred to above, and hold that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit. Mr. Madhavan Nayar offered to withdraw the suit so far as Items Nos. 16 and 17 are concerned. I think in the view I take he should not be allowed to cure the want of jurisdiction by withdrawing the suit in respect of a few items at this stage, depriving the defendant of the undoubted right to have his appeal on facts heard by the High Court and the suit tried by a Subordinate Judge.

The plaint should be ordered to be returned to the plaintiff, for presentation to the proper Court.

These Second Appeals came on for hearing in pursuance of the above order of reference to a Full Bench.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Appellants:—It is admitted in this case there has been an under-valuation which enabled the plaintiff to sue in the District Munsif's Court. The proper value was more than Rs. 5,000 and the proper forum would be the Sub-Court, against whose decree an appeal would lie to the High Court even on questions of fact. The defendant has been deprived of this right by plaintiffs under-valuation. The question before your Lordship is whether this under-valuation has not prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on the merits.

My submission is it has. The decision in Shidappa Venkatrao Jadhav v. Rachappa Subrao Jadhav (1) and Mohini Mohan Misser v. Gour Chandra Rai (9) support my position. The judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council tends also to show that if the objection had been taken at the proper time it would have been sustained. If the objection as to under-valuation does not apply to a case like this, it is difficult to see to what other cases it, could apply.

[SCHWABE, C. J.—The decision in Raghava Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (4) and the other cases which have followed that decision in this High Court are against your contention.]

The exact position I take up is not covered by those decisions. On principles also, it is submitted, it ought not to be possible for the plaintiff to deprive the defendant of the right of appeal to the High Court on facts.

The respondent was not called upon.

Schwabe, C. J.—In this case the suit was commenced before the District Munsif and it appears that there was an under-valuation of the suit. If it had been properly valued, the case would not have gone to the District Munsif but would have gone to the Subordinate Judge in the first instance, and thence an appeal to the High Court instead of to the District Court and on second appeal to the High Court, as is the case in the decisions from District Munsifs. This objection to jurisdiction by reason of under-valuation was taken before the District Munsif who held that he had jurisdiction and heard the case. There was an appeal from him to the District Court, the lower Appellate Court in this case. The District Judge held also that the suit was not under-valued but he also held that, if the suit were under-valued, still its valuation had not prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits. That decision on appeal comes to this Court by way of second appeal and there having been a difference of opinion, it is referred to a Full Bench.

The question turns on the proper interpretation of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act of 1887 which provides that objections to jurisdiction, by reason of over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit or appeal, are not to be entertained by an Appellate Court, unless the objection is taken in the Court of first instance or in the lower Appellate Court and the Appellate Court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, that the suit or appeal was over-valued or under-valued and that the over-valuation or under-valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits. It is contended before us that the District Judge was wrong because the mere fact of under-valuation, involving a trial before the District Munsif, must be prejudicial to the unsuccessful party, because an appeal from him lies to a District Court and then to the High Court by second appeal where questions of fact are not open to discussion, whereas, if the suit had been brought originally before the Subordinate Court, it would come by first appeal to this Court where questions of fact are open to discussion. In my judgment, the clause of the Suits Valuation Act, when referring to prejudicially affecting the disposal of a suit or appeal on its merits, is not considering at all the different rules of procedure that there may be an appeal from one Court to another Court. If, as has been contended before us, the mere fact of there being some different rules in the procedure on appeal must prejudicially affect the disposal of a suit on its merits, the section has really no meaning at all, because in every case from a District Munsif to a lower Appellate Court, where there has been under-valuation the appeal would have to be allowed and a new trial ordered, because the trial on its merits was prejudiced and that, in my judgment, is absurd. There is ample authority of this Court that the lower Appellate Court in such a case not only has jurisdiction to hear the appeal from a District Munsif who has exceeded his jurisdiction but that it must do so unless it is satisfied, as required by section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, first, that the point was taken, and secondly, that the decision on the merits was prejudicially affected. [See Raghava Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (4), Narayani Ammal v. Secretary of State (7), Ammalu Ammal v. Krishnan Nair (5).] There is a decision to the contrary in Mohini Mohan Misser v. Gour Chandra Rai (9). With that decision I do not agree. The point was also discussed in Shidappa Venkat-rao Jadhav v. Rachappa Subrao Jadhav (1), but the point at present before the Court is not decided there.

Our answer to the question, therefore, is that the second appeal must be heard on its merits. The same point arises in Second Appeal No. 287 of 1920 which is also referred to us and our answer in that case must be the same.

Oldfield, J.—I agree.

Coutts-Trotter, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I should have thought that the contention put before us was absolutely unarguable were it not that it apparently has commended itself to at least one Bench of Judges in this country. I take it that the object of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is to provide a machinery for curing the original lack of jurisdiction in such circumstances. If it does not do that, it does nothing else: yet, it is argued before us that, if you once start a suit in one Court which decides prejudicially on the merits, the section has no power to cure the original lack of jurisdiction which remains uncured to the end; that is to say, that the section gives you something with one hand and immediately takes it away with the other. Mr. Ananthakrishna Ayyar did not contend otherwise than that the "Court of first instance" referred to in sub-section 1 (a) of section 11 must mean not the Court in which the suit ought to have been started, but the Court in which it was, in fact, started. It seems to me to follow from that, beyond a possibility of question, that, in sub-section 1 (b) when we get to talking about "Appellate Court," that means not the Court in which the appeal should have been started in the first instance but the Court to which it did, in fact, go and ought to have gone if the lack of jurisdiction were to be condoned. In this case in fact it was condoned. In my opinion, the only possible answer to this reference is the one proposed by my Lord.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI,
r. 27—Evidence fresh in appeal—Document filed after close of arguments, whether admissible.*

Where a document is filed by a party in the Appellate Court after arguments have been finished on both sides and judgment is reserved; it ought not to be admitted in evidence without giving the other party an opportunity to raise any objection which he might have to its admissibility in evidence. [p. 97, col. 2.]

Appeals against decrees of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 8th of April 1920, reversing in Nos. 1710 and 1830 of 1920 and affirming in Nos. 1854, 1870, 1908 and 1930 of 1920 the decrees of the Munsif, First Court, Krishnagar, dated the 27th of September 1918.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhry (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Khan); for the Appellant in Second Appeals Nos. 1854, 1870, 1908 and 1930 and for the Respondent in Second Appeal Nos. 1710 and 1830.—The decree created a judicial lien or charge, so that any transfer was void. See section 64, Civil Procedure Code. In cases like the present the Court should come to a definite finding, as to the bona fides or otherwise of the transfers. Lastly, the copy of the deposition of Mukundalal in the claim case ought not to have been accepted and admitted in evidence in the way in which it was done.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter.—With regard to section 64, Civil Procedure Code, the transfer is not void against all the world but is only voidable. Refers to Anund Loll Doss v. Jullodhur Shaw (1); Umesh Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullubh Sen (2).

A covenant not to alienate does not create a charge. Refers to Kamini Kumar Roy v. Hira Lal Pal Chowdhury (3). Smith's Leading Cases, Vol. I, (12th Edition) p. 87. A compromise decree has no greater effect than a compromise. See Kandarpa Nag v. Banwari Lal Nag (4). The covenant merely created a personal liability. It created no interest in land. Refers to Gunoo Singh v. Lataful Hossain (5). As to the admissibility of Mukundalal's deposition in evidence, refers to O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Baranashi Basi Mukerjee, for the Respondent in Second Appeals 1854 and 1870.—Although the Judge bases his finding on probabilities, it is nonetheless a finding of fact and is consequently not open to attack in second appeal.

1930.—The findings are that the debt was real and that the consideration was paid. The transfer was to satisfy the debt of a creditor. The findings of the Appellate Court are sufficient in affirming the judgment of the Trial Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury, replied.

S. A. Nos. 1710, 1830 OF 1920.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals, along with four others, arise out of suits for declaration that certain properties which had been attached and sought to be sold were not liable to attachment and sale on the ground that the judgment-debtors in each case had no interest and that the plaintiffs in each case had title to the same.

The properties attached belonged to a family consisting of four brothers, Nikunja, Kunja, Hira Lal and Makhan. The first three became involved in debt and transferred their interest in the properties attached separately to the plaintiff in each case.

It appears that suits were instituted against the three brothers and there was attachment of the properties before judgment on the 16th July 1907. On the 4th August 1907 there was a conveyance by Nikunja of his interest in the properties to his father-in-law Mukunda. Subsequently, on the 24th August 1907, there was a compromise between the parties and a petition of compromise was filed, Nikunja and Kunja undertaking not to transfer their interest in the properties until repayment of their debts.

Kunja transferred his interest to his brother Makhan and Hira Lal having died, his widow transferred her interest to her brother Kishori. These transfers took place after the petition of compromise had been filed on the 24th August 1907. Subsequently, when the creditors (Khetra Moni Dasi and the Majumdars) executed their decrees and in execution the properties were attached, claims were preferred by the transferees. The claims, however, were disallowed and thereupon the six suits were instituted out of which these six appeals have arisen.

The Court of first instance in all these cases found that there was consideration for the transfers and that they were bona fide. In that view, all the suits were decreed.

On appeal the learned District Judge allowed the appeals in the two cases which gave rise to Second Appeals Nos. 1710 and 1830 of 1920 and affirmed the decrees of the Court of first instance in the other suits. The plaintiffs are the appellants in Second Appeals Nos. 1710 and 1830; while the defendants are the appellants in the other four cases.

We take up these three sets of cases separately. In the first set (S.A. 1710 and 1830), as already stated, the transferee was Mukunda who was the father-in-law of Nikunja. The District Judge has found that the consideration money, namely, Rs. 1,414, was paid by Mukunda to Nikunja and that that was the exact amount required by Nikunja to meet his liabilities to the Kush-tea Swadeshi Bhandar. It was found that the money was applied by Nikunja in payment of his debt due to the Swadeshi Bhandar. The learned Judge, however, observed that: "It is very improbable that it really represented the consideration for the purchase by Mukunda of his son-in-law's share in his dwelling house and the other properties included in the kobala." He was also of opinion that the transaction was not bona fide. His conclusions are mainly based upon certain statements made by Mukunda in the claim case.

It is strongly urged before us that the deposition of Mukunda ought not to have been used by the learned District Judge; at any rate without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of raising objections thereto.

It appears that arguments in the lower Appellate Court were finished and judgment was reserved on the 24th March and that on the next day, 25th March, the defendants filed a copy of the deposition of Mukunda in the claim case and that was accepted by the learned Judge. So far as it appears from the record, there is nothing to show that the plaintiff had any notice of the document having been filed, or having been used in evidence. We are of opinion that the learned Judge ought not to have admitted this document in evidence after arguments had been finished on both sides and judgment reserved. An opportunity should have been given to the plaintiff to raise any objection which he might have to the admissibility of this document in evidence.

In these circumstances, we think that the cases should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that such an opportunity might be given to the plaintiff and the question of the admissibility of the document considered after hearing both sides on the point. The appeals will then be reheard by the lower Appellate Court on all the points necessary to be decided in the appeal.

Costs to abide the result.

S. A. Nos. 1854 AND 1870 OF 1920.

In these cases, Kunja transferred his interest to his brother Makhan. It is found that Kunja wanted this money very urgently, to pay Counsel's fees for his defence in the Alipur Bomb Case in connection with which he had been arrested. The learned Judge has also found upon the evidence that the money was actually paid by the purchaser Makhan, and that he has since been in occupation of Kunja's portion of the joint house. The learned Judge further found as follows: "Up to the time of the transaction, there is evidence that Makhan and Kunja were not on very good terms; but it was imperatively necessary for Kunja to raise money and it is probable that rather than let a stranger occupy a portion of the joint premises Makhan purchased them, they would also be more valuable to him than a stranger and Kunja would naturally see where he could get the highest price even if he was not anxious to keep the house in the hands of the family." This would have been sufficient for the disposal of the case; but Makhan was not a creditor and it was necessary to come to a definite finding that the transfer was a bona fide one. The learned District Judge, however, says: "Thus I think that the transaction was most probably bona fide even though on the evidence I think it extremely probable that Makhan knew of the compromise...." Then, again, he goes on to say: "But I do not think the circumstances show positively that Makhan was lending his name to the transaction in order to defeat the creditors; it seems to me that his object was probably to assist Kunja in raising the money etc., etc."

It appears, therefore, that the learned Judge has not come to a definite finding upon the question of bona fides in these cases. We are accordingly of opinion that these two cases should go back to the lower Appellate Court for re-hearing the appeals and disposing of them according to law after coming to a definite finding upon all the points necessary for the determination of the appeal.

Costs to abide the result.

S. A. Nos. 1908 AND 1930 OF 1920.

In these cases, Hira Lal's widow transferred her interest to her brother Kishori. The transfer was made to pay off a mortgage-debt due by Hira Lal and the consideration money was partly applied in payment of the debts. The learned Judge observes with reference to the kobala that it was apparently executed to pay off a mortgage-debt. He says: "In this case the circumstances have been exhaustively discussed by the learned Munsif and I agree with his conclusions." The learned Munsif no doubt, decided the question of bona fide in favour of the plaintiff after placing the onus of proof upon him; and if the learned Judge, by saying "I agree with his conclusions" meant to refer to all the conclusions arrived at by the Court of first instance, including his conclusions on the question of bona fides, then there is nothing to be said against the judgment of the learned District Judge.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellants that the observation refers only to the passing of the consideration and payment of the mortgage-debt and not to the question of the bona fides of the transaction which is referred to in the next passage where the learned Judge says: "The appellants have not been able in these cases to show conclusively that the transaction was not bona fide but was intended to defeat the creditors. No doubt the circumstances are very suspicious. The vendor was heavily in debt and closely related to the vendee (her brother) and that the property after sale was let to the son-in-law of the vendor at a nominal sum and remained practically in possession of the vendor and his wife. Further on, the learned Judge says: "The evidence shows conclusively that the debt was a real one and that the consideration passed." But lower down, he refers to the fact that "there are a number of circumstances as pointed out by the learned Munsif indicating that this was probably a genuine transaction." It is accordingly contended that the learned Judge has not come to a definite finding upon the question of bona fides. The observation of the learned Judge that he agrees with the conclusion of the Court of first instance might refer to all the confusions, or only to the conclusion with regard to the passing of consideration and payment of the mortgage-debt. The matter cannot be said to be free from doubt. In these circumstances, these two cases also should go back to the lower Appellate Court for re-hearing of the appeals after coming to a definite finding upon the point.

We may mention that another contention was raised before us, namely, that the attachment, so far as Hira Lal was concerned, was not withdrawn under the terms of the solenama and the decree passed thereon, as Hira Lal was not a party to the solenama.

This question does not appear to have been raised in the grounds of appeal to this Court. In the Court of first instance, the question was decided in favour of the plaintiff. It appears to have been taken in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court; but it is not clear whether it was pressed before the learned Judge and the learned Judge has not considered this point in his judgment. As, however, these cases are going back to the lower Appellate Court, that Court will consider the question whether the attachment had been withdrawn, and if not, the effect thereof having regard to the terms of the decree.

Costs will abide the result.

Construction of document—Will or gift—Invalidity of one clause, whether affects whole Will—Muhammadian Law—Rule against perpetuities, applicability of.

In dealing with the internal evidence of a document which purports to be a Will upon its own character, neither the reservation of property to the testator nor the alleged delivery of possession to the legatees are in themselves sufficient to destroy the apparent character of the document. [p. 102, col. 2.]

Actual delivery of possession to a beneficiary is not fatal to the character of a testamentary bequest. It is evidence against the disposition being testamentary but it is not a fact which per se annuls its testamentary character. As evidence it can be rebutted by other evidence. [p. 102, col. 1.]

It is a natural and intelligible position that a testator may wish to put his legatees in immediate possession to test the success of the disposition, to avoid disputes as to the interpretation of the Will and to familiarise the beneficiaries with their eventual properties. Courts must necessarily recognise such temporary possession as not incompatible with a Will, provided that the disposition to which such possession gives effect is unmistakably revocable and that possession is not intended to confer a permanent title during the testator's lifetime. [p. 103, col. 1.]

The essential of a gift is that the donor should intend immediately to divest himself of the property. [p. 103, col. 1.]

The rule against perpetuities does not rest solely on the religious laws of Hindus or Muhammadans but on general considerations of public policy. [p. 104, col. 2.]

With the exception of a wakf, or a charitable devise, the Muhammadan Law does not favour a perpetuity. [p. 104, col. 2.]

A testator directed by his Will that certain property should always be held by the senior member in his line of descent provided he possessed certain qualifications, and that the property should not be the subject of an alienation:

Held, that the devise offended against the rule against perpetuities and was invalid.

First civil appeal from the judgment and decree passed by the Sub-judge, Mardan, dated the 31st October 1921.

YUSAF KHAN V. MISAL KHAN.

Messrs. Saadudin Khan, K. S., and Mir Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Raja Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit are the descendants of the late Karam Khan, a Pathan of the Sadhum valley in Yusafzai, who owned a large estate in Charguli and other villages. They are related as shown below :—

Karam Khan executed in his lifetime a series of deeds described by the documents themselves as Wills. It is a point in issue in these suits whether one at least of these deeds represents a Will or a gift inter vivos. For the sake of brevity they are all now alluded to as Wills, without prejudice to the decision on this issue. The first Will executed by Karam Khan was unregistered and was admittedly revoked by a subsequent document, and need not be further reconsidered. The second Will was executed on 21st September 1904 and was registered. This deed divided the estate into two portions one for the descendants by the first wife and one for those by the second wife. The parties to the present suit are all descendants by the first wife and we are concerned with the property allotted to this branch only. Bahadur Khan, the eldest son, with male issue had died, leaving four sons. These were given one-third jointly—Dilawar Khan one-third, and Misal Khan one-third. But Dilawar Khan, the eldest surviving son, was given, in addition, certain property over and above that divided in three shares between him and his brother and nephews. The deed recited that he would have no power to alienate this property by sale or mortgage, since it would be held by him as a "seniority trust" for a succession. The actual words are "Kiunki yih chiz bataur-i-amanat-i-kalani ja nishin Dilawar pisran ka ho ga." An extra share was similarly given to Mohammad Akbar, the eldest son, in the group by the second wife "on the above conditions." On 22nd August 1905 Karam Khan executed a third Will, which was also registered modifying that of 21st September 1904. The document gave three reasons for the necessity of modification (1) that the death of Karam Khan's nephew, Abdul Jabar, had given the testator a reversionary interest not provided for in the earlier Will; (2) that Karam Khan in that Will had "left no share for himself" and that he might, on account of illness, find it necessary to alienate some of the property; (3) that the conditions under which the eldest son of each branch received property in excess of the others required to be more accurately defined. These conditions were then defined in the Will of 23rd August 1905 "as the performance of Government services, the management of the village and the entertainment of the friends and guests." The Will went on to recite that "the senior member present in the village will be entitled to this excess share provided he renders the said services. If the senior member is absent from the village owing to his being in service or for some reason incapable of performing those services, the senior member present will be entitled to the excess share on conditions that he renders the said services." The Will specifies the special property assigned on the above conditions to Dilawar Khan and Akbar Khan, the senior members of each branch. The land now in suit, viz., 365 kanals 12 marlas of land, one-fourth of a water-mill, and a hujra in Charguli is a portion of the special property thus assigned to Dilawar Khan.

On 28th March 1906 mutations were entered up transferring to Dilawar Khan the ownership of the land assigned to him. They were described as based upon the "registered Will," but it was stated in the proceedings that Karam Khan verified the "gift" and the mutations were attested as giving effect to a gift. In 1908 certain correction mutations were entered and attested in 1909. On 23rd April 1914 Karam Khan executed a fourth Will, which was registered. In this he withdrew from the kalani share given to Dilawar Khan certain property including a hill known as Badam. The Will stated that the testator had sold the land so withdrawn to his son Misal Khan. The increased value of land due to the advent of the canal is given in the Will as the reason for decreasing Dilawar Khan's share. The conditions attaching to the "kalani" share are again defined but with greater clarity: "This kalani share shall not devolve upon the heirs of the kalani person, nor shall he be competent to mortgage or sell that share of land. The kalani share shall always belong to the person who renders Government services, entertains guests and performs other duties of kalani according to the custom of Pathans of this region." The Will also prescribed that correction mutations should be entered regarding certain land which Dilawar Khan had got mutated in his favour against the terms of the 1905 Will. It amended certain other provisions of the 1905 Will. One of these amendments was to re-distribute the house property in Charguli (which by the earlier Will went to the testator's descendants by his first wife only) among all the sons, specific houses being allotted to each. In some cases separate deeds were executed gifting the houses to the legatees. Another provision was to cancel the creation of a kalani share for the branch of the family from the second wife. The share fixed for this purpose by the 1905 Will was gifted outright to Muhammad Akbar Khan without conditions, a separate deed of gift being executed. Certain houses were gifted to Misal Khan by a separate deed of gift on the same day.

The sale by Karam Khan to Misal Khan of a portion of the estate originally given to Dilawar Khan was entered up in mutation and attested by the Revenue Authorities. Dilawar Khan appealed to the Collector against the attestation on the ground that he had become a full proprietor by gift in 1905, though mutation in his favour had not been effected. His appeal was dismissed and he was directed to seek his relief in a Civil Court. He did not, however, do so. The land so sold to Misal Khan is not now in suit. In 1917 Misal Khan sued, under the gift of 1914, for possession of a house against one of the tenants and called Karam Khan as a witness. On that occasion Karam Khan verified the Will of 1905 and in particular the clause in it by which he reserved to himself the right of modifying it.

Dilwar Khan on 6th January 1918 predeceased his father, leaving two sons Muhammad Yusaf and Mauladad. Karam Khan died the same year, on 17th May 1918. After the death of both a mutation was entered and attested recording Muhammad Yusaf and Muladad as owners of the property which had stood in the name of Dilawar Khan since the attestation of the mutations made in his favour in 1906 under the Will of 22nd August 1905, as amended by subsequent mutations of correction.

Two suits for possession of this property have been instituted, No. 59 by Misal Khan and No. 67 by Abdul Rahman. Both are based upon the provisions of the Will of 1905, as amplified by that of 1914. Both suits proceed on the contention that this property on the death of Dilawar Khan devolved, not upon his natural heirs but, under the Wills, upon the senior member of the family. The position of the two plaintiffs inter se is that Misal Khan is the senior surviving member of the family in respect of age, while Abdul Rahman has succeeded his father as lambardar and Inamkhor and claims to be the senior qualified member in respect of the public services and hospitable duties upon which the Wills make succession to this property conditional. Both suits are resisted by Muhammad Yusaf and Mauladad, who contend (1) that the transfer of possession to their father Dilawar Khan in 1906 was one of gift and conferred upon him a full proprietary title; (2) that the suits are time-barred, the cause of action having arisen on the attestation of the mutations in Dilawar Khan's favour in 1906; (3) that Karam Khan was incompetent in any case to make a "gift over" by bequest and to control the future devolution of an estate to persons not then in existence and that, if the documents in suit are Wills, they are thereby invalid. The Trial Court held that the deed of 2nd August 1905 was a Will, and that the transaction following upon it by which Dilawar Khan was put in possession did not alter the essentially testamentary character of the bequest, possession being delivered as a temporary arrangement subject to the testator's power to cancel or modify it during his lifetime. It found that a cause of action did not accrue to the plaintiffs until Dilawar Khan's sons succeeded to his interest after his death and contrary to the terms of the Will. The third contention of Muhammad Yusuf and Mauladad respecting the invalidity of the Will as controlling the future devolution of the estate was not definitely fought out in the Trial Court though the first issue concerned the question of the competency of Karam Khan to make a Will of this nature.

As between Misal Khan and Abdul Rahman the Trial Court found that Misal Khan, the senior in age, fulfilled also the conditions laid down to qualify the senior member for succession to the special "kalani" estate and gave him a decree for possession of the property in suit.

Appeals have been referred by the sons of Dilawar Khan defendants and also by the rival plaintiff Abdul Rahman. This order will dispose of both appeals.

It will be necessary to dispose first of the appeal by the sons of Dilawar Khan which is resisted equally by both the plaintiffs, and on the same grounds. I take in order the three main contentions set up, as shown above, by the defendants-appellants.

The argument that Dilawar Khan acquired a full and unqualified proprietary title in 1906 falls into two parts (a) that the deed of 22nd August 1905 was in itself a deed of gift acted upon as such and not a Will; (b) that even if the deed was a Will, the testator revoked it and subsequently conferred on Dilawar Khan a full title by gift. It cannot be contended that the deeds of 21st September 1904 and 23rd April 1914 are other than Wills. The document in issue is that of 22nd August 1905. It, too, in form, is unmis- take-ably a Will. It describes itself throughout as a wasiatnama. It concludes with the clause "I have power to modify or cancel this Will at any time in changed circumstances. If I do not exercise this power, this Will will be binding on my sons, because it is valid by custom and more-over previous to this my ancestors acted upon Wills." So far as the internal evidence of the document itself is concerned, the only clause which could be regarded as incompatible with a true Will is that in which the testator remarks that, in the former Will, he had left nothing for himself and the provisions by which he excludes special property for his own enjoyment or alienation. It cannot, in my opinion, be argued that a clause of this nature ipso facto destroys the testamentary character of a disposition of the property. It is a clause with which Courts in this Province have long been familiar in documents which are clearly revokeable, and which do not divest the testator of his proprietary title in any of the property dealt with. Civil Appeal No. 67 of 1904 of this Court Taj Muhammad v. Abdul Jabar is an authority for this view. The document dealt with in that case recited that the executant had "given" the land to the beneficiaries, and that possession had been delivered to them and also included a clause by which he retained certain lands for himself. My learned predecessor, Mr. Bunbury, laid stress on the fact that the deed described itself as a Will and that the stamp-vendor's endorsement showed that the stamp-paper had been purchased for a Will. As regards the clause that possession had been given, he held that this phrase alone cannot preclude the document from being treated as a Will. It would seem, however, that in that case possession had not actually been delivered. We have, nevertheless, the clearest authority for the view that, in dealing with the internal evidence of a document upon its own character, neither the reservation of property to the testator nor the alleged delivery of possession to the legatees are in themselves sufficient to destroy the character of a document which purports to be a Will. Nor, again, can I see any authority for the proposition that actual delivery of possession to beneficiaries is fatal to testamentary bequest. It is no doubt evidence against the disposition being testamentary but it is not a fact which per se annuls its testamentary character. As evidence, it can be rebutted by other evidence. It is a natural and intelligible position that a testator may wish to put his legatees in immediate possession to test the success of the disposition, to avoid disputes as to the interpretation of the Will and to familiarise the beneficiaries with their eventual properties. Courts must necessarily recognise such temporary possession as not incompatible with Will, provided that the disposition to which possession given effect is unmistakeably revocable and that possession is not intended to confer a permanent title during the testator's lifetime. The essential of a gift is that the donor should intend immediately to divest himself of property. In the present case the executant specifically reserved to himself in the deed the right of modification and did not so divest himself. The document was a Will and the contention that it was not acted upon as such because possession was given under it cannot be maintained.

There remains, however, the alternative contention that the Will was revoked when Karam Khan got Dilawar Khan entered as a full proprietor by mutations in the Revenue Record. Stress is naturally laid upon the order of the Assistant Collector attesting the mutations as one of gift. It is also pointed out that the change in the column of proprietorship is incompatible with anything else. An examination of the revenue proceedings does not convince me that Karam Khan ever intended at that time to confer an irrevocable title by gift on Dilawar Khan. It is clear that the mutation itself was specifically based upon the Will. There is no statement by Karam Khan explaining that he had modified his original intention as expressed in the document. If he had really, as alleged, revoked it and converted the disposition into one of gift one would have expected something more explicit that the mere substitution of hiba for wasiat in the Assistant Collector's order. There is not the least doubt, to my mind, that the word hiba was simply introduced carelessly and loosely following the confusion often observed in this Province between Wills and gifts inter vivos. The mutation, indeed, was labelled in the first instance as hiba barue wasiat, a contradiction in terms. Further, any argument based upon the action of the Revenue Authorities in recording a transfer by gift is materially weakened by their later action in allowing Karam Khan to enter up correction mutation at his pleasure. This is irreconcilable with the argument that he had finally divested himself of the proprietary title. It has been asserted by the defendants that other beneficiaries actually alienated land of which they had been given possession in Karam Khan's lifetime, but there is nothing upon the record except the assertion. There is, lastly, the evidence of Karam Khan recorded on the 6th May 1917 in the suit of Misal Khan v. Sahib Gul, to the effect that he never intended to transfer a proprietary title when he gave possession. I hold, agreeing with the Trial Court, that Dilawar Khan held solely under a Will and that he never acquired a proprietary title during the testator's lifetime.

The question of limitation is also disposed of by the above finding. Dilawar Khan himself cannot be shown to have asserted an irrevocable proprietary title before 1914. It was not, indeed, until his sons claimed the right to succeed to the property in suit, as against the terms of the Will which provided that it should not devolve upon the natural heirs of Dilawar Khan, that the plaintiffs acquired a cause of action to contest the proprietary possession of the defendants. The suits are clearly within time.

The third contention set up by the defendants, that Karam Khan was incompetent in Indian Law to create a special estate and to control its future devolution is more formidable. The intention of the testator in the present case is unmistakeable. In terms current among a Pathan community he intended to create a permanent khard or Chiefship, the person most qualified to be the Chief and actually recognised as such, apart from any customary rules of succession, to have a special estate to enable him to maintain his position as Chief. In more legal phraseology, he intended to create in perpetuity an estate in tail according to a rule of primogeniture, qualified by conditions of each legatee's fitness to succeed. There is overwhelming authority for the view that the creation of such an estate among Hindus is invalid. The law on the subject is dealt with exhaustively on pages 71 seq. of Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya's Law of Perpetuities in British India. The ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Krishtomoni Dasi v. Narendro Krishna Bahadur (1) relates to a case where a Hindu testator had attempted to limit the succession of an estate to male issue of the immediate donee. Their Lordships remarked: "Finding no gift to the brother, except that which orders a conveyance to them and the heirs male of their bodies, they hold that the intention was to confer on them an estate of inheritance resembling an English estate in tail male. That cannot take effect." There is, further, authority for the view that the same principle applies to attempted creation of special estates in perpetuity among Muhammadans. This view is expressed, though perhaps in qualified terms by the learned author in the Law of Perpetuities in British India. He says: "I propose to conclude this lecture with a brief reference to the Muhammadan Law on the subject. The matter is involved in some obscurity, as many of the most important works on Musalman jurisprudence still lie entombed in their original Arabic, and the cases which have come before our Tribunals for decision have been comparatively few and mostly connected with questions on the validity of the endowments. An eminent Muhammadan jurist, however, who had access to all the original authorities, broadly states that the Muhammadan Law distinctly recognises perpetuities and that, so long as commencement is made with a life in being, it is not necessary in the case of a settlement or devise that the persons who take the remainder should be in existence. The same learned author further maintains that original texts of the Muhammadan Law unquestionably support the creation of perpetual family settlements under the veil of religious trusts. The Judicial Committee, however, in a recent case, declined to accept this proposition on the ground that it is based upon an absolute and extravagant application of abstract precepts taken from the mouth of the Prophet. It is extremely doubtful, therefore, how far our Courts would support a disposition by a Muhammadan which tended to create a perpetuity; for you will remember that, although the technical details of the English system might not apply, yet it has been held that perpetuities, as they make property inalienable, are opposed to public policy, and must be discouraged, unless they are for objects which are in some way useful or beneficial to the community."

Dr. Gour, again, in his Commentary upon the Transfer of Property Act enunciates the same principle: "With the exception of a wakf or a charitable devise Muhammadan Law does not favour a perpetuity." Further, the rule against perpetuities does not rest solely on the religious laws of Hindus or Muhammadans but on general considerations of public policy. It is embodied in the Transfer of Property Act, sections 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17, and the principles at least of that Act, are followed in this Province. In such bequests one of the main features opposed to public policy is the attempt to restrict for all time the alienability of property. In the present case the property was made clearly inalienable by each Chief, who was to hold in trust for his successor.

Against this principle, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents has not adduced any arguments which can be very seriously considered. He has urged that the invalidity of the bequest as offending against the rule of perpetuity was not pleaded in the Trial Court. I must override this objection, as there was distinct pleading that the testator was incompetent to make a bequest of this kind. It is urged again that the question does not arise between the present parties who are living persons. This argument necessarily fails. If the question at issue was the validity of the bequest to the immediate donee, Dilawar Khan, there might be reason for holding, as was held in the Privy Council ruling quoted above, that the testator intended to benefit the immediate donee and that the latter could not be ousted. But what is now in issue is the claim of persons to succeed on the ground that Dilawar Khan was holding in trust for persons not then ascertained, and who, so far as the present claims of the rival plaintiffs to succeed as de facto Chiefs are concerned, had no legal existence at the time of the Will. The plaintiff cannot succeed at all unless it is assumed that there is a special estate in perpetuity assigned to the de facto Chief. To find (a) that there is no special estate in perpetuity and (b) that plaintiffs succeed with a full title with power of alienation would simply be to invent a new Will for the testator. A more ingenious argument put forward is that the bequest must be regarded as property transferred for the benefit of the public in the advancement of religion, knowledge, commerce, health, safety or any other object beneficial to mankind within the meaning of section 17 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is urged that the special estate is one attached to one Khans' hujra or guest house and that this hujra represents an institution for the public benefit. It is difficult to regard this argument very seriously. The upkeep of a hujra may to a certain extent benefit the public, but it is an obvious straining of language to call a hujra an institution which advances religion, commerce, health or safety, or is otherwise beneficial to mankind. A hujra is a private guest-house in which a leading man entertains his guests. The extent to which he throws it open to all and sundry depends entirely on his personal idiosyncracies. It is not a public institution in any sense of the word. Nor, indeed, does the Will now in suit in any way attach the special estate to the hujra. It attaches to the senior member for the time being, and the up-keep of a hujra is simply one of several conditions which the beneficiary must fulfil in order to show that he is keeping up the proper position of the senior member. Section 17 of the Transfer of Property Act obviously does not apply to the estate in suit. I find that the testator was incompetent to control the future devolution of the estate and that the Will is inoperative as regards the land in suit as offending against the rule of perpetuity.

It remains to consider the effect of the findings (i) that the land in suit was bequeathed by Will and was not gifted outright to Dilawar Khan, (2) that the testator was incompetent to control its future devolution. There is good authority for the view that the invalidity of a single clause in a Will does not necessarily invalidate the whole, if that clause does not affect other provisions. A similar case was dealt with by a ruling of this Court published as Judicial Record No. 66 (Civil). While other bequests made by the Will are not invalidated I can only regard the land now in suit as intestate property. The provisions of the Will in its respect are invalid and inoperative and Courts cannot construct fresh provisions to cover it. The land in suit, therefore, must devolve by the ordinary rules of succession obtaining among the parties. Counsel for all parties have agreed before me that, by ordinary rules of succession, the parties would succeed as follows:—

Muhammad Yusaf and Mauladad, sons of Dilawar Khan, one-third jointly; Misal Khan one third; Abdul Rahman and his three brothers one-third jointly. The three brothers of Abdul Rahman, Mirzaman, Sarfraz and Jamrud are not parties to the present suit, but no objection is made to Abdur Rahman being granted a decree for one-third as against the other parties, on behalf of himself and his brothers. I, therefore, accept the appeals of Abdul Rahman and of Mohammad Yusaf and Mauladad to the extent that decrees be passed in the suits of Abdur Rahman for possession of one-third of the land in suit representing the share also of his brother, and on the suit of Misal Khan for possession of one-third of the land in suit. The parties will pay their own costs throughout.

Excess Profits Duty Act (X of 1919), s. 18, rules framed under, Rule 24 (3)—“Proceedings for the recovery of any sum,” meaning of.

The words “proceedings for the recovery of any sum” in sub-rule (3) of rule 24 of the rules framed under section 18 (1), (2) of the Excess Profits Duty Act, mean the proceedings taken under sub-rule (1) of that rule after default has been made in payment.

Case referred under section 51, sub-section (1) of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), by the Financial Commissioner, Punjab, with his No. 721-914-D-9696, dated the 18th November 1922.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, Lala Amin Chand Mehta and Bhai Man Singh, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—This is a reference from the Financial Commissioner, made on the application of Messrs. Gyan Singh-Bahadur Singh under section 51 of the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, the provisions of which apply to the Excess Profits Duty Act, X of 1919 by virtue of section 15 of the latter Act, for a decision as to the interpretation of sub-rule (3) of rule 24 of the rules made under section 18 (1) and (2) of Act X of 1919, and published in Finance Department Notification No. 1549-F, dated the 23rd June 1919. Sub-rule (3) of rule 24 provides that, save in accordance with the provisions of sub-rule (1) of rule 11, no proceedings for the recovery of any sum payable under the Act or these rules shall be commenced after the 31st of March 1921, and the question for decision is whether the words “proceedings for the recovery of any sum” refer to proceedings taken after default has been made in payment or whether such proceedings begin when a notice of demand has been served on the assessee. The learned Financial Commissioner is inclined to the opinion that the presentation of the demand statement to the assessee is the beginning of the proceedings for the recovery of the tax whereas the petitioners contend that this is not a correct interpretation of the rule.

It seems to me clear that the view for which the petitioners contend is the correct one. Rule 24 (1) describes how the Excess Profits Duty is to be recovered when default has been made in payment. This is the only rule dealing with the mode of recovery, and the subject of the rule is entered as “mode and time of recovery.” Also rules 23 and 24 are classed under the heading “recovery of duty,” whilst rule 13 which is the rule providing for a notice of demand being served on the person assessed, is put under the heading “demand.” From this it is evident that the demand made on the assessee is treated in the rules as something quite distinct from the recovery of the duty, the proceedings for which begin when default has been made. The same distinction is made in the Income Tax Acts VII of 1918 and XI of 1922, where the notice of demand is provided for in a Chapter, the subject of which is “Deductions and assessment,” whilst there is a separate Chapter dealing with the subject of the recovery of the tax.

My decision, therefore, on the point referred is that the words in sub-rule (3) of rule 24 “proceedings for the recovery of any sum” mean the proceedings taken under sub-rule (1) of that rule after default has been made in payment.

The petitioner's costs in this case will be borne by the Government.

A person who pays under protest water-cess under the Madras Irrigation Cess Act when a demand is made and then claims to recover it back by suit is not a "person aggrieved by any proceeding" within the meaning of section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. [p. 112, col. 2.]

The period of limitation for such a suit is one year under Art. 16 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and not six months under section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. [p. 113, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, dated 7th September 1921, in Appeal Suit No. 92 of 1921 (Original Suit No. 431 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Gudivada).

This appeal against order coming on for hearing on the 11th, 12th and 13th of September 1922 and having stood over for consideration till the 12th of October, 1922 the Court (Krishnan, J. and Venkatasubba Rao, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Krishnan, J.—The question that arises for decision in this case is one of limitation. Plaintiff sues the Secretary of State for India in Council for the refund of excess water cess collected from him for certain lands of his on the ground that he had unauthorisedly used Government water for their irrigation. He contends that he did not take any water unauthorisedly and that he was not liable for the cess so collected from him. The cess was imposed on him under section 1 of the Irrigation Cess Act, VII of 1865. Section 2 of that Act provides that, "water cess payable under this Act shall be realised in the same manner as arrears of land revenue are or may be realised by law." The reference is to the Revenue Recovery Act, II of 1864. The water-cess in question here was paid by the plaintiff under protest when a demand notice by the Collector was served on him under the latter Act; he now seeks by the present suit to get a refund of it with interest. The suit was filed within eight months from the date of payment but beyond six months therefrom.

The District Munsif applied the six months' rule in section 59 of Act II of 1864 and rejecting the argument that plaintiff was entitled to deduct in his favour under section 15, clause (2) of the Limitation Act the two months' period of the notice he had to give under section 80, Civil Procedure Code, before bringing his suit he dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge on appeal took a different view and held, relying on Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (1), that plaintiff was entitled to the deduction claimed and that the suit was in time. He reversed the decree of the first Court and remanded the case for disposal on the merits. The present appeal to us is by the Secretary of State against that order.

Before deciding whether plaintiff is entitled to the deduction claimed or not, it is necessary to consider what rule of limitation applies, for it is argued that the limitation applicable is not the six months' rule under section 59 but the one year's rule under Art. 16 of Limitation Act. If this argument is correct the suit is well within time. Though the lower Courts have decided this point against the respondent it is no doubt open to him to support the order of the Subordinate Judge on the ground urged. It seems to me, however, that the argument is not sound; for, in my opinion, the suit is one falling within the very words of section 59 and if that view is correct the application of Art. 16 will be excluded even if the suit fell within the words of that Article also, for the former is the Special Law and as such it must prevail. Section 29 (b) of the Limitation Act also expressly enacts so.

The water-cess we are concerned with in this case was, as already stated, imposed on the plaintiff under Act VII of 1865. Section 2 of that Act applies the procedure for the collection of land revenue to the collection of water cess. Now, it was argued for the respondent that the wording of section 2 does not apply all the sections of the Revenue Recovery Act to the collection of water cess but only such of the sections that deal with the method of collection or the procedure prescribed for it and it was contended that section 59 did not fall under that description and was not attracted by section 2 of the Cess Act. Reliance was placed for this argument on certain rulings under the Abkari and Income-Tax Acts where it was held that similar provisions applying the procedure of the Revenue Recovery Act for collection of the arrears under those Acts did not make section 42 of the Act applicable to sales for such arrears. See Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni (2), Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (3). The learned Government Pleader, on the other side, pointed out that it has been held that these rulings are not applicable to the case of water cess in Veeranan Ambalam v. Karuppayya Pillai (4) and Gunnam Dorayya v. Vadappalli Ayyamacharyulu (5), the reason given being that the Revenue Recovery Act, II of 1864, itself by the definition of the term Public Revenue in section 1 made that term include water cess; so that all the provisions of that Act by their own force would apply to the collection of arrears of water cess. The respondent in answer has drawn our attention to the fact that section 1 of Act II of 1864 deals only with water cess imposed for water supplied by the Government for irrigation and he has contended that it cannot, therefore, apply to water unauthorisedly taken and not so supplied. Assuming that the respondent's contention is correct and that the view expressed in Gunnam Dorayya v. Vadappalli Ayyamacharyulu (5), that section 2 is a mere surplusage is incorrect, and that we must rely upon that section to make Act II of 1864 applicable to the collection of arrears of water-cess charged for water unauthorisedly taken, I am still of opinion that the words of section 2 are sufficient to make section 59 applicable to this case, whether section 42 applies or not, section 59 applies by its own language to all suits brought by parties aggrieved by any proceedings taken under the Revenue Recovery Act, whether such proceedings were taken to collect arrears of water cess or dues authorised to be collected under it. As pointed out by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Ramasami Aiyar v. Secretary of State for India (6), the ambit of section 59 is very different from that of section 42. The period of limitation provided under section 59 was applied in that case and not Art. 16, to a suit arising under the Kudimaramath Act, I of 1858, which authorised the Collector to recover the value of labour which the plaintiff had to contribute "in accordance with the procedure prescribed under Act II of 1864." The same view was taken by the late Chief Justice, Sir Arnold White, and and Mr. Justice Benson in Orr v. Secretary of State (7) with reference to fees payable to village servants collectable under section 52 of Act II of 1864 itself "in the same manner as arrears of land revenue." It will also be noticed in connection with the next argument that in that case money was paid under protest and no further proceedings were taken. The case in Sankarappa Naicken v. Secretary of State (8) also takes the same view; following these rulings I hold that section 59 applies.

(1) 18 Ind. Cas. 617; 38 M. 92; 24 M. L. J. 41.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. CHELLASANI VENKATARATNAM

It was next argued that as money was paid on demand being served on the plaintiff under Act II of 1864, and nothing further was done, there were no "proceedings" under the Act about which plaintiff was complaining in this suit but he is only seeking to get a refund of his money under the general law and, therefore, section 59 does not apply. Certain unreported decisions in Second Appeals Nos. 838 and 844 of 1910 and the rulings of this High Court reported as Ravula Vengala Reddi v. Secretary of State (9) and Ravala Nagamma v. Secretary of State (10) were cited in support of this argument. With all respect, I am quite unable to follow these rulings. As against them there are the cases in Orr v. Secretary of State (7) and Sankarappa Naicken v. Secretary of State (8) already cited. It seems to me the proceedings begin by the distraining officer producing a demand in writing from the Collector giving the name of the defaulter and the amount of the water-cess payable by him and showing it to the defaulter. That is a part of the proceeding under section 8 of the Act; in fact, it is the first step. I see no reason to hold that the proceedings mentioned in section 59 refer only to subsequent proceedings after demand and not to the demand itself. There does not seem to be any justification for making such an artificial distinction. The cases referred to by the respondent have never been followed or treated as good law. It is clear to my mind that the plaintiff in this suit is a person who deems himself aggrieved by proceedings under the Revenue Recovery Act by which he was compelled to pay water cess for which, according to this case, he was not liable and that he is seeking redress in this suit by suing for a refund of the money. The case falls, in my view, exactly within the language of section 59 and the rule of limitation provided in it applies.

The next question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to the deduction he claims. No doubt the ruling in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (1) is exactly in point in his favour but after the ruling in the Full Bench case reported as Kopparthi Lingayya v. Araveti Chinnarayana (11), that case cannot be considered to be good law, though it was not formally overruled. The principle adopted in that Full Bench case is directly against the reasoning on which Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (1) is based. It has now been taken as settled that the application of the general provisions of the Limitation Act in sections 5 to 25 to the limitation prescribed by special or local laws would "affect or alter" the periods so prescribed and is, therefore, prohibited by section 29 of the Limitation Act. The distinction sought to be made in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (1), between Special Acts which do not contain "a complete body of provisions with regard to limitation of suits coming within their purview" and other Acts which do contain them was rejected in the Full Bench case and I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that plaintiff was not entitled to the deduction he claims under section 15, clause (2). The Calcutta High Court has taken the same view in Secretary of State for India v. Shib Narain Hazra (12). The point is, however, of little importance hereafter as the amending Act X of 1922 has made provision for it. But it is not argued that that Act applies to the present case for the suit here was barred before that Act came into force. In the view I take, the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. I would, therefore, reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The Government recovered from the plaintiff penal assessment under the Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865) for unauthorised use of water and the plaintiff claimed in this suit refund of the amount so recovered from him. The Government pleaded that suit was barred by limitation. The District Munsif accepted the contention and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the District Munsif on the question of limitation and remanded the suit for disposal on the merits. The present appeal is by the Government against the order of remand.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is argued—

1. That the provision of law applicable is Art. 16 of the Limitation Act under which the period of limitation is one year and not section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864) under which the period is six months.

2. Where there was a mere demand by the Government and money was paid and no further proceeding was taken, that section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act is not applicable because there was no proceeding under that Act.

3. Should the period of limitation be held to be six months under section 59 of Act II of 1864, that the plaintiff is entitled to exclude the period of notice prescribed by section 80, Civil Procedure Code, in computing the said period of six months. In my opinion, the provision of law applicable is Art. 16 of the Limitation Act and not section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act. I shall presently state my grounds for this opinion and as I entertain no doubt on the point, I consider it unnecessary to deal with the other two contentions urged before us. As already stated, the penal assessment was collected from the plaintiff under the Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865). Section 1 of the said Act, so far as it is relevant for the present purpose enacts.

“(a) Whenever water is supplied or used for purposes of irrigation from any river.... belonging to or constructed by Government and also,

“(b) Whenever water by direct or indirect flow or by percolation or drainage from any such river, irrigates any land under cultivation or flows into a reservoir, and is thereafter used for irrigating any land.... it shall be lawful for the Government.... to levy.... a separate cess for such water.”

Section 2 provides “arrears of water-cess payable under this Act shall be realised in the same manner, as arrears of land revenue are, or may be realised by law in the Madras Presidency.”

Arrears of land revenue are realised under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864) and the reference in the section above quoted is to the provisions of the said Act.

Section 2 may be rendered thus—prescribed by the Revenue Recovery Act in regard to arrears of land revenue.” In my opinion, the meaning of section 2 is, that all the sections of the Revenue Recovery Act that relate to the manner of realising arrears of land revenue, shall be read as if they form part and parcel of the Irrigation Cess Act.

Section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act runs as follows:—

“Nothing contained in this Act shall be held to prevent parties deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings under this Act..... from applying to the Civil Courts, for redress; provided that Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit instituted by such parties for any such cause of action unless such suit shall be instituted within six months from the time at which the cause of action arose.”

The learned Government Pleader argues that section 59 is applicable to this case and this argument implies that the said section deals with the manner of realising arrears of revenue. Section 59 does nothing of the kind. It presupposes that the revenue had been realised and it prescribes the remedy to an aggrieved person against the Government. It refers to parties aggrieved by any proceedings “under this Act” that is, under the Revenue Recovery Act. It refers to a suit instituted by “such parties” and for “such cause of action” “such parties” being parties deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings under the Revenue Recovery Act and “such suit” and “such cause of action” can only refer to what is contemplated by the section.

I fail to see how section 59 can come within the group of sections which refer to the manner in which land revenue is realised. If the Legislature, instead of merely saying “arrears shall be realised in the same manner as arrears of land revenue are under the Revenue Recovery Act,” had re-produced en bloc all the sections of the latter Act which deal with the mode of realising revenue and re-enacted them in the Irrigation Cess Act could it for a moment be contended that section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act would be applicable to suits filed for the refund of penal assessment collected under the Irrigation Cess Act? To my mind, I have no doubt whatever that section 2 of the SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. CHELLASANI VENKATARAM.

Irrigation Cess Act merely incorporates by reference only those sections of the Revenue Recovery Act that deal with the manner of realising of land revenue. Section 59 is clearly not one of those sections.

Let me now turn to Art. 16 of the Limitation Act "against Government to recover money paid under protest in satisfaction of a claim made by the Revenue Authority, on account of arrears of revenue or on account of demand recoverable as such arrears one year.....when the payment is made."

This Article in terms applies to the present suit. The only argument advanced on behalf of the Government against its applicability is, that a special rule is enacted in section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act and that an Article in a general Act should not be applied when a section of a Special Act is applicable.

It will be noticed that the Article of the Limitation Act is quite general in its terms. It refers to arrears of revenue. Land revenue alone is removed from the scope of the said Article by reason of the fact that a special provision is enacted in respect of it by section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act.

Section 66 of the Madras Forest Act (V of 1882) provides that all money payable to the Government under that Act may be recovered "as if it were an arrear of land revenue." Similarly, section 84 of the Madras Salt Act (IV of 1889) provides that all sums recoverable under that Act, may be recovered "as if they were arrears of land revenue." Again, section 28 of the Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886) enacts that certain sums due to the Government may be recovered "as if they were arrears of land revenue." It is unnecessary to refer to various other Acts in which similar provisions occur. Does it then mean that section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act applies to suits instituted for recovery of the money paid to the Government on account of alleged arrears of revenue under any of these Acts? If this view should be taken, Art. 16 of the Limitation Act would practically be a dead letter. I fail to see why the plain provisions of Art. 16 of the Limitation Act should not be given effect to and why a forced construction should be placed upon section 2 of the Irrigation Cess Act for the purpose of enabling the Government to plead a rule of limitation in bar of an admitted right to sue.

Land revenue being the most important item of revenue due to the Government, the Legislature has in the Revenue Recovery Act enacted in detail the procedure for realising it. When the Legislature came to deal with other sources of revenue like Salt Abkari, Income-tax, irrigation cess, the Legislature thought it sufficient to enact that all sums payable to the Government in respect of each particular head of revenue could be recovered as if it were an arrear of land revenue. The Legislature could not have intended, by mere reference to the procedure for realisation of land revenue, that a provision of the Revenue Recovery Act which does not deal with such procedure should be incorporated in the Special Acts.

The District Munsif refers to section 1 of the Revenue Recovery Act, and by some argument which I am unable to follow, comes to the conclusion that by reason of the wording of that section, section 59 applies to this case. The material portion of section 1 is as follows:—

"Public revenue due on land shall for the purposes of this Act be taken to include cesses or other dues payable to Government on account of water supplied for irrigation." Whether section 1 of the Revenue Recovery Act and section 2 of the Irrigation Cess Act overlap each other or not, it is unnecessary for me to discuss. But one thing is certain; in this case water-cess was not levied for water supplied for irrigation. On the other hand, as the District Munsif remarks at the close of his judgment, it was the in unauthorised use of water that entailed penal assessment. The Revenue Recovery Act refers not only to water supplied but also to water used. In this suit we are concerned only with water used and not with water supplied and the reference by the District Munsif to section 1 of the Revenue Recovery Act seems altogether irrelevant.

For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the suit is not barred by limitation and I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. CHELLASANI VENKATARATNAM.

By the Court.—As we have differed on a point of law, viz., whether the suit is barred by limitation or not, we refer the point under section 98, Civil Procedure Code, to the decision of a Third Judge.

The Government Pleader, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Krishna Mohan, for the Respondent.

This appeal came on for hearing in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Third Judge, dated 12th October 1922, the Court (Sir Walter Schwabe, Kt., Chief Justice) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—In this case claim was made for water-cess. The assessee paid under protest, gave notice claiming the amount he paid and commenced this suit seven months after the payment but within eight months of it. It is contended by the Crown that the suit is barred by limitation under section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act, II of 1864. That section runs thus: "Nothing contained in this Act shall be held to prevent parties deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings under this Act from applying to the Civil Courts for redress: provided that Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit instituted by such parties for any such cause of action unless such suit shall be instituted within six months from the time at which the cause of action arose." I will assume that that section applies to cases arising out of the collection or imposition of cess under the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, VII of 1865. By Art. 16 of the Limitation Act a period of one year is given for suits "against Government to recover money paid under protest in satisfaction of a claim made by the Revenue Authorities on account of arrears of revenue or on account of demands recoverable as such arrears." That section applies in terms to this case unless there is something in section 95 of the Rent Recovery Act which prevents its applying. Section 29 (1) (b) of the Limitation Act says: "Nothing in this Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, ... by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India." There is a further provision in section 15 (2) of that Act that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit of which notice has been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment of the time being in force, the period of such notice shall be excluded, and, under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure no suit can be instituted against the Secretary of State in Council unless two months' notice is given. It has, therefore, to be contended for the Crown that section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act, by reason of section 29 of the Limitation Act not only excludes Art. 16, but also by reason of the same section, prevents the application of section 15 of the Limitation Act so that the period of two months is not in this particular instance to be excluded. In my judgment this is not a case under section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act at all, because it is not the case of a party deeming himself aggrieved by any proceeding under that Act. I doubt very much whether a demand of payment is a proceeding under the Act at all as contemplated by that section. I am quite clear that a person, who pays under protest when a demand is made and claims to recover back, is not a person aggrieved by any proceeding under the Act. He has taken a wise course, which prevents his having a grievance.

There is direct authority in support of this view in Ravula Vengala Reddi v. Secretary of State (9) which followed a series of appeals, Second Appeals Nos. 838 and 844 of 1910 and 240 to 244 of 1911, the judgments in which, I regret, have not been published, because the point is fully discussed there and decided. The only authority to the contrary is the case of Orr v. Secretary of State (7). In that case, without giving any reasons the Court expressed a view that, in the circumstances of that case, section 59 applied where there had been a payment under protest to the exclusion of Art. 16 of the Limitation Act. It was unnecessary for that decision (which, no doubt, explains why no reasons were given) because in that case, the Court held on the merits that there was no case. That case was considered by the Bench in Ravula Vengala Reddi v. Secretary of State (9) and in the case therein referred to and distinguished. Ravula Nagamma v. Secretary of State (10), which was also referred to, does not touch this point.

In this state of authorities, sitting alone, I should have considered myself bound to follow the decision in Ravula Vengala Reddi v. Secretary of State (9) but it is open to me, sitting as I am now, to express my own views, and I agree with the decision in Ravula Vengala Reddi v. Secretary of State (9) for the reasons given in that case and in the unreported cases referred to therein, and I disagree with that part of the judgment in Orr v. Secretary of State (7) which is to the contrary.

That being my view, it is enough to dispose of the case: but although I have not heard the matter fully argued, I think it right to say that I should find it very difficult to hold that section 29 of the Limitation Act, even if it has any application in this case, operates to exclude the two months' time given by section 15 of that Act, for there is nothing in section 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act to suggest that the six months limited there is to include the period which is by the general law excluded.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs including the costs of this reference.

A compromise of a suit by the Manager of a joint Hindu family without obtaining the consent of minor co-parceners who are separately represented in the suit is unlawful and fails not only as regards the minor co-parceners but as regards the Manager as well. [p. 116, col. 2.]

Where one of several mortgagors has redeemed a mortgage under which all are equally liable, he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose debt he discharges and, as an assignee of the security which he pays off, can enforce it by a suit for sale. [p. 117, col. 2.]

A claim to subrogation can be sustained when there is an agreement, either express or implied, with the debtor, that the lender shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. Such an agreement may be express or may be presumed from the circumstances of the case. The question to ask in each case will be, whether the new lender was lending the money on the personal security of the borrower or on the understanding that he would be substituted in place of the former mortgagee. An order made under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act for the sale of mortgaged property, has the effect of substituting the right of sale thereby conferred upon the mortgagee for his rights under the mortgage, and the latter rights are extinguished. Therefore there can be no right of priority in respect of a payment made after the passing of such an order. [p. 119, col. 2; p. 120, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Rai Bareilly, dated the 28th February 1921.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Gokul Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 10, 12, 25 to 28.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for Respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 12.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for Respondents Nos. 11 and 14.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for foreclosure in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareilly. The plaintiffs were Lotar Ram and his three minor nephews under the guardianship of their mother, Musammal Surtaja. The defendant No. 1, Lal Ranjit Singh, was the mortgagor and defendants Nos. 20 to 24 were his sons. At the date of the decree, there were 22 other defendants on the record as prior or subsequent mortgagees. The lower Court passed a preliminary decree for foreclosure against all the defendants with a direction that if and when the final decree for foreclosure is passed, the relationship between the plaintiffs and defendants, Nos. 20 to 24 shall be governed by the compromise into which they had entered. Against the other defendants the decree was passed on contest.

The mortgage-deeds in suit were 4:—

Exhibit 1 of Rs. 16,000 of 10th December 1909.

Exhibit 2 of Rs. 2,000 of 27th June 1910.

Exhibit 3 of Rs. 1,800 of 20th October 1910.

Exhibit 4 of Rs. 8,000 of 19th January 1911.

There was a dispute about priority regarding two sums of money. As regards the consideration of Rs. 14,011-13-0 of Exhibit 1, the plaintiffs claimed priority as from 11th December 1891, and as regards a sum of Rs. 5,300 part of the consideration of Exhibit 4, priority was claimed as from 25th January 1899. The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed these two claims for priority.

The plaintiffs appealed to this Court and arguments were addressed to us on their behalf on the three following points:—

(1) that the compromise bearing date 20th December 1920 ought not to have been accepted and acted upon by the lower Court;

(2) that the sum of Rs. 14,000 odd, part of the consideration of Exhibit 1, should be given priority as from 11th January 1891;

(3) that the sum of Rs. 5,300, part of the consideration of Exhibit 4, should be given priority as from 25th January 1899.

A preliminary objection was raised by Mr. Zahur Ahmad, Counsel for the mortgagee defendants, that the pleas regarding priority were not raised in the grounds of appeal and should not be allowed. It may be conceded that the grounds of appeal are not clear on the subject, but the ground of appeal No. 5 would seem to include these pleas. Though the ground of appeal No. 5, that the Subordinate Judge should have on the materials before him held that none of the documents relied on by the defendants had any priority over any of the plaintiffs' documents, is indefinite, the defence must have known that it related to the two items mentioned above, because no other item was in dispute between the parties as regards priority. At the very commencement of the arguments, the ap-pellant's Counsel indicated these two items and as the respondents were not called upon to answer till next day, the respondents were in no way prejudiced by the vagueness of the grounds of appeal.

All the proceedings of the 16th of February 1921 dealing with the compromise are not printed in the paper-book, so reference will be made to the original record for a complete statement of what took place in the lower Court. On 20th December 1920 a petition of compromise was filed in the lower Court purporting to emanate from plaintiff No. 1 and the next friend of the other plaintiffs on one side, and the defendant's Nos. 1 and 20 to 24 on the other. This was duly verified on the same date by all the parties mentioned in the petition, with the exception of defendant No. 1 Ranjit Singh. The conditions worth noting are:—

(1) that the compromise purported to be one between all the plaintiffs and the sons of the mortgagor as well as the mortgagor;

(2) that the right of the redemption by the mortgagor and his sons was to be extinguished at once, meaning evidently from the date of the preliminary decree, and not postponed to the final decree;

(3) heritable and non-transferable occupancy rights in all the properties in suit (Mahanandpur) Ninawan and a portion of Bara) with the exception of the groves were conferred on the mortgagor's sons on certain conditions:

(a) that the mortgagor and his sons relinquish at once ex-proprietary rights in their sir;

(b) that the sons of the mortgagor pay Rs. 4,000 per annual rent;

(c) that the plaintiffs pay off all the prior encumbrances, the mortgagor and his sons helping to determine the exact amount received by the mortgagor in respect of every encumbrance;

(d) that even if the defendants claim and obtain ex-proprietary rights in any area of land, the rent payable by the mortgagor's sons shall not be less than Rs. 4,000 per annum;

(e) that the mortgagor and his sons shall not acquire any sir rights in any area of lands cultivated by them as khudkasht.

The suit was postponed for the presence of defendant No. 1, Lal Ranjit Singh, to verify the compromise. On 10th February the defendant No. 1 did not appear. The proceedings then continued:—

"The petition for compromise wants immediate foreclosure as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 20 to 24. This is impossible as a preliminary decree for foreclosure shall have to be framed in any case in view of the existence of other defendants as prior and subsequent mortgagees. The compromise shall, therefore, remain a part of the preliminary decree if any is framed. "When and if that decree becomes final, the compromise shall represent the final decree between the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 1 and 20 to 24."

"I have mentioned the above terms of my proposed order to the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 21, 22 and 23. This proposal is in favour of the defendants and they, of course, accept it."

"The plaintiffs say it seems inevitable under the circumstances of the case, but their Pleader says he shall give final acceptance on behalf of his clients to-morrow after he has fully consulted law on the point."

The suit was postponed to next day for verification and acceptance of the compromise. It came up for hearing on 16th February and the following proceedings were recorded:—

"The defendant No. 1 has failed to accept the compromise. His acceptance is not necessary as the main acceptance is as against the other defendants who are parties to it and have already accepted it. The plaintiffs still accept it as against the defendant No. 20 to 24. They also accept the modifications mentioned by me in my proceedings of the 10th instant. These modifications are necessary to make the compromise legal under the circumstances of the case. The plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 are minors. Their mother is their next friend. She applied to me in December 1920 through her Pleader for sanction under O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code, to enable her to enter into the compromise on behalf of the minor plaintiffs. I am requested by the plaintiffs' Pleader to grant that petition now, as there is no more hope that the defendant No. 1 shall come forward to accept it.

"ORDER.—The compromise of the case as against the defendants Nos. 20 to 24 is advantageous to the minor plaintiffs even with the modifications mentioned in my proceedings of the 10th instant and accepted by the plaintiffs. I, therefore, do hereby permit their mother, next friend, under O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code, to enter into it on behalf of the minor plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4."

After this, the Court proceeded to hear arguments, in the course of which Lotar Ram, plaintiff No. 1, and Munshi Gaya Prashad Shukla, Pleader of the next friend of the other plaintiffs, put in an objection to the conferring of occupancy rights under the compromise on the mortgagor's sons. This objection was rejected by the Court.

The points of difference between the compromise originally proposed by the plaintiffs and that finally accepted by the Court are :—

(1) the defendant, Lal Ranjit Singh, was left unhampered to prosecute his claim to under-proprietary right and to ask for time to put off final foreclosure ;

(2) he was not bound to render any help to the plaintiffs to settle the amounts due to the prior mortgagees ;

(3) the plaintiffs' right to foreclose was postponed to the final decree.

Obviously, the plaintiffs were given a decree for far less value to them than what they desired to have on 20th December 1920. The plaintiffs were prepared to grant occupancy rights to the mortgagor's sons, if they obtained immediate possession without the worry of constant adjournments to enable the mortgagor to pay up, received the help of the defendant, Lal Ranjit Singh, the actual borrower in determining the amount actually borrowed by him from prior mortgagees, and escaped subsequent litigation in Rent and Revenue all Courts about the mortgagor's tenancy rights and the rent payable by him and his sons. They lost the advantages by Lal Ranjit Singh's refusal to verify the compromise, while they were put to the disadvantage of granting occupancy rights, to which the mortgagors and his sons were not entitled. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that the plaintiffs now desire to escape from the compromise on technical grounds. The plaintiff, Lotar Ram, accepted the modifications on 16th February, though it may be doubted whether he fully understood the purport thereof. He may have accepted the compromise even though it did not bind the principal defendant, Lal Ranjit Singh. It is clear, however, that the minor plaintiffs are in no way bound by the compromise. What their next friend accepted was the compromise of 20th December 1920, and her Pleader, whose name is not noted on the record of the lower Court, had no authority to accept on her behalf a totally different compromise. The altered compromise was sanctioned by the lower Court under O. XXXII, r. 7, but that fact is not sufficient to bind the minors specially when the lower Court was not correct in holding that the non-joinder of defendant No. 1 in the compromise made no difference to the interest of the minors.

It was argued on behalf of the respondents (defendants Nos. 20 to 24) that it was not necessary that there should be a written petition of compromise before a Court to satisfy it that a suit had been adjusted by a lawful agreement. In the present case, however, that is not the real difficulty.

The omission, which makes the agreement unlawful, is that of the consent of the next friend of the minor plaintiffs to a compromise which was totally different from the compromise accepted by her. In our opinion the compromise finally accepted by the lower Court was not lawful. As the plaintiffs, Lotar Ram and his nephews, the minor plaintiffs, are members of a joint Hindu family, we cannot discriminate between their separate interest and as the compromise fails as regards the minors it must fail as regards Lotar Ram as well. The minors were separately represented in the suit, so Lotar Ram's consent cannot bind them though he is presumably the manager of the joint family made up of himself and his nephews. For these reasons the compromise shall be set aside.

The other two pleas in appeals require an examination of the doctrine of subrogation. Lal Ranjit Singh had two brothers, and his father had mortgaged some property to the Raja of Amethi on 11th December 1891 (Deed Exhibit 6). After the death of the father, Bisbeshwar Bakhsh, one of the brothers of the defendant, Lal Ranjit Singh, mortgaged his 1-3rd share in the property to one Ganga Bakhsh to pay off one-third of the mortgage lien of the Raja. The Raja refused to split the mortgage, so Ganga Bakhsh Singh redeemed the whole of it, and sued Lal Ranjit Singh, his two brothers and a subsequent mortgagee for a contribution and obtained a decree for sale on 29th February 1908. These proceedings are described in the mortgage-deed, Exhibit 1. At that time Ranjit Singh's other brother, Chattarpal Singh, had also paid up his share, and only the balance of the decree remained due from Ranjit Singh to the amount of Rs. 14,011-13. Out of consideration of the mortgage-deed Exhibit 1, this sum was left with the mortgagee in order that he, as the representative of the mortgagor, should pay up the amount and save the property from sale. There was also a covenant that the mortgagor shall be liable to re-pay any sum paid by the mortgagee in excess of the amount above-mentioned to satisfy the decree. It is admitted that this sum was paid by the mortgagee, Ausan Shah, in satisfaction of the decree of Ganga Bakhsh Singh on 13th January 1910 (Exhibit 17). The lower Court's opinion was, that the plaintiffs have no right to be substituted in place of Ganga Bakhsh with respect to this sum, because they did not pay up any mortgage-money, but paid up Ganga Bakhsh who had only an equitable charge against his co-mortgagor. In its opinion such a charge cannot be enforced against property in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice; and as the plaintiffs did not prove any notice to the subsequent mortgagees, it refused to give the plaintiffs priority with respect to the payment.

The question is, what rights did Ganga Bakhsh obtain by paying off the Raja of Amethi. This is a case, where one of several mortgagors has redeemed a mortgage under which all were liable. When this happens, he is entitled to be treated as an assignee of the security which he pays off and his remedy would be to enforce that security in the usual way by a suit for sale. In this matter, a learned Commentator on the Law of Mortgage in India has made the following observation at page 372 of his book (Ghosh, Volume I, 5th Edition) "It is true, section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act allows only a charge on the interest of the co-mortgagors. But whatever may be the true construction of this unskillfully drawn and clumsily worded section, I venture to think it does not impose any new burden, and the charge would have the same priority as the security which has been redeemed on the principle that the benefit of subrogation may be claimed by any person who redeems a mortgage on an estate in which he is only partially interested." This matter is elaborately considered by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Har Prasad v. Raghunandan Prasad (1). According to the learned Judges, the rule of subrogation is founded on equitable principles, and if a subsequent mortgagee or purchaser is subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee, whose debt he discharges, a co-mortgagor is equally subrogated. This principle was approved by another Bench of the same High Court in Kashi Ram v. Het Singh (2). Thus, Ganga Bakhsh was in the position of the Raja of Amethi, while his remedy to enforce his right of contribution was the same as that of the Raja under his mortgage.

The next stage of the enquiry relates to the position of Ausan Shah, when he paid off the decretal amount due to Ganga Bakhsh. The application of the doctrine of subrogation has varied considerably in different High Courts in India. In Bombay the trend of the decisions was that there would be no subrogation in the absence of an actual assignment by the prior mortgagee in favour of the persons who paid him off. Apaji Bhivrao Rayrikur v. Kavji (3). At the other extreme were the decisions of the Madras High Court where a claim for subrogation was allowed, though there was no agreement, either express or implied, with the mortgagor for such substitution.

and the payment was made not by the lender but by the mortgagor. Gangadhara v. Sivaram (4). The Privy Council, however, has laid down in successive cases a principle of law to guide us in determining cases of subrogation. The first case was that of Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Baiwan Das (5). In that case a person who had put himself forward as the owner of a certain estate borrowed money on mortgage, and with the money thus raised paid off an encumbrance by which the property was bound. There was no assignment of the mortgage, nor any expression of an intention in the subsequent mortgage to keep the former charge alive for the benefit of the lender. In the recital, the mortgagor claimed to be the owner of the estate, and there was no intermediate mortgage between the one paid off and that in favour of Mahesh Lal. On these facts their Lordships held that the former charge was extinguished as the circumstances did not raise any presumption that it was the intention of the parties to keep that charge alive. The next year their Lordships held in Gokuldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premsookh Das (6), that the former charge was kept alive. The mortgagor's right, title and interest in certain immovable property subject to a first and second mortgage were sold in execution of a decree to a purchaser, who afterwards paid off the first mortgage. Their Lordships distinguished the rules in the English Court of Chancery from the practice in India, where a formal transfer for the purpose of a mortgage is never made, nor is an intention to keep it alive ever formally expressed. Their Lordships observed: "The obvious question to ask in the interest of justice, equity and good conscience is, what was the intention of the party paying off the charge. He had a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention? If there is no express evidence of it, what intention should be ascribed to him? The ordinary rule is, that a man having a right to act in either of two ways, shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest." It would appear, therefore, that a claim to subrogation can be sustained when there is an agreement with the debtor that the lender shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees. Such an agreement may be express or may be presumed from the circumstances of the case. The question to ask will be, whether the new lender was lending money on the personal security of the borrower or on the understanding that he would be substituted in place of the former mortgagee. Applying these principles to the present case, we are of opinion that it was the intention of Lal Ranjit Singh and Ausan Shah that the Raja's mortgage shall be kept alive for the benefit of Ausan Shah. In the deed, Exhibit 1, itself, the burden on the property of an intermediate debt due to Shambhu Dayal is mentioned. The presumption is that Ausan Shah who was paying off a mortgage prior to that of Shambhu Dayal would want to keep it alive as a shield against the claim of Shambhu Dayal. The whole history of the debt of the Raja and the subsequent decree of Ganga Bakhsh are narrated in the deed, which would not have been necessary if Ausan Shah had been advancing money on the personal security of Ranjit Singh, and had no concern with the Raja's mortgage.

It was argued on behalf of the respondents, that the passing of a decree in favour of Ganga Bakhsh extinguished his charge as a mortgagee based on the Raja's mortgage.

This is true where an order absolute for sale is passed under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. Therein lies the distinction between the two payments, with regard to which priority is claimed by the appellants; Ganga Bakhsh was paid before he obtained an order under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, while the payment of Rs. 5,300 was made to Shambhu Dayal after such an order was made in his favour.

It is not clear whether the final decree in favour of Shambhu Dayal was passed before or after 1st January 1909 when the Code of Civil Procedure came into force and repealed the provisions of sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act,

But as the preliminary decree was passed under section 88, Transfer of Property Act, the legal proceedings would be taken to have continued under the Transfer of Property Act, according to the provisions of section 6 of the General Clauses Act, X of 1897, and the final decree for sale will have the effect of an order absolute under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The distinction between the decrees under sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act arises out of the recent ruling of the Privy Council in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (7). It will be convenient at this stage to examine its effect.

In that case there had been a mortgage dated the 28th February 1880. Then came the respondent's mortgage dated the 15th October 1881. In 1891 the prior mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage and in 1895 he obtained a decree absolute for sale. He took no further steps, and his decree ceased to be operative under the Limitation Act. The appellant succeeded to the title of the mortgagor and had also succeeded to the title of the prior mortgagee. The puisne mortgagee was not made a party to the earlier suit. He afterwards sued upon his own mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. The question was, whether the property ought to be sold subject to the prior mortgage. It was decided on a construction of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the decree absolute had extinguished the mortgage, and that nothing remained except the right of sale conferred by the decree. It is to be noted, that in that case no equity had arisen in favour of a subsequent mortgagee. No body had paid off the mortgage. The rights of the prior mortgagee, whatever they were, had come into the hands of the mortgagor himself. The decision was, that these rights were non-existent, because the mortgage had been extinguished by the decree and that the decree itself had become inoperative.

The decision itself presents no difficulty just as a mortgage is destroyed by the sale of the property under the mortgagee's decree, so it would be extinguished by the decree for sale becoming barred by limitation. But the judgment does not proceed upon this ground. It proceeds on the ground that, on a true construction of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, the passing of decree absolute for sale extinguished the right to redeem. This is contrary to a current of decisions of the Indian Courts. Some of these may be referred to. There is Shyam Lal v. Bashir-ud-din (8). In that case the sale had actually taken place but it had not been confirmed, when the judgment-debtor borrowed the money and paid it and the sale was then set aside by the Court. The money was borrowed on a fresh mortgage, and it was held that that mortgagee could claim priority over the original mortgage. This decision was founded upon an interpretation of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Court followed the ruling in Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewah (9) in which it was held that the concluding words of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act "and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished), related to the actual" sale and distribution of the proceeds, and not merely to passing of an order absolute for sale.

It is impossible to reconcile this construction with the construction put on the same words by the Privy Council; for in the case before the Privy Council, there had been no sale and no distribution of assets. There had merely been a decree which by the lapse of time had become inoperative.

The interpretation put on the words of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (7) was affirmed a year later by the Privy Council in Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (10). Their Lordships said "Het Ram's case (7) decided that an order made under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act for the sale of mortgaged property, has the effect of substituting the right of sale thereby conferred upon the mortgagee for his rights under the mortgage, and the latter rights are extinguished."

Following this view of the law, we hold that as regards the item of Rs. 5,300 there was no decree to which Ausan Shah may be subrogated when he made the payment on 23rd January 1911, or that he is not entitled to any priority with respect to that sum.

As regards the sum of Rs. 14,011-13-0 we decide that it has priority as if borrowed on 11th December 1891 with respect to the properties included in the mortgage of 1891. We are of opinion that the Allahabad and Madras cases are still good law where an order absolute for sale had not been passed. Puranmal Chund v. Venkata Subbarayalu (11), Vanmikalinga Mudali v. Chidambara Chetty (12) and Shyam Lal v. Bashir-ud-din (8).

The lower Court held that the payment of Rs. 5,300 by Ausan Shah to Shambhu Dayal was not proved to have been made to save the sale fixed for 20th January 1911. We do not agree with this finding but need not give our reason as the claim to priority fails on another ground.

The lower Court has not decided Issues Nos. 5 and 7 because of the compromise, and Issues Nos. 12 and 13 were decided without giving priority to the items of Rs. 14,011-13-0. Those four issues will have to be decided over again by the lower Court in the light of our findings above.

In the result, we set aside the decree of the lower Court and its findings on Issues Nos. 3, 7, 12 and 13 and remand the suit to it under O. XLI, r. 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure for trial of those issues and the passing of a decree in accordance therewith. The other issues including Issues No. 1 (a) are concluded, and shall not be re-opened. Issues Nos. 12 and 13 have already been decided, but they shall be decided over again with reference to our findings in favour of the priority of the item of Rs. 14,011-13-0. We have not worked out the effect of this priority on the different deeds of the defendants, this shall be done by the lower Court.

Costs here and heretofore shall abide to result.

Although the general principles contained in the Transfer of Property Act are binding upon the Courts in the Punjab and the N.-W. F. Province the Act itself with its technicalities has no force as such in these Provinces. [p. 122, col. 2.]

In the Punjab and the N.-W. F. Province a transferor of reversionary rights is bound by his act when succession opens to him. Even if section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act is to be regarded as making such a transfer illegal and, therefore, a nullity from which no equity can arise, as the Act itself is not in force in these Provinces, the section constitutes no statutory bar to a contract which would otherwise be enforceable in equity. Petition for revision of an order of the Divisional Judge, Peshawar, dated the 4th November 1921, reversing an order of the Munsif, Third Class, Abbottabad, dated the 25th June 1922.

Mehta Mangal Sain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Diwan Chand, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case are as follows:—

Ali Akbar and his nephew Kabal Khan were joint owners of land. Ali Akbar died leaving two widows, Musammam Ambo and Musammam Basri, who succeeded to his share with a limited life-interest, Kabal Khan being their reversioner. In 1905 a mortgage was made to Muhammad Baqa by both the widows and Kabal Khan. On 5th April 1906, Kabal Khan sold to Muhammad Baqa his proprietary title in certain land and also his reversionary rights, Muhammad Baqa being already in possession as mortgagee. On 14th February 1912 Musammam Ambo and Musammam Basri made a mortgage for Rs. 99 to Muhammad Baqa for eight years. Musammam Ambo died in 1915 and Musammam Basri in 1917. On 5th June 1918 Kabal Khan's succession being opened by the death of the life-tenants, sold his title to Kabal Shah for Rs. 1,000. Kabal Shah brings the present suit to obtain possession of the land sold to him on 5th June 1918 by redeeming the mortgage made to Muhammad Baqa by the life-tenants on 14th February 1912. Muhammad Baqa resists the suit on the ground that he is a prior vendee of Kabal Khan's interest and that Kabal Khan had nothing to sell to Kabal Shah. The plaintiff, Kabal Shah, claims to ignore the sale of 5th April 1906, as an invalid transfer of rights in expectancy. The Trial Court found that the sale made before succession had opened was invalid and decreed the plaintiff's claim. The Divisional Judge on appeal held that the transaction of 5th April 1906 must be regarded as an agreement to sell on succession opening and that it was a contract enforceable in equity by the transferee as against the transferor or persons holding under him. The Divisional Judge further considered that the widows, in referring to the sale by Kabal Khan in the deed of mortgage which they executed in 1912, might be regarded as having at the time relinquished their life-interest and opened succession. On these findings he dismissed the suit.

The present petition for revision is by the plaintiff and has been entertained under section 84, North-West Frontier Province Law and Justice Regulation, as involving an important question of law and custom.

I do not consider that it can be seriously argued that the widows in 1912 stepped aside and accelerated reversion. The mortgage made by them was for eight years only and might, therefore, have been redeemed by them in their lifetime. The object of the reference in the mortgage-deed to the sale of Kabal Khan's reversionary rights to Muhammad Baqa was, no doubt, to show that he would not challenge the alienation by the life-tenants, but this cannot be regarded as simultaneously opening out succession to Muhammad Baqa as transferee of the reversioners' interest.

The question, therefore, for decision is whether the sale of reversionary rights to Muhammad Baqa in 1906 is one which can be enforced when succession has been opened by the death of the life-tenants. In those Provinces of India in which the Transfer of Property Act is in force, it cannot be denied that section 6 of the Act operates to make a sale of rights in expectancy absolutely null and void, and that a transferee of such rights cannot fall back upon section 43 of the same Act and demand that, on succession opening, the transferor's interest so acquired shall be made available to complete the transferee's title. The law and precedents for this view are dealt with at length in the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mallick (1). That ruling is of 1920. It further cannot be denied that the same view is taken by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Bengal and that, if the bearing of those rulings upon the present facts be considered, the reversionary right of a male agnate obstructed by a formal tenant holding till death or marriage is regarded by these Courts as "the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate" within the meaning of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. There was formerly some conflict of opinion on this latter point, but it is now finally established in those Provinces that this reversionary interest, both among Hindus or Muhammadans, is, though something stronger than a mere possibility, nevertheless a spes successionis and, therefore, inalienable.

The tendency of rulings by the Chief Court of the Punjab and the High Court, Lahore, however, is to the opposite effect. A recent judgment [Bhagwati v. Chaoli (2)] published as 55 Indian Cases, 698, upheld the hypothecation of a reversionary interest as against the transferor, where succession had opened. The learned Judges held that a mortgage of a reversionary interest, although a mortgage of non-existent property and, therefore, inoperative as a conveyance, was operative as an executory agreement which attached to the property the moment it was acquired by the mortgagor and in equity transferred the beneficial interest of the mortgagor without a fresh act of confirmation on his part. Malik Ali Bakhsh v. Ghulam (3), Khairati v. Matab (4), Attar Chand v. Umar Hayat (5) are all authorities for the view that a sale of reversionary interests creates a right which Courts will enforce when the estate falls into possession. It was held that such transactions amounted to agreements to sell enforceable under section 18 of the Specific Relief Act. This is the view taken of the present case by the learned Divisional Judge.

It is now argued for the petitioner that there is a greater weight of authority in the findings of the older High Courts of India, that the principles of the Transfer of Property Act apply to the Punjab and North-West Frontier Provinces, and that transfers such as that now in suit are illegal and null and void in law and that no equity can be created by a nullity. For the respondent it is contended that the exclusion of the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province from the actual operation of the Transfer of Property Act is vital, that section 6 of the Act creates a statutory and not an equitable bar to alienations of spes successionis, and that the principles of the Transfer of Property Act are enforceable only on the ground of equity.

The contention of the respondent has great force, as it appears to me to represent the view taken by the learned Judges of the High Court of Lahore themselves. In the case of Bhagwati v. Chaoli (2) quoted above they say:

"Furthermore, it must be remembered that the principles of the Transfer of Property Act are binding upon the Courts of the Punjab, the Act itself with its technicalities has no force as such in the Province, and the learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that the principles of section 43 of that Act apply to this case. That section provides that where a person erroneously represents that he is authorised to transfer certain immoveable property and professes to transfer such property for consideration, such transfer shall operate on any interest which the transferor may acquire in such property at any time during which the contract of transfer still subsists. A similar provision is to be found in section 18 of the Specific Relief Act, but that section considers only the cases of sales and leases and not that of mortgages, and that omission is, no doubt, due to the circumstance that no one can be forced to borrow money."

This view seems to me to be confirmed by the High Court of Calcutta in Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mallick (1), which was published in the same year (1920). It is remarked:

"The truth is that an attempted conveyance of non-existent property, though it cannot operate as an immediate alienation, may, when made for consideration, be valid as a contract and when the object to which it refers comes into existence, equity taking as done that which ought to be done, fastens upon the property, and the contract to assign thus becomes a complete assignment. This was precisely the point of view of the Judicial Committee in Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Sing (6) where Sir James Colville observed: "But how can there be any such transfer, actual or constructive, upon a contract under which the vendor sells that of which he has not possession, and to which he may never establish a title? The Bill of Sale in such a case can only be evidence of a contract to be performed in futuro and upon the happening of a contingency, of which the purchaser may claim a specific performance if he comes into Court showing that he has himself done all that he was bound to do," and, further on, after referring to a case in which expectants had agreed to divide certain property in a certain way on the happening of a particular contingency, "The circumstances of the case, which was decided before the Transfer of Property Act, were held to attract the operation of the principle of equity that a fair agreement between expectants or their heirs to divide the property which might be left between them or to any one of them was not contrary to public policy and would be enforced in equity. That case may consequently be deemed to belong, not to the class now before us, but rather to the type of which the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal (7), Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (8) and Hiran Bibi v. Schan Bibi (9) furnish examples. It is thus abundantly clear that whatever be the path selected by the appellant for escape, he is enmeshed in the same difficulty, for he has always to invoke the aid of principles of equity to enable him to defeat the application of a statutory provision, framed by the Legislature on grounds of public policy, with a view to render inalienable certain categories of property. No Court of Equity will assist him in his endeavour to accomplish this purpose."

In other words, the statutory application or non-application of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act is vital. But for the existence of that direct provision of law, the holder of a deed transferring a right in expectancy might have an equity enforceable under section 18 of the Specific Relief Act, but he cannot claim it, because the Legislature has passed a law making such rights inalienable. As against this view the learned Counsel for the petitioner urges that the Act was framed, as shown above, on grounds of public policy, and that such public policy, which is to discourage the litigation and uncertainty resulting from sales of rights in expectancy, is one which necessarily affects the whole of India. He would go so far indeed as to contend that section 23 of the Contract Act comes into operation as voiding an agreement opposed to public policy. He quotes section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code as proving that the Legislature declines to allow, on grounds of public policy, the sale under the order of a Court of rights in expectancy and that we cannot have a more authoritative pronouncement upon what is "public policy" than the Acts of the Legislature itself. I think, however, that this argument, if examined closely, is fallacious. Section 60, Civil Procedure Code, is not a pronouncement against the sale of a right in expectancy by a private person. There is no necessary parallel between what a Court can do in execution against a person having merely a spes successionis and the equity which that person can create against himself by binding himself to do something if a certain contingency happens. Further, it may reasonably be said that all Acts of the Legislature are dictated by public policy, and it may equally well be argued that the omission to apply a certain Act to a certain Province is also dictated by public policy. The Punjab Alienation of Land Act is now in force throughout this Province, but, until recently, the Peshawar and Kohat Districts were excluded from its operation. That Act makes a mortgage by conditional sale void in law, but it could not possibly be argued that mortgages by conditional sale were void in Districts to which the alienation of Land Act did not apply, as being opposed to a rule of public policy enunciated elsewhere by the Legislature. On the contrary, such transactions were regularly enforced in the Peshawar and Kohat Districts prior to the extension of the Act to these Districts. When, therefore, section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act is not binding in law, it cannot be said to override an established rule of equity merely on the ground that it constitutes a Legislative definition of "public policy".

Apart from the fact that the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab and the North-West Frontier Province, there is no doubt a certain conflict of view in the interpretation of section 6 of the Act itself. The Punjab Chief Court in the ruling published as Bhagwati v. Chaoli (2) has definitely held that "section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act does not prohibit the transfer of a spes successionis. All that it provides is that such a transfer cannot be made for the reason that a spes successionis is not property and, therefore, the execution of a document purporting to transfer the spes successionis purports to transfer property which does not exist." It was in the same year (1920) that the High Court of Calcutta laid down in the ruling published as Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mallick (1) that section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act made a spes successionis alienable and a nullity and that no equity could arise from the nullity. This was tantamount to holding that section 6 of the Act did actually prohibit the transfer of a spes successionis. On no other ground, I think, could it be said that such a transfer was a nullity in law and could not give rise to equity against the transferor. The view held by the Punjab High Court is one which in reality has always been taken by that Court. Even the case published as Tota v. Abdulla (10), which related to a District now included in the North-West Frontier Province though its result was to disallow the claim of a transferee of a reversionary right, is really illustrative of the same view. In that case a reversioner had alienated his right of succession and the alienee claimed to step into his shoes and to prevent the life-tenant from alienating. The learned Judges took the view that a reversioner could not transfer his right of succession, that is to say, that the transfer was at the time inoperative and made no conveyance, but also that the true test of decision in that case was the Customary or Tribal Law. In accordance with Customary Law it was held that only an agnate of the widow and not a stranger claiming as transferee of reversionary rights could challenge the widow's conduct. It was remarked, however, that the proposition that a reversioner who alienates his expected consideration is bound by his act was perfectly sound and beyond dispute. In other words, no conveyance or change of title takes place when reversionary rights purport to be sold, but there may be an agreement to sell by which the transferor is bound, when he obtains a full title to the property which he agreed to sell. There is, therefore, conclusive authority for the view (1) that in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province it has always been held that a transferor of reversionary rights is bound by his act when succession opens to him even if section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act makes the transfer itself inoperative when made, and (2) that even if section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act is to be regarded as making such a transfer illegal and, therefore, a nullity from which no equity can arise, the Act itself is not in force in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province and, therefore, constitutes no statutory bar to a contract which would otherwise be enforceable in equity.

It may further be remarked that in the present case the alienee is actually in possession. Although it is argued that his possession must be regarded as that of a mortgagee it is clear that he was in overt possession as a vendee of proprietary title. A person in possession holding a lien in equity is in a far stronger position than one who is seeking to enforce his equity against a person who holds possession against him. It is perfectly clear that the plaintiff Kabal Shah had full notice of the transfer to Muhammad Baqa. His purchase from Kabal Khan was a speculative transaction made with the knowledge that Kabal Khan himself would have the greatest difficulty in ousting a vendee to whom he had made a transfer for consideration. It is noticeable that the sale-deed to Kabal Shah was executed just 12 years after the sale to Muhammad Baqa. It is suggested by the learned Counsel for the respondent, with considerable reason, that Kabal Khan and Kabal Shah had some idea that when 12 years had elapsed they could defeat the sale of 1906 on the plea of limitation. No question of limitation, of course, arises as succession did not open until 1917 and the title of Muhammad Baqa as an owner did not mature until succession opened.

BALA V. BHIKU.

On the findings which I have given above the Divisional Court has rightly held that the present suit must fail. The petition for revision is dismissed with costs.

There is no reference in the judgment to the Full Bench decision in Devachand v. Hirachand (1) and the decision in *Shiddapa v. Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 15—Suit to recover balance of purchase-money, whether suit for specific performance of contract.

A suit by a vendor for recovery of the balance of purchase-money due from the vendee is not a suit for specific performance of a contract within the meaning of Article 15 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is not excluded from the cognisance of a Small Cause Court.

MUKUND V. DIWAKAR.

Lala Kahan Chand, for Pandit Bindra Ban, for the Petitioner:
Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sold property to the 1st defendant for Rs. 150. He was paid Rs. 87 out of the price, and he sues to recover the remaining Rs. 63.

The suit was tried by a Munsif who exercised the powers of a Court of Small Causes for the trial of cases up to Rs. 100 in value, and he passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour.

The defendants appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge, who, without deciding whether the suit was one cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, found that the Munsif had tried it in his capacity as such a Court, and that the defendants had not objected to the procedure adopted, and accordingly held that the appeal did not lie and dismissed it.

It is contended in revision that the suit was one for specific performance of a contract, falling under Art. 15 of the 2nd Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and, therefore exempt from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. Sheth Galim v. Sadarjan Bibi (1) is relied upon in support of this contention. In that case the plaintiffs, who were mortgagors, were suing to recover the balance of the mortgage-money, and it was held that the claim could only be regarded as one for the specific performance of so much of an agreement to lend money as had not already been performed. That case seems to be distinguishable from the present one. The sale to the plaintiff is complete, and he is only suing for the money that is payable to him under the contract. This cannot, in my opinion, be said to be a suit for the specific performance of a contract. I hold that the suit was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and that the decree passed by the Munsif was, therefore, not appealable. I dismiss this application with costs.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the Malu-zar of Mouza Maharmajra, Tahsil Hinganghat. Ordinary field No. 1-12 is said to have belonged to one Jago who died on 19th September 1919. His widow, Musammam Janku, surrendered the field to the plaintiff on 17th November 1919. But the defendants who are the brothers of Jago have obstructed the lambardar's cultivation, hence the present suit.

It was the story of the plaintiff that in 1916-17 Jago separated from his brothers, the field in suit going to his share. This story has been accepted by both lower Courts and found to have been established. It is objected to in this second appeal by the defendants but there is nothing to vitiate the finding that Jago had separated and that the field came to him. That being so, it is impossible for the appellants to succeed here. The surrender by Musammam Janku is also held by both Courts below to have been made. But this finding is impeached here. It is stated that the defendants as reversioners could impeach the finding on the grounds that no consideration passed by the surrender and that the widow was a minor at the time. Both Courts have, however, found that the widow was a major when she surrendered and Dajiba v. Raghunath (1) is authority for the proposition that such a surrender, if not impeachable for fraud or on other like ground, is binding on the widow's husband's reversioners.

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 920; 9 N. L. R. 126.

It is next argued that the receipts, Exhibits D-2, and D-3 show that after the alleged date of partition the malguzar accepted from the defendants the rent of field in suit thereby constituting them his tenants. Now, this was never the case of the appellants in the Courts below. They did not there contend that though the tenancy of this particular field had passed to Jago by partition yet it had then come to the defendants because the malguzar had accepted them as tenants. If that contention had been raised it could have been met, proper issues framed and evidence taken on it. It is certainly far too late in second appeal to advance a question of fact of this nature.

There is no ground for success in second appeal here. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Appellants will pay respondent's costs.

Mr. J. P. C. Bhattacharji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. N. Ghoshal and M. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to certain house property situated in Lucknow, which was compulsorily acquired by the Government under the United Provinces Town Improvement Act (VIII of 1919). On the 27th October 1921 the Land Acquisition Officer awarded Rs. 25,575 as compensation, and notified the award in the presence of the appellant Mr. Burge. On the 28th October 1921 Mr. Burge sent by post an application to the Land Acquisition Office, stating that the compensation awarded was inadequate, and that unless the property was released from the harsh operations of the Act, or proper compensation was awarded, he would be obliged to institute a suit for a declaration in the Civil Court to have the said acquisition declared null and void. The Land Acquisition Officer declined to treat this application as an application for reference under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act read with section 58 of the United Provinces Town Improvement Act (VIII of 1919), and no action was taken on it. On the 18th January 1922 Mr. Burge sent a letter enquiring whether any date had been fixed by the Tribunal for the hearing of his objection, and on the 27th January 1922 he wrote again, asking that his objection might be referred to the Tribunal for consideration under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act.

SAMUEL BURGEY. IMPROVEMENT TRUST, LUCKNOW.

Section 18 requires that an application for reference should be made within six weeks of the date of the award, made by the Collector, if the person making the application was present, or represented before the Collector at the time when the award was made. That period expired on the 9th December 1921. The Land Acquisition Officer referred the matter to the Tribunal for decision, pointing out that the application of the 28th November 1921, which was received on the next day, could not be treated as an application for reference under section 18, and asked the Tribunal to determine (1) whether the suit was barred by time under section 18, clause 2, sub-clause (b) of the Land Acquisition Act, and (2) what was the amount of compensation that should be awarded. The Court below was of opinion that the application for reference was barred by time.

It is obvious that the Land Acquisition Officer never intended to waive the question of limitation. Under section 18 a reference can only be made by a written application to the Collector requiring that the matter be referred for the determination of the Court. No such demand was made in the application of the 28th November 1921. It mentioned the grounds on which an objection was taken to the compensation awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer and in substance asked him either to release the property in question or award proper compensation therefor or to face a suit for a declaration in the Civil Court to have the said acquisition adjudged null and void. There was no written demand for a reference of the question of compensation to the Tribunal for decision. An application has now been made to have the application of the 29th November 1921 amended; but the application was made to the Land Acquisition Officer in the proceeding then pending before him, and we have no authority to permit amendment to be made in an application made outside the present suit. Whether the Land Acquisition Officer can allow the application to be amended is a matter on which it is not necessary for us to express any opinion. Till such amendment is made, the objection of limitation must hold good, and the reference made by the Collector for the determination of that question cannot be sustained. As pointed out in the matter of the Land Acquisition Act (1), the conditions prescribed by section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act are the conditions to which the power of the Collector to make the reference is subject and those conditions must be fulfilled before the Court can have jurisdiction to entertain the reference. In Secretary of State for India v. Hakim (2) a vague petition on an unstamped paper, which did not specify the field area, and was returned as being unstamped, and another subsequently made asking the Collector to review his award and grant the petitioner further compensation were similarly held to be ineffective to justify a reference under that section. Section 29 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), as amended by Act X of 1922, lays down, that where any special law prescribes for any suit, appeal or application a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by the first Schedule, the provisions of section 3 of that Act shall apply, as if such period were prescribed therefor in that Schedule. A waiver of the question of limitation is, therefore, no longer permissible.

The appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

An appeal heard by the Judicial Commissioner under section 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, against an order passed by a District Judge under section 69 of the Act is a first civil appeal heard in the exercise of the civil jurisdiction of the Court. [p 130, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge, Peshawar, sentencing the appellant Ghulam Haidar, under section 69 of the Insolvency Act, V of 1920, to two months' rigorous imprisonment for wilful failure to perform the duties imposed on an insolvent by section 22 of the Act. A preliminary question has been raised as to whether this appeal should be heard by this Court on the criminal or the civil side. Rai Sahib Pandit Mul Chand for the appellant argues that the appeal is a civil one. The contrary view is supported by the Public Prosecutor and also by Mr. Krishna Chandra, Barrister, who is appearing for an appellant in a similar appeal. There is not the least doubt that an appeal against an order passed under section 43 of the Act III of 1907 lay to a High Court in the exercise of its civil jurisdiction. Authorities for this view are

Chiranji Lal v. Emperor (1), (in which a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court very definitely laid down that an appeal from an order under section 43 was a civil appeal), Nagindas Bhukhandas v. Ghelabhai Gulabdas (2) and Nawab v. Topan Ram (3). It is argued that Act V of 1920 does not materially alter the position. The procedure for the trial of cases under section 69 of that Act is governed by section 70 which provides alternative procedures. The Insolvency Court may either take action itself in its capacity of an Insolvency Court, or it may, under sub-section (5), make a complaint to the nearest Magistrate. Sub-section (3) of section 70 lays down that the procedure to be followed in the trial by the Insolvency Court shall be that prescribed for the trial of warrant-cases by a Magistrate by Chapter XXI of Criminal Procedure Code. Section 5 of the Act prescribes that the Court, subject to the provisions of the Act, shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original jurisdiction, and that High Courts shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as they have and follow in regard to civil suits. The words "subject to the provisions of this Act" are important, as it is argued on the other side that section 70 (3) of the Act prescribes a special criminal procedure for the hearing of cases under section 69 and that, therefore, this clause overrides the general principles given in section 5. As against this, it is contended by the learned Counsel for the appellant that section 70 (3) definitely refers to the procedure to be followed by the Insolvency Court in hearing the original case, and that it does not in any way refer to the procedure to be adopted by an Appellate Court. There is considerable force in this contention. The appeal against an order passed under section 20 is governed by section 75 of the Act. The course of appeal, as prescribed by that section, is exactly the same for proceedings under section 69 and purely civil proceedings in insolvency. The orders appealable under the provisions of section 75 (2) are enumerated in Schedule I of the Act. That Schedule relates in all other cases to orders of a purely civil nature regarding questions arising in insolvency proceedings. It would be extremely difficult to hold that the Legislature intended to lump together in a single schedule orders which were appealable on the civil, and orders which were appealable on the criminal side. Again, it is not contended by the Public Prosecutor that the course of appeal is other than that prescribed by section 75 of the Act. He takes up the position that there has been a radical alteration of the nature of penal proceedings by the introduction of Act V of 1920. He would go so far as to argue that section 47 of the old Act did not really create an offence at all, but merely conferred a certain summary jurisdiction which allowed a Court to remand a person to simple imprisonment, and that no special procedure was prescribed. He contends that, when we find that the new Act confers the power of sentencing to rigorous imprisonment and makes special provision for the adoption of the procedure for the trial of warrant-cases under the Criminal Procedure Code, it must be assumed that the Act, by its silence on the subject of the procedure to be adopted by an Appellate Court, implies that the proceedings are criminal throughout. I do not think, however, that this view can be sustained. The word "offence" actually occurs at the conclusion of section 43, and I am unable to see that any distinction of this nature can be insisted upon. The acts which may give rise to penal proceedings have been amplified and defined by the new Act and the power of the Court has been extended to the infliction of rigorous imprisonment. It was only natural that, in such a case, the Court should also be directed to follow strictly the regular procedure for a criminal trial including the framing of a regular charge. But if the Legislature had intended to imply that the Appellate Court should deal with an appeal in the exercise of its criminal and not of its civil jurisdiction, this would have been distinctly stated. Such a statement was the more necessary in view of the fact that under Act III of 1907 there was in existence a consensus of rulings to the effect that the Appellate Court should act in its civil capacity. I have already alluded to the fact that purely civil orders and orders passed under section 69 of the new Act are grouped together in Schedule I. Again, the case seems to me very parallel to that of proceedings taken under section 480, Criminal Procedure Code. In such cases the appeal under section 486, Criminal Procedure Code, lies not to a Criminal Court but to whatever Court the sentencing authority is subordinate. The position can best be seen by taking the case of Revenue Courts the Presiding Officers of which have no criminal jurisdiction. In the case of a sentence passed for contempt of Court by a Collector the appeal would lie to the Revenue Commissioner, who is an authority exercising no kind of criminal jurisdiction. It can only be assumed that in such a case the Revenue Commissioner would hear and decide the appeal as a miscellaneous revenue appeal. His Court has no criminal side I may remark that, up to the present time, no ruling has been published by any High Court in India dealing with the position created in this respect by the Insolvency Act, V of 1920. I must assume, therefore, that, for the North-West Frontier Province, an appeal heard by the Judicial Commissioner under section 75 of the Act against an order passed by the District Judge under section 69 of the same is a first civil appeal heard in the exercise of the civil jurisdiction of the Court.

I now turn to the merits of the present appeal. It is argued that the charge does not specifically mention the duties which the appellant has failed to perform under section 22 of the Act. This does not appear to me material inasmuch as the charge also states that the appellant has "wilfully failed to deliver up possession of the sale-proceeds of the crop of Kharif 1921 and the actual crop of Rabi 1922 to the Official Receiver." It is perfectly clear that the appellant insolvent was warned that he had to pay over to his creditors the amount realized by him for the crop of Kharif 1921, and that the Official Receiver was deputed to receive from the insolvent the actual crop of Rabi 1922. The insolvent failed to perform either of these acts. It is true that he eventually paid in Rs. 60 on account of the produce of Rabi 1922, but he did not do so until October and that the sum did not represent the produce in question. It is also clear from the file that the insolvent contumaciously obstructed the delivery of his income to the creditors. I see no reason to interfere with the orders passed by the District Judge, and the sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment appears to me deserved. It was also argued that the appellant was of advanced age and bail was applied for for this reason. He stated in his application that he was 70 years of age but an enquiry from the Superintendent of Jail showed that he was really about 55 years of age. The appellant appears to have made a deliberate mis-statement on this point and the effect must tell against him in considering the equity of the sentence. I maintain the sentence passed and reject this appeal.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This is a petition under section 107 of the Government of India Act requesting the High Court to interfere with an order passed in execution proceedings by the Assistant Agent, Badrachelam, directing a warrant to issue for the execution of a decree which the petitioner maintains to have been satisfied. The petitioner first applied to the Court of the Agency Commissioner, but his appeal was returned with the endorsement that no appeal lay from the Assistant Agent's order. Under rule XXIV of the Agency Rules, the petitioner might have preferred a petition to Government against the Agency Commissioner's order, and if he had done so, and if the Government thought fit, they would have referred the petition to this Court. Instead of adopting that course, he has invoked the High Court's extraordinary power of superintendence.

In my opinion, this is not a fit case for our exercise of those powers for the following reasons. Rule VIII provides an appeal to the Court of the Agency Commissioner against the decree of an Assistant Commissioner. The order of an Assistant Commissioner in execution proceedings is not a decree. Sri Sri Sri Virkamadeo Maharajulam Garu v. Sri Neladevi Pattamadhave Garu (1) and Lagadapati Venkatanagabushanam v. Ovilapati Mahalaxmi (2) and there is no provision in the Agency Rules for appeals against orders passed in execution or in miscellaneous proceedings, see the Rani of Tuni v. Maharaja of Jeypore (3). A remedy lies by way of petition under rule XXIV. against the order in execution of the Agency Commissioner. See Maharaja of Jeypore v. Sri Niladevi Pattamahadevi. (4). In that case there actually was an appeal from the Assistant Agent's order to the Agent; but the decision is not an authority for the proposition that such an appeal lies. It may be that, when these rules were drawn up, the Government intentionally omitted to provide a right of appeal against orders of Assistant Commissioners in order to avoid encouraging litigation among the unsophisticated Agency peoples. If it was an unintentional oversight, it might be remedied by moving the Agency Commissioner under rule XXV to make a reference to the Government as being a case not provided for by the Rules. In Pedda Vikrama Deo Garu v. Maharaja of Jeypore (5) an opinion was expressed that the old rule 31 (now rule 24) was intended to provide for cases for which no provision had been made, including orders against which no appeal was provided. It is unnecessary to say more, seeing that the petitioner before us has not adopted either of these courses. The Agency Commissioner was strictly correct in observing that no appeal lay to him, though it was unnecessary for him to return the appeal to the person presenting it.

Where the record of a case before the Court is so erroneous as to manifestly amount to an injustice, the Patna High Court in Brindaban Chander Choubey v. Gour Chandra Ray (6) thought fit to exercise the powers of superintendence vested in them under section 107 of the Government of India Act.

The present is not such an extreme case as to call for that unusual course. The Assistant Agent ordered the issue of a warrant, as the judgment-debtor's statement disclosed no valid reasons why it should not be issued. The judgment-debtor's statement contained an allegation that he had paid Rs. 4,052-2-0, which was all that was due under the decree in Original Suit No. 12 of 1914.

The statement was defective in that it did not give reasons to show why he was not liable for interest amounting to Rs. 1,399-14-9 claimed in the decree-holder's petition.

It now appears that after the money was paid into Court, it was prevented from being paid out through an injunction obtained in another suit (Original Suit No. 23 of 1918). The Assistant Commissioner did not appreciate the fact that payment into Court was a good legal discharge of the decree. If he thought that the judgment-debtor was responsible for the decree-holder failing to realise the fruits of his decree and to get interest on the money paid into Court, his proceedings in allowing the decree-holder to claim interest for the period when the money lay in Court, may have been in accordance with the equities of the case. In any case, the decree-holder was entitled to recover the costs of the previous execution petition and the costs incurred in the High Court in the Civil Miscellaneous Petition on the decree of the Agent's Court.

The Assistant Agent's order should have dealt with the claims of the parties in the execution petition and should have adjusted the equities. It did not do so, but I am unable to treat it as manifestly erroneous or unjust. We must, therefore, decline to interfere and dismiss this petition with costs.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The Assistant Agent of Bhadrachalam made an order allowing execution at the instance of the plaintiff. The defendant filed an appeal from this order to the Agency Commissioner, and the latter returned the appeal memorandum stating that no appeal lay to his Court from orders made by his subordinates in execution. The Agency Commissioner was right in the view that no appeal lay to his Court. There is no provision in the Agency Rules for appeals against orders in execution. Rani of Tuni v. Maharaja of Jeypore. (3).

Rules 8, 9, 13 and 14 refer to decrees and not to orders passed in execution or other orders of a miscellaneous character.

The Agency Commissioner having acted properly in returning the appeal memorandum, the defendant could not present a valid petition against the proceedings of that officer under rule 24. But under rule 25 the petitioner should have requested the Agency Commissioner to make a reference to the Government as, in my opinion, the words "in all cases not provided for by the rules" are enough to cover a case of this kind. If the order in execution is one made by the Agency Commissioner himself under rule 24, the aggrieved party may submit a petition to the Government who may refer it to the High Court. It, therefore, follows that orders in execution or other orders of a miscellaneous character, if passed by an Agency Commissioner, are not absolutely final, but they are liable to be revised by the High Court under rule 24. Can it be said that orders of his subordinates of a similar character are entirely immune from interference by a higher authority? In my opinion, rule 25 provides the remedy, and the defendant was entitled to ask the Agency Commissioner to make a reference to the Government under rule 25. Assuming, but not deciding, that the High Court can exercise its powers of superintendence to revise an order so erroneous as manifestly to amount to an injustice as held in Brindaban Chander Choubey v. Gour Chandra Ray (6), I do not think that a case has been made out for our interference under that section.

On the 7th August 1918 the defendant filed a suit against the plaintiff and made an application for the issue of a temporary injunction to restrain the plaintiff from executing the decree in question, and on the 19th August the Assistant Agent passed an order in the following terms:—"The injunction sought for will be issued if defendant pays money into Court. Fifteen days time for payment." Having obtained this order, the defendant paid into Court the full amount of the decree on the 24th August 1918. On the 3rd September 1918 he applied that the plaintiff should be restrained from receiving the amount that had been paid into Court and on the same date a temporary injunction was accordingly issued pending the disposal of the suit instituted by the defendant. The temporary injunction was dissolved in 1920 when the suit filed by the defendant was finally dismissed. The defendant's present contention is that he is not liable to pay interest on the decree amount from the date he paid it into Court. The plaintiff's contention, on the other hand, is that the defendant made the payment after having first obtained the order dated 19th August which practically operated to prevent the plaintiff from withdrawing the amount from Court and that a payment made in such circumstances is not a valid payment. It must be observed that the defendant did not put forward his case properly before the Assistant Agent, who was not in a position in consequence to direct his mind to the appropriate issue which these rival contentions would raise. The summary disposal of the Assistant Agent may be accounted for by this fact. But, apart from the manner in which it has been disposed of, I am not prepared to say that the order is manifestly unjust. The amount throughout lay in Court and carried no interest. The defendant's suit having been ultimately dismissed it must be assumed that he was accountable for damages to the plaintiff in respect of the temporary injunction obtained by the defendant restraining the plaintiff from withdrawing the amount. In a proceeding properly instituted, the plaintiff would probably be entitled to damages and the measure of damages would be the interest which he lost; and in this view the order of the Assistant Agent is equitable. I, therefore, agree that this petition should be dismissed with costs.

City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), s. 33—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Election petition, disposal of, by Chief Judge, Bombay Small Cause Court—Revision.

The Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay, acting under section 33 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, is a persona designata, and not a Court subordinate to the High Court. Consequently, the High Application praying for reversal of an order of the Election Court in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay, in Municipal Appeal No. M/4 of 1923.

Mr. Navalkar, (Petitioner) in person.

Mr. Bahadurjee (with him Mr. Patel and Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar for Mr. W. B. Pradhan), for Opponent No. 1.—I want to raise a preliminary objection. The High Court has no jurisdiction to hear any revision application against the decision of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, as the decision is conclusive under section 33, clause (3) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. The Chief Judge acting under the section is the persona designata and not a Court subordinate to the High Court. There are a number of decisions which have settled the point, though the majority of them are under the District Municipal Act. The decisions in Balaji Sakharan Gurav v. Merwanji Nowroji Antia (1); and Bhaishankar v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (2) have laid down that the Judge acting under the District Municipal Act is not a Court subordinate to the High Court.

[Macleod, C. J.—Is the wording of section 29 of the District Municipal Act similar to section 33 of the Bombay City Municipal Act?]

The observations of Jenkins, C. J., at page 609 of 31 Bombay [Bhaishankar v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (2)] are exactly in point. This Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to revise the order of the Chief Judge. The case in Chunilal Virchand v. Ahmedabad Municipality (3) establishes the same proposition.

[Macleod, C. J.—There is no decision on the point under the City of Bombay Municipal Act.]

Mr. Bahadurjee.—No, my Lord, only a reference is made to section 33 in Bhaishankar v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (2). My Lord, the case in Vijayaraghavan Pillai v. Emperor (4) lays down that the Presidency Magistrate is not a Court subordinate to the High Court for the purposes of certain sections of the Madras City Municipal Act. Chunilal Virchand v. Ahmedabad Municipality (3) a case under section 22 of the District Municipal Act lays down the same proposition.

The petitioners' application is under sections 115 and 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. Neither of the sections applies to the present case, the decision of the Chief Judge is not a decision of a Court, and as such it cannot be called in question by the High Court.

Mr. Navalkar in reply.—The City of Bombay Municipal Act has a history and growth of itself. The Parliament had conferred certain rights on the City as a result of which the Acts of 1884 and 1888 and subsequent amendments were passed. The District Municipal Act cannot, therefore, be looked to from the same standpoint. Unless both the Acts are shown to be strictly analogous, the decisions under section 22 of the District Municipal Act cannot be taken as a guide to interpret section 33 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. The point to be decided is whether a persona designata in a particular Act of the Legislature is to be deemed a legal Tribunal subject to all the incidents of the Judicial Court. The point is considered in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (5). Their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down the law on the subject at page 722 of 19 Bombay Law Reporter: [Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (5).]

[Macleod, C. J.—Your whole argument is that the Chief Judge exercising the powers under the City of Bombay Municipal Act is subordinate to the High Court.]

tion. Petition under section 33 of the Bombay City Municipal Act (III of 1888).

Under section 33 (1) if the qualification of any person declared to be elected for being a Councillor is disputed, or if the validity of any election is questioned whether by reason of the improper rejection by the Commissioner of a nomination or of the improper reception or refusal of a vote, or for any other cause, any person enrolled in the Municipal election roll may, at any time, within 15 days after the result of the election has been declared, apply to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court. Sub-section (2) section 33 directs what the Chief Judge after making such inquiry as he deems necessary, may decide. Under sub-section (3) the said Chief Judge's order shall be conclusive.

On the 7th March the Chief Judge delivered judgment in the matter of the petitioner's application and dismissed it with costs.

The petitioner applies to this Court on the grounds viz.: (1) that the Election Court acted with material irregularity in various ways;

(2) that the Court declined to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it under section 33 of the Bombay City Municipal Act; and

(3) that it erred in trying the petition summarily without framing any issues as requested in order to prevent any miscarriage of justice.

We admitted the petition in order that this matter might be argued as there is no direct authority on the question.

Section 151, Civil Procedure Code, may be easily ruled out as it is clear that the relief which is asked for by the petitioner cannot be granted under that section.

Then under section 115 the High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto. The real question is whether the Chief Judge in the Small Cause Court, acting under the powers granted him by section 33 of the Bombay City Municipal Act, III of 1888, is a Court subordinate to this Court, so that if a case is made out for our interference within the powers granted to us by section 115, Civil Procedure Code, we may make such order as we may think fit.

A similar question arose in Balaji Sakharam Gurav v. Merwanji Ncwroji Antia (1) where it was held that a District Judge acting under section 23 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, Amendment Act (II of 1884), was not a Court within the meaning of the word in section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and that the High Court had no jurisdiction to revise his orders refusing to set aside an election, nor could it interfere with an order made by him that the applicant should pay the costs incurred by the opponent. Section 23 of the District Municipal Act is practically identical in terms, apart from certain immaterial differences with section 33 of the Bombay City Municipal Act. It runs as follows:—

"If the validity of an election of a Municipal Commissioner is brought in question by any person qualified either to be elected or to vote at the election to which such question refers, such person may, at any time within 10 days after the date of the declaration of the result of the election, apply to the District Judge of the District within which the election has been or should have been held. The District Judge may, after such inquiry as he deems necessary, pass an order for confirming or amending the declared result of the election, or for setting the election aside. For the purposes of the said inquiry the District Judge may exercise any of the powers of a Civil Court, and his decision shall be conclusive." The Chief Justice in delivering the judgment said:—

"We are of opinion that a District Judge acting under section 23 of the Bombay District Municipal Act Amendment Act 1884, is not a Court within the meaning of the word in section 622, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and that this Court has no jurisdiction to revise his order refusing to set aside an election.... For the same reason we cannot interfere with the order he has made that the applicant shall pay the actual costs incurred by the opponent. The Circular Order referred to deals only with District Courts, Courts of Small Causes, Subordinate Courts, and Mamlatdar's Courts. The District Judge in the present case is neither of these, and the order can have no, application to him. He is merely a persona designata, and if he has jurisdiction at all to award costs, there is nothing to prevent him from awarding them on the scale he has adopted."

We may refer to another decision in Bhaishankar v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (2). That was a suit filed by the plaintiff under section 33 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act against the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay to have it declared that the General Election of Councilors by the Judges on the 21st February 1907 was invalid and to set aside the said election altogether. It was held that the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. The Chief Justice said:—

"But under section 33 the Chief Judge has jurisdiction to determine the validity of a contested election, and so he is the Tribunal appointed by the Act for that purpose. But where a Special Tribunal, out of the ordinary course, is appointed by an Act to determine questions as to rights which are the creation of that Act, then, except so far as otherwise expressly provided or necessarily implied, that Tribunal's jurisdiction to determine those questions is exclusive..... Here, not only is the Chief Judge appointed the Tribunal, but it also is expressly provided that his order shall be conclusive, and that every election not called in question in accordance with the provisions of section 33 shall be deemed to have been to all intents and purposes a good and valid election."

The point now in issue did not, therefore, arise in that case, but the decision cannot be said in any way to assist the petitioner in showing that it was considered by the Chief Justice that the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, acting as a Special Tribunal under the City of Bombay Municipal Act, was a Court subordinate to the High Court. It seems to us that there is on reason whatever for differing from the decision in Balaji Saktharam Gurav v. Merwanji Nowroji Antia (1) as we think there is no distinction between the provisions of section 23 of the District Municipal Act and section 33 of the Bombay City Municipal Act with regard to this particular point, whether or not the Chief Judge acting under section 33 is a persona designata or a Court subordinate to the High Court. In our opinion, therefore, we have no power to interfere with the decision of the Chief Judge in this case and the Rule should be discharged with costs.

Under O. XLI, r. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code, an Appellate Court has power to implead only such persons as parties to the appeal as were parties in the Trial Court and were not made parties to the appeal, but not those who are complete strangers to the suit. [p. 137, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is a nephew of the defendant, brought this suit for exclusive possession of one-half share in the house in dispute by partition. The defendant pleaded that a partition had already taken place and that the parties had been in separate possession of their shares for more than forty years. It was urged that, in these circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit. The first Court gave effect to this plea, and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

On appeal before the learned District Judge one Musammam Haliman, a sister of the plaintiff, came forward alleging that she was a co-sharer in the property and applied that she should be impleaded as a party and that the case should be re-heard in her presence. On the 10th of April 1922 the learned District Judge passed an order to the effect that Musammam Haliman should be impleaded as an appellant and after hearing arguments of both parties proceeded to judgment the same day. The Judge found on all the issues in favour of the defendant and, agreeing with the findings of the Trial Court, dismissed the appeal.

Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred to this Court and it has been contended on behalf of Musammam Haliman by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri that the course adopted by the learned District Judge was most prejudicial to his client; and that she should either not have been impleaded as a party to the appeal or, if impleaded, she should have been given an opportunity to prove her case. Reliance is placed on Mihin Lal v. Imtiaz Ali (1), which certainly supports the learned Counsel in the contention raised by him. In my opinion, it was most improper to implead Musammam Haliman as a party to the appeal. She was not a party in the Trial Court and was an entire stranger to the suit. Under O. XLI, r. 20, Civil Procedure Code, an Appellate Court has power to implead only such persons as parties to the appeal as were parties in the Trial Court and were not made parties to the appeal but not those who are complete strangers to the suit. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri relies upon Hemanigini Debi v. Haridas Banerjee (2), in support of his contention that an Appellate Court has the power to add as parties even such persons as were not parties in the first Court and also relies upon the inherent powers which a Court possesses under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice. I am unable to agree with him in this contention. The powers of a Court to implead parties are clearly circumscribed by O. XLI, r. 20, and it is only in exceptional circumstances that the inherent powers under section 151 could be invoked. I do not find any exceptional circumstance in the present case which could have justified the Court below to take action under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. The authority relied on is also not applicable, inasmuch as in that case the dispute related to the Probate of a Will, and it has been repeatedly held that the mere possibility of an interest in such a case is sufficient to entitle a person to become a party to the probate proceedings. I, therefore, hold that the impleadment of Musammam Haliman as a party to the appeal in this case was not quite proper and that her name should now be removed from the record altogether. She will, of course, not be affected by any findings that will be given in this case. There is nothing in the appeal of the other appellant, and I dismiss it with costs, but so far as Musammam Haliman is concerned the appeal will be accepted to the extent that her name will be removed from the record.

It is well established law in England that if a stranger builds on the land of another, although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to acquiescence in the building on his land. JUDGMENT.—The appellate judgment of the learned Additional District Judge is very far from satisfactory in many respects, but it is entirely vitiated by a complete failure to distinguish between express consent and implied consent or acquiescence. The actual facts found proved are these. Not later than 1912 the defendant began to build a substantial house on a plot of land in the abadi of the town of Raipur of which the plaintiff is malguzar. The malguzar is bound to give permission to a tenant to build on a suitable site in the abadi and, ordinarily, especially in a large town like Raipur, does give such permission to persons who are not tenants, with or without payment. There was no building on this plot at the time, but there had been one not long before. (The defendant alleged that he bought the right to occupy the site from the previous occupant, but this allegation has been held not proved. The finding in both the lower Courts appears to rest on a misunderstanding of the facts and pleadings, but is really of no consequence, and it may be taken that the defendant took possession of a vacant house site.) Soon after he started building, the plaintiff's agent Kamta Prasad (P. W. No. 2) told him not to build on that site. He replied that he would go and see the plaintiff and settle the matter with him. Kamta Prasad reported the matter to the plaintiff who took no further action in the matter till he launched this suit in 1919 seven years later.

2. In this Court the learned Counsel for the plaintiff, who is respondent here, cited Uda Begam v. Inam-ud-din (1); Nannihal Bhagat v. Rameshar Bhagat (2); Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (3); Dharma Das Kundu v. Amulyadhan Kundu (4) and Premji Jivan Bhat v. Haji Cassum Juma Ahmed (5). In the last mentioned case Sargent, C.J., said: "It is well established law in England that if a stranger builds on the land of another, although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it, unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to an acquiescence in his building on the land Ramsden v. Dyson (6); Plimmer v. Wellington Corporation (7), and see Dattatraya v. Shridhar (8). This is also the law in India, with the exception that the party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building: Narayan v. Bhalagir (9)." The effect of all the other rulings cited is, that it has to be decided in each case whether the special circumstances of that case do or do not amount to such a standing by as that of which the learned Chief Justice speaks in this passage quoted above.

3. In Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (3) it was argued before the Privy Council that the finding of fact of the Courts below in respect of acquiescence was final and could not be disturbed. question of fact, but of legal inference from the facts found; and upon it the judgments of the Appellate Courts are not final." Proceeding on the lines here laid down, I have no hesitation in saying that, from the facts set out above, no inference is possible but that the plaintiff intentionally induced the defendant to believe that he might build on the site without any interference by the plaintiff or any fear of the plaintiff ever attempting to evict him, and on the same terms as all the other holders of sites in the abadi. In this view, the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed under section 60 of the Easements Act. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside. In lieu thereof a decree will issue dismissing the plaintiff's suit and ordering him to pay all the costs of the defendant in all three Courts.

*Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Dismissal of suit for non-joinder of necessary parties—
Exclusion of period of litigation.*

Some of the trustees of a mosque sued for the appointment of a Receiver for the properties belonging to the mosque and for the removal of the manager who, it was alleged, was indebted in a large sum to the mosque. The manager disputed plaintiffs' right to sue and claimed that the mosque was indebted to him. Issues were framed as to this liability and the Court found that a certain sum of money was owing by the mosque to the manager. A Receiver was appointed and was directed to settle accounts with the manager who was thereafter paid a portion of the amount found due. On appeal, however, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the ground that some of the trustees alone were not competent to sue. In a subsequent suit by the manager for recovery of the amount due to him from the mosque.

Held, that during the whole period of the previous litigation in the Court of first instance and in appeal, the plaintiff was bona fide litigating his rights and that that period must, under section 14, of the Limitation Act be excluded from the period of limitation prescribed for the suit. [p. 141, col. 1.]

The interpretation to be put upon section 14 of the Limitation Act must be a wide one, the principle being that limitation would remain in suspense while a plaintiff is bona fide litigating his rights in a Court of Justice. [p. 140, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This case raises a rather difficult point under the Limitation Act. The facts are these: The plaintiff was a manager of a mosque. The defendants are the trustees of that mosque. Some years ago, disputes arose among the trustees inter se and between some at any rate of the trustees and the plaintiff. Those disputes culminated in a suit, Original Suit No. 579 of 1910, before the District Munsif of Cannanore. The suit was by some of the trustees for the appointment of a Receiver to the property of the mosque and for the removal of the present plaintiff, who, they alleged, was indebted in a sum of Rs. 1,000 to them. The present plaintiff, then the first defendant in that suit, put in a written statement in which he disputed the right of the then plaintiffs to bring the action objected strongly to a Receiver being appointed and incidentally alleged that, so far from being indebted to the mosque, the mosque was heavily indebted to him. Issues were framed and one of the issues No. 3 was, "Is the first defendant indebted to the mosque or vice versa? In how much?" Another issue (No. 5) was, "If the mosque is found indebted to the first defendant, has the 1st defendant not to be paid the amount due to him before his removal? What arrangement may be made for his removal, if at all, in the case?" That issue, apparently put upon the record upon the invitation of the present appellants, though presumably assented to by the present first respondent (plaintiff), was very fully inquired into by the District Munsif and at his direction, Commissioners were appointed specially to investigate that matter with the result that it was found by the District Munsif that there was a sum of Rs. 3,302 due and owing by the mosque to the present plaintiff. He appointed a Receiver and removed the present plaintiff from his position although he held that he had not been guilty of any misconduct and that the trustees were not unanimous in desiring his removal, and he directed that the Receiver should take steps to have all claims of the present plaintiff settled as soon as may be possible. After that decree the Receiver took possession and in pursuance of the decree, paid to the present plaintiff a considerable part of the amount which had been found to be due to him. An appeal was taken from the District Munsif's decree to the Subordinate Judge and before him the points argued were; first, whether the suit by some of the trustees alone was maintainable and, secondly, whether on the finding that the mosque was the debtor to the present plaintiff for more than Rs. 2,500, the lower Court should have dismissed the plaintiff's suit for money, or have returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. He held that the suit was in the proper Court as far as the money claimed was concerned but held that, in the circumstances, some only of the trustees were not competent to sue and, therefore, reversed the judgment and dismissed the whole suit. The present plaintiff, not getting the balance of the amount that had been found due to him, then brought this action and he is met by the defence that not having sued for three years his suit is barred by the Limitation Act. He answers that by saying that the time occupied in the previous suit should be deducted from the three years' period.

The principle to be applied turns upon the proper interpretation of section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908, which runs thus, "In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action, and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it." The interpretation to be put upon that section has been a matter of much discussion but this at least may be said that the interpretation must be a wide one and the principle applicable is stated in a few words by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nrityamoni Dass v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (1): "Limitation would without doubt remain in suspense whilst the plaintiffs were bona fide litigating for their rights in a Court of Justice." In that case the then plaintiffs had been defendants in the previous litigation and had got a decree for possession of certain property. The Privy Council said that it would have been better if in those proceedings they had been turned from defendants into plaintiffs, but they still held that although they remained defendants, they were bona fide litigating their rights in a Court of justice. I think the question for consideration by us is whether this plaintiff was in the previous litigation bona fide litigating his rights to be paid this money by the mosque represented by the present defendants. Once it is admitted that there was an issue, and it must be admitted in this case, before the Court as to whether he was entitled to that money or not and the results of that issue might be either an order that he should recover the amount or even a declaratory order that he would be entitled to the amount, such declaratory order being a step towards getting payment, for instance, by exercising a lien that he might have over property or by proving the amount in a claim against either an insolvent estate or estate in the possession of the Court through its Receiver, in my judgment, it is impossible to say that he was not bona fide litigating his rights. In this case the fact is that he actually got an order that an officer of the Court was to pay him the amount due and, in pursuit of that order, he had received a large sum on account from that officer of the Court, the person then in possession of the assets, out of which that payment should be made. Under these circumstances, in my judgment, during the whole period of that litigation, he was bona fide litigating his rights and that period must be excluded from the period of limitation prescribed for this suit.

This appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs of the 1st respondent.

Wallace, J.—I agree. That the plaintiff was prosecuting his claim for money due to him by the mosque seems to be clear from the issues in Original Suit No. 579 of 1910 and from the fact that under the decree in that suit he was paid by the Receiver under the directions of the Court a part of the sums due to him, and he might legitimately expect in the same manner to be paid the rest. Had the decision of the District Munsif in Original Suit No. 579 of 1910 been what that of the Appellate Court upon his decision was, then, on the issues in that case, it could not have been held that the present claim was not being tried; and, on the other hand, had the Appellate Court upheld the original Court's decision and had the Receiver proceeded to carry out the orders of the Original Court, there would have been no cause of action left for the present plaintiff to sue.

It appears to me clear, therefore, that he was prosecuting his claim with due diligence and in good faith in another civil proceeding. Then, as to whether the proceeding was founded upon the same cause of action, I do not think there can be any doubt, although the form in which the plaintiff got his relief in the District Munsif's Court was framed in a declaratory form with a declaration that he had a charge for his money over the mosque property and with the direction already mentioned, to the Receiver appointed by the Court to pay the amount found due to him. The only other point is, whether he was prosecuting his claim in a Court which could not try it because of defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature. I think here it is clear from the final decision in Original Suit No. 579 of 1910 that the District Munsif's Court and the Appellate Court from it were prevented from deciding upon the lawfulness of the present plaintiff's claim, because the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 579 of 1910 had not properly framed their action. That is a cause of a like nature with defect of jurisdiction. This is clearly a case in which the plaintiff has been honestly trying his best to get his case tried on the merits but has failed owing to the Court being unable to give him such a trial.

I, therefore, agree that section 14 of the Limitation Act applied.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 188 (2) (c)—Village held in partnership—Management by lambardar—Suit for profits, maintainability of—General suit for accounts, whether necessary—Interest on village profits, when allowable.

A village was held by the members of a Hindu family who were joint at first but became separate in interest afterwards. But they continued to share profits of the village, of which they were tenants-in-common, by putting all the profits into a common chest and meeting their expenses from the same chest. This arrangement was subsequently discontinued and the village was managed by the member who was the lambardar in his capacity as such lambardar. Differences arose with regard to the distribution of profits and a suit was brought for profits for the period during which the village had been managed by the member as lambardar. It was urged that the various separated members of the family should be regarded as partners and that a general suit for accounts should be brought. Held, that the members could not be regarded as trading partners and that the suit as brought was tenable under section 188 (2) (c) of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act.

No interest can be allowed in a suit for village profits where a co-sharer makes no demand for his share of profits.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Saugor, in Civil Appeal No. 74 of 1921, dated 3rd September 1921.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which are found and admitted in this case are that up to Sambat 1973 the village, the profits of which are in suit, was held by the members of a family which had once been joint but whose members were separated in interest since November 1879. Since that date, though the members of the family are no longer joint, they have been jointly sharing profits of the village, of which they are tenants-in-common, by putting all the profits into a common chest and by meeting their expenses from the same chest. The suit relates to the Sambat years 1974 and 1975, during which period the defendant has admittedly been the lambardar and has been the actual manager of the village. It has been found and admitted that the previous amicable arrangements have no longer continued and that the defendant has been managing the village in the ordinary way as a village is managed by a lambardar. The suit is one that is prima facie tenable under clause (c), sub-section (2) of section 188 of the Land Revenue Act, II of 1917, which enacts that the lambardar shall collect the village profits and render an account of the same to the proprietors.

It is urged on behalf of the appellant, as it was urged in the lower Courts, that the various separated members of the family should be regarded as partners, as in a trading partnership, and that the plaintiff cannot bring a suit for accounts for the two years in suit without bringing a general suit for accounts for the period since November 1879. No precedent in support of this argument has been quoted. The fact is that up to the end of Sambat 1973 the parties agreed with reference to the distribution of the profits, but since that date they have not so agreed, and the defendant has been managing the affairs of the village and is responsible for the profits. No question of a trading partnership arises. No general principle of law applies to the case and paragraph 300 of Mayne's Hindu Law, which refers to a trading partnership which is the property in a Hindu family still joint, has no possible application to the case. I am of opinion that the lower Appellate Court has taken a right view as to the tenability of the suit.

The next ground of appeal raises the question of interest. The learned Advocate for the respondent does not press for interest as he admits that it is not proved that his client made a demand for the village profit. There is certainly no ground for granting interest where a co-sharer makes no demand for his share of the profits. It is just as much the business of a co-sharer to keep the lambardar up to the mark by periodical demands for accounts and profits as it is the duty of the lambardar to keep accounts and hand over the profits. That portion of the decretal amount which is made up of interest must be struck off the decree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 61, 83—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 222—Principal and agent—Suit by agent to recover amount of loss incurred—Limitation, commencement of.

Plaintiffs agreed to purchase a certain amount of grain, to hold it for the defendant, and to resell it under his instructions at such times and in such lots as he might think fit. The grain was purchased and sold in accordance with this agreement and there was a loss on the whole transaction. Plaintiffs sued to recover the amount of the loss from the defendant;

Held, (1) that the transaction between the parties amounted to a contract of agency carrying with it the right to indemnity conferred upon the agent by section 222 of the Contract Act;

(2) that, therefore, the suit was governed by Art. 83 and not by Art. 61 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act; [p. 144, col. 1.]

(3) that limitation began to run from that date when plaintiffs paid for the grain and not from the date when the loss was ascertained after re-sale. [p. 144, col. 2.]

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Puri and Lala Kanshi Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the District Judge of Ferozepore, varying the judgment of the Court of first instance. The action, which was tried before the Subordinate Judge, was brought by a firm of commission agents, on the 24th of July 1914 to recover the sum of Rs. 4,000 alleged to be due to them on foot of certain purchases and sales of grain carried out by them upon the instructions of the defendant. The material facts appear to be as follows:—

A kotla of grain was bought by the plaintiff for the defendant on the 26th of July 1908 for Rs. 4,201-9-3, the plaintiffs paying the purchase price on that date. The grain remained in the possession of the plaintiffs who charged a rent for storage in addition to their brokerage commission. This grain was sold by the plaintiffs on defendant's instructions in different lots, the first lot being sold sometime in May or June 1912 and the last on the 30th September 1912. The total amount realized by these sales amounted to Rs. 2,729, showing a substantial loss on the whole transaction.

The Rs. 4,000 sued for is made up of the amount of this loss together with various sums on foot of commission, rent, interest and so forth. There is no dispute as to amount. The only question we have to determine is whether or not the suit is barred by time. This depends upon the particular Article of the Indian Limitation Act to be applied, which, again, depends upon the nature of the cause of action. The plaintiffs contend that Article 61 applies, which provides (in the Punjab) limitation period of six years for a suit to recover money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant. The defendant, on the other hand, argues that the suit is based upon the breach of a contract of indemnity, and that limitation is governed by Art. 83 of the Act which prescribes a period of three years.

If Art. 61 is applicable, the suit is within time. If Art. 83 is applied, it will depend upon whether time runs from the date of payment for the goods, or from the date when the contract of agency terminated and the actual loss on the whole transaction was ascertained; in the former case the suit is barred, and in the latter it is within time.

Now it appears from the uncontradicted evidence of witnesses that the contract was not simply for the purchase of grain by the plaintiffs for the defendant, but a contract to purchase the goods, hold them for the defendant, and re-sell them upon his instructions at such times and in such lots as he might think fit.

Upon this evidence the transaction may be properly regarded as a contract of agency, carrying with it the right to indemnity conferred upon the agent by section 222 of the Indian Contract Act. That being so, Art. 83 of the Limitation Act is applicable. We are supported in this view by the judgment of Rattigan and Le Rossignol, JJ., in the case of Manghi Ram v. Ram Saran Das-Maman Chand (1), where the facts were similar to those of the present case. It was there held that a suit for recouper of losses incurred by agents in a badni transaction was governed as to limitation by Art. 83. The Court in that case refused to follow the ruling of the Madras Court in Handaswami Pillai v. Avayambal (2), which has been relied upon by the appellants in support of the contention that Art. 61, and not 83, is applicable.

The only question remaining then to be considered is, when did time begin to run? The plaintiffs contend that the time must be computed from the date when the actual loss on the whole transaction was ascertained, i.e., on the 30th September 1912. We cannot accept this view. We are clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs were actually damaged at the moment they were out of pocket by the payment for the grain, namely, on the 26th July 1908. As soon as they had paid the money they could have called upon the defendant to indemnify them. At that date their cause of action arose and from that date time began to run against them.

A similar view was taken by the Court in Kadari Pershad-Chhedi Lal v. Har Bhagwan (3), where the head-note is as follows:—

"Where a commission agent buys goods for a principal, but through the latter's default in paying for the same, they are re-sold by the agent at a loss, a suit by the agent to recover the amount of the said loss with interest and other incidental expenses, must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 83 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act.

"Limitation in such a case operates from the date of the payment made on behalf of the principal and not from the date of the sale."

As our own views are entirely in accord with those expressed by the learned Judges in the above cited judgments of this Court, we hold that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by time.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs, and the order of the lower Appellate Court be affirmed.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898),
s. 235—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 215, 420, offences under—Conviction for more serious

When the facts proved in a case constitute two or more offences, the Court should convict of, and punish for, the most serious offence that is established, provided the accused has been charged with, and has had an opportunity of meeting the charge of that offence. [p. 147, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a person takes a ransom for the restoration of stolen property, and fails to return that property to the person who paid him the ransom and the facts show an offence under section 420 of the Penal Code, though they also establish an offence under section 215, he can be convicted under section 420 provided he was duly charged with it. [p. 147, col. 1.]

Dputy Legal Remembrancer v. Ijjatullah Kazi, 10 C. W. N. 1005; 4 Cr. L. J. 154, referred to.

Reference made in criminal appeal against the judgment of the Special Power Magistrate, Thaton.

REFERRING ORDER.—The following reference was made by Mr. Justice Duckworth to a Bench under section 11 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, 1900:—

The facts of this case are very clear, and there are no reasons for holding, as stated by the appellant, that the prosecution case against him was a mere fabrication, due to a plot between complainant and his Chinese brother-in-law, Htan Na. In fact, the appeal was only admitted for consideration of the question whether the appellant, Nga Shan, was rightly convicted under section 420, Indian Penal Code, under which use could be made of his three previous convictions under section 380, Indian Penal Code, in order to impose upon him a heavy sentence, or whether, on the facts before the Court, he should merely have been convicted under section 215, Indian Penal Code, under which his sentence could not extend to more than two years' rigorous imprisonment.

As matters stand, appellant has been convicted under section 420, Indian Penal Code, for cheating and inducing the delivery of money, to wit, a sum of Rs. 14, and has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement. He was accused of inducing the complainant to pay him Rs. 14 as a ransom for the return of his two bullocks, which had undoubtedly been stolen, and, thereafter, in spite of several successive promises to return the said animals at Thindawgyi Kyaukkon, of failing upon each occasion to restore them. As a matter of fact, the said cattle have never been returned.

According to my view, the questions to be considered in order to determine the matter, are:—

(i) Does the record indicate that the appellant ever had the animals in his possession or control?

(ii) If so, does it show, or lead to the inference, that he had from the first, no intention of restoring them to the owner, after receipt of the ransom money? (Cheating).

(iii) Is it indicated that he may have at first intended to return the bullocks, and subsequently changed his mind, or otherwise been prevented from doing so? (No. Cheating).

(iv) Or, is it to be inferred that he never had control of the animals, and all along intended to swindle the owner out of his money? (Cheating).

Normally, where the facts show an offence under section 215, Indian Penal Code, it would be a Court's duty to convict under that section but I can see no reason, where the facts proved, or to be inferred, indicate the commission of a more serious offence (which may include an offence under section 215, Indian Penal Code), why a Court should be precluded from convicting an offender under the appropriate section, provided, of course, that he has been duly charged with it. It seems to me that section 235, Criminal Procedure Code, expressly provides for such a case.

The matter was decided by my learned brother, Pratt, J., in the unpublished case of Nga Kyaw Zan v. King-Emperor, Criminal Appeal No. 673 of 1912, where he came to the conclusion that, in cases where section 215, Indian Penal Code, fitted the crime, section 215, and not section 420, Indian Penal Code, should be utilized. However, it does not appear to me that the matter was thoroughly thrashed out in that instance, and I am aware that there are differences of opinion about the correctness of that decision.

I have already stated what my own view is, and what questions have to be decided in each separate case, for, in my opinion, the decision depends entirely on what are the proved facts in each instance, it being impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule.

What are the facts proved and to be inferred in the present case?

Complainant apparently met appellant casually, when searching for his bullocks, and told him of his loss, and asked him to attempt to procure information about them. The appellant told complainant that he would try to get news, and requested the complainant to meet him that evening. This was on the day following the actual theft of the animals.

At the meeting that night, in the kwin, appellant informed the complainant that he had received news of the lost cattle. On complainant mentioning a ransom, appellant said that he would go and consult another person, and warned the complainant to meet him next morning. The meeting took place in complainant's durian garden, and appellant told complainant that the ransom would be Rs. 30. On complainant suggesting that this was, perhaps, too much, it was arranged that they should meet again at complainant's brother-in-law, Htan Na's house that night at Tangale. At that meeting the appellant accepted a sum of Rs. 14 as a ransom for the return of the cattle and indicated the spot already referred to as the place where the bullocks would be released. On at least four occasions he failed to keep this promise, and the case was then sent up to Court.

I think it may be taken from these allegations, that the appellant, who knew complainant well, never had possession of, or control over, the cattle, and merely seized upon complainant's complaisance, in order to defraud him of what money he could. The cattle were worth at least

Rs. 120, and it is probable that a man, who had them securely in his control, would not have been contented with a paltry sum of Rs. 14 as a ransom.

If this be so, it seems to me that the offence could fall under section 420, Indian Penal Code.

If the appellant had possession, or control, of the animal while he might have been convicted under section 379 or section 411, Indian Penal Code, he could not well have been convicted under section 420, Indian Penal Code, unless it was shown, or was clearly to be inferred, that he never intended to restore them on payment of a ransom for, if he intended to return the bullocks at the time when the ransom was paid, but subsequently changed his mind, or was otherwise prevented from returning them, the offence of cheating would not have been complete. The case of the Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Ijjatullah Kazi (1) might be referred to with reference to the last statement of law made by me.

In the present instance, my opinion is that an offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code, has been proved, and that the conviction was correct. In view, however, of the fact that Pratt, J., has come to a different decision in the case already referred to, which I am aware has since been followed in several Lower Burma Districts, I consider that the matter is of sufficient importance to be referred to a Bench or a Full Bench, of this Court, as the learned Chief Judge may decide.

The question referred will be:—When an accused person has taken a ransom for the restoration of stolen property, and fails to return that property to the person who has paid him the ransom, can he be convicted under section 420, Indian Penal Code, or must the conviction be confined to one under section 215, Indian Penal Code?

OPINION.

Robinson, C. J.—The question referred for the decision of this Bench is stated as follows:—“When an accused person has taken a ransom for the restoration of stolen property, and fails to return that property to the person who has paid him the ransom, can he be convicted under section 420, Indian Penal Code, or must the conviction be confined to one under section 215, Indian Penal Code?"

(1) 10 C. W. N. 1005; 4 Cr. L. J. 154.

The reference presumes that the facts established by the evidence would constitute the offence of cheating though they would also establish an offence under section 215, Indian Penal Code. In other words, the question is whether, the Legislature having enacted an offence to meet a particular form of crime, it is open to the Courts to convict of a more serious crime when the facts proved constitute that more serious offence.

This reference has been made because of an unpublished ruling of a Judge of this Court holding the view that it is not open to the Court to convict of the more serious offence. No reasons for that decision were given and no authority was cited, so that we do not know on what ground that dictum was laid down.

The Indian Penal Code defines many offences, some of the same character as others but differing in degree, others of an entirely different character. The general rule which, in our opinion, should guide the Courts is to convict of and punish for the most serious offence that is established provided, of course, that the accused has been charged with and has had an opportunity of meeting the charge of that offence.

Section 215, Indian Penal Code, was no doubt enacted to provide for a particular class of offence. Without it there might be cases in which as the facts constitute no other offence the guilty person would get off scot free. But we can find no ground for holding that the Legislature meant to confine the Court to that offence when the facts proved amount to another and more serious offence. If a man is guilty of the offence of rape and it is established that he was in committing that offence also guilty of murder it could surely never be held that because the Legislature had provided for the particular offence of rape he could not be convicted of murder.

We must, therefore, answer the reference by saying that he can be convicted of cheating.

Macgregor, J.—I concur in the answer to the reference proposed by the learned Chief Judge. The offences under sections 215 and 420 have the common ingredient that a person has been induced to part with money or money's worth. The addition to this of certain facts will result in an offence under section 215, against public justice. The addition to it of certain facts of a different kind will result in an offence under section 420, against property. Where the ingredients of an offence under section 420 are proved, I can find no provision of law forbidding a conviction under it merely because of the presence of other facts which, if looked at to the exclusion of some of the ingredients of the offence under section 420, disclose an offence under section 215.

*Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 149—
Riot—Common object—Liability of persons present at different times.*

In cases of convictions of members of a riotous mob, for a specific act of violence, if persons found at particular points of time to be members of the mob but not shown to have taken part in the specific act, are to be held guilty of that act by force of sections 34 or 149 of the Penal Code, it must be clearly found that that act was done in furtherance of the common intention of the mob while the accused were in it or that the act was such as these accused knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of their object. [p. 149, col. 1.]

Where the common object of a crowd innocent at first develops by degrees into something heinous and culpable and such developments are not inherent in its original common object but are merely ebullitions of spasmodic fury in a direction which none at first in the crowd could have contemplated, members originally present but absent at the time of the latter acts are not liable for these latter acts. A Court cannot presume that any and every person who is found to have been present in a riotous mob at any time or to have joined it at any stage during its activities is in law guilty of every act committed by it from the beginning to the end. In such cases the Court should consider, first, what was the original intention of the mob and which of its offences naturally were inherent or likely to have occurred in the prosecution of that intention and which were not; secondly, at what stage of the riot were the accused present and what was the temper, the intention, and the common object of the mob while they were present, what acts was it likely to go on to commit in furtherance of that common object; and thirdly, whether if they had left the mob at any stage, they could nevertheless be constructively held guilty of any of the acts committed by the mob after they had left. [p. 149, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session of the Trichinopoly Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 2 of 1922, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Musiri, in C.C. No. 41 of 1921.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. F. S. Vaz (for the Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

ORDER.—Petitioners have been convicted of having taken part in a riot and committed various offences in the course of the riot. The riot took place at Karur on the night of 24th August 1921 and early morning of 25th August 1921, and was occasioned, as found by the lower Courts, by an attempt on the part of the Congress and Khilafat Committees there to compel the manager of a theatrical troupe performing at the theatre at Karur to hand over to the funds of these Committees his takings for one night's performance. Annoyed at his refusal, the crowd who had accompanied the Secretaries of these Committees attacked the theatre while the performance was going on, stampeded the audience and committed various acts of violence to the persons in the audience and the property of the troupe. The Trying Court has written a careful and discriminating judgment, in which the main facts of the riot are very clearly set out.

The chief incidents of the night are detailed in order in paragraph 83, and following paragraphs of the Trying Court's judgment. The particular offences of which the crowd, generally, has been found guilty are endangering human life by throwing stones (section 336, Indian Penal Code), causing hurt by the same (section 337), causing hurt to Police Officers (section 332), wrongful restraint (section 341), mischief (section 426) and criminal trespass (section 447). The lower Courts have found the petitioners guilty of all these offences either directly or constructively by force of sections 34 and 149, Indian Penal Code.

The riot began at 8-30 P. M. and went on spasmodically till 9-30 the next morning. Between 11-30 P. M., when the Police fired and one of the mob was killed; until 6-30 A. M., there appears to have been a decided lull in the activities of the mob. Prior to 11-30 P. M., however, all the offences of which the mob as a whole were found guilty of had been perpetrated, although again at 6-30 A. M. there was a renewal of the offences under sections 426 and 447, and further offences under section 435 by isolated members of the crowd. That the actions of the mob between 8-30 and 11-30 P. M. were united and concerted and continuous admits of no doubt; and for whatever criminal offences it committed or was likely to commit in furtherance of its common object during that period, each member of the assembly would in law be responsible. As to the renewal of activities at 6-30 A. M. before individual members of the original mob could be held in law responsible for those acts, it would have to be clearly shown either that they were present during the second riot or that the second riot was a continuation of, and a likely result of the first.

It is also found that one of the petitioners, the 1st accused although present at the beginning of the riot at 8-30 P. M. left the place almost at once.

It is contended generally for petitioners, and cannot, I think, be denied, that both the lower Courts have used sections 34 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code in too loose and uncritical a manner, and have not clearly in all cases found as facts the ingredients necessary for convictions by force of these sections. In cases where there is no direct evidence of the actual participation of the accused in a specific act of violence, if persons proved at particular points of time to be members of the mob but not shown to have taken part in the specific act are to be found guilty of that act by force of section 34, it must be clearly found that that act was in furtherance of the common intention of the mob while these accused were in it, or if section 149 is used, it must be clearly found that that act was also in prosecution of the common object or such as these accused knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of their object. The common object of the rioters for the purpose of section 149, which may be taken to be much the same as the common intention for the purpose of section 34, is set out in the charge, as taking vengeance on P. W. No. 2, the proprietor of the Dramatic Company, because of his refusal to give the collections of the night to the Congress and Khilafat Funds, and "later on" to take vengeance also on the Deputy Superintendent of Police and his Constables.

Now the Trial Court makes it clear, (paragraph 114) that the attempt to take vengeance on the Deputy Superintendent of Police only arose after one of the rioters had been shot dead, that is, about 11-30 P. M. and only materialised in any overt act in the attack in the early morning. In my view it cannot be held that persons who were in the mob at the first attack up to, say, 11-30 P. M., must necessarily be held, in the absence of evidence, to have been present in the second attack at 6-30 A.M. and conversely and much more obviously those only proved to be present at the second attack cannot possibly, in the absence of some evidence, be held to have been present at the first. Obviously, also, the common object of a crowd, comparatively innocent at first, may develop by degrees into something very much more heinous and culpable: and these developments may, on the one hand, be such as were naturally inherent in its original common object or may, on the other hand, be ebullitions of spasmodic fury in a direction which no one who was at first in the crowd could have contemplated.

In the latter case, I do not see how members originally present but absent at the time could be liable for these latter acts.

The lower Courts should have, therefore, considered, first, what was the original intention of the mob and which of its offences naturally were inherent or likely to have occurred in the prosecution of that intention and which were not: secondly, at what stage of the riot were these petitioners present, and what was the temper, the intention and the common object of the mob while they were present what acts was it likely to go on to commit in furtherance of that common object; and, thirdly, whether, if they had left the mob at any stage, they could nevertheless be held guilty of any of the acts committed by the mob after they had left. The lower Courts should have paid more attention to the provisions of section 148, Indian Penal Code, which lays down that no one is a member of an unlawful assembly unless he is aware of the facts that render that assembly an unlawful one and intentionally joins or continues in it. It may be difficult to decide these points clearly, but it has to be done. I am not, therefore, prepared to accede to the contention of Mr. Vaz, who appeared for the Public Prosecutor, and I am sure it is not the law that a Court is to presume that any and every person who is proved to have been present in a riotous mob at any time or to have joined it at any stage during its activities is in law guilty of every act committed by it from the beginning to the end, or that each member, of such a crowd must from the beginning have anticipated and contemplated resistance to the organised forces of order, that is, the Police, or have made up his mind before the riot began to oppose such resistance and overcome such force as stood in the way of the mob accomplishing its common object. That appears to me to be a fundamentally wrong view in law, though, of course, such a combination of common objects might be proved by evidence to have existed. It is entirely a question of fact on which findings, as I have indicated above, must be recorded by the Trying Court before it can apportion the legal responsibility of the various members of the unlawful assembly. In order to find what was the common object of the crowd at the beginning, it is not a legitimate method merely to take all the actual offences committed by it in the course of the riot, and to infer that all these were originally part of its common object and must normally be based on more evidence than the mere acts themselves. I am not prepared, therefore, to infer as a matter of law that persons whose common object, say, from 8-30 to 11-30 P. M. was to wreak vengeance on P. W. No. 2 must necessarily have been those or joined with those whose common object between 6-30 and 9-30 P. M. was to wreak vengeance on the Deputy Superintendent of Police and vice versa. It is a matter for definite evidence and proof. This is a point to which neither of the lower Courts has paid any attention and it is a matter of great importance in the cases of several of those petitioners with whom I shall now deal.

The facts leading up to the riot as found are that about 5 P. M. the 1st accused, the local Secretary of the Congress Committee went to P. W. No. 2 at his house and demanded of P. W. No. 2 to give the collections of the night to the Congress and Khilafat Committee, and then threatened that there would be a disturbance and riot (P. W. No. 2 uses both words) if the money was not paid, and that, again, at 8-30 P. M. a crowd of about 200 people headed by the 1st accused and three or four others assembled outside the theatre to repeat and enforce the demand. This latter demand was in the nature of an ultimatum, P. W. No. 2 having already several times refused previous requests of this nature. Some throwing of stones by the crowd on the theatre was going on. Then the 1st accused and three or four others went inside the compound, evidently as leaders and representatives of the crowd, and the 1st accused renewed their demands for the collections from P. W. No. 2. P. W. No. 2 put him off, promising to pay something in the morning. The 1st accused and his companions went after ten minutes purely in an angry mood, the 1st accused saying definitely that P. W. No. 2's promise was unsatisfactory and that it was impossible to prevent a disturbance, as the crowd would not listen to him. When the 1st accused reached the crowd and went into it, stones began to fall and the riot definitely began, the crowd being "furious," as P. W. No. 2 puts it, because he would not give any money. The evidence is that the 1st accused raised his hand to the crowd. P. W. No. 3 thought he was trying to pacify it, P. W. No. 4 that he was encouraging it to riot. D. W. No. 22, the only defence witness of any use on this part of the case, says that the 1st accused was trying to disperse the crowd, but he did not go near the crowd and evidently cannot say at what stage of the proceedings he saw the 1st accused do so. It is clear that the 1st accused cleared off the scene at an early stage of the riot and was not seen after about 8-30 P. M.

Now, no witness speaks to the first accused having committed any of the specific acts of violence by the mob. His conviction is based purely on the application of sections 34 and 149, Indian Penal Code, to his case, on the ground, as both Courts have held, that he, as leader and spokesman of the mob, was legally responsible for all that the mob substantially did in furtherance of its common object although he himself left it at the beginning. The findings of fact in his case, so far as they are relevant, appear to be as follows:—that at 5 P. M. he threatened P. W. No. 2 with a riot if his demands were not complied with; that at 8-30 P. M. he was at the head of a mob of two hundred people to support his demands and acted as spokesman, but when his demand was refused, he again hinted at a riot, and that when he again reached the crowd, stone-throwing began. There is no evidence of any cries of the mob which would go to show what its intention then was: but it appears to me to have been simply to bring further intimidation to bear on P. W. No. 2 to grant its demands. Its action was confined to stone-throwing until about 10-25 P. M. when the Police arrived with arms, and the play was not stopped until twenty minutes later when the attack of the mob appeared imminent and the Police outposts, who were on the road, were withdrawn inside the compound. Thus, for at least two hours after the first accused left nothing more than stone-throwing went on although the crowd was in numbers easily sufficient to force its way in and break down any resistance. In these circumstances, I am not prepared to find that the crowd at 8-30 P. M. had any common intention of breaking into the theatre, stampeding the audience, wrecking the performance and damaging the properties. Nor am I prepared to find that at that time it was obvious to the members of it that such results were likely to happen. A person leaving the crowd then would be justified in inferring that its temper was such that it would, as it did, do nothing more serious than throwing stones indefinitely, until something unforeseen and which could not be reasonably anticipated roused them to more criminal actions. Any member, therefore, who left it at 8-30 can at the most only be held guilty by force of sections 34 and 149 of offences under sections 336 and 337 of the Indian Penal Code.

It is urged on behalf of the first accused that the evidence does not show that he was a member of the unlawful assembly at all, and that, on the contrary, he was trying to prevent the assembly using violence, but in this contention I cannot concur. His whole conduct indicates to my mind that he intended to use show of force and intimidation to P. W. No. 2 to get his illegal demand enforced and that he headed the crowd for that purpose: and I agree with the lower Courts in holding that the stone-throwing was inherent in his plan, if not actively directed by him. It was going on when he left the crowd to confer with P. W. No. 2, and began again when he returned from the conference. But I must disagree with the Trying Court when it seeks to fasten on him the responsibility for the further actions of the crowd, merely because he "did not use his power of control over the crowd" to prevent further offences, or because he did not beforehand communicate the intention of the mob to the authorities (see paragraph 117 of the lower Court's judgment) and with the lower Appellate Court's even more unsatisfactory inference that, because he was an "important personage among the rioters," therefore, he must be held responsible for all that his comrades did in the course of the riot. (See paragraph 4 of the Sessions Court's judgment). I, therefore, hold that the first accused's conviction under section 147 and sections 336 and 337 by force of sections 34 and 149 is legal and that his conviction under other sections is not legal and must be set aside.

The next set of petitioners with whom I have to deal are those proved to have been in the assembly between 8-30 P. M. and midnight, accused Nos. 9, 12, 13, 15, 21, 29, 31 and 33. I would here remark that I accept only the evidence believed by the Trying Court. The question whether, in any particular case, a witness who has retracted in cross-examination what he stated in chief examination should be believed has to be decided on the facts of the case, and I would demur to attempting to lay down, as the lower Appellate Court has done, any general principle in such cases. In the present case I consider that the Trying Court has probably appreciated better than the lower Appellate Court the extent of credibility to be attached to such witnesses and prefer with the Trial Court to reject such witnesses altogether. The common intention of the mob between 8-30 and 11-30, has been found to be and obviously was to stone the premises, the patrons to the show and the Police, break open the compound gates, trespass into the compound, commit mischief there, drive off the audience, and close the performance, so much. The 9th accused is only identified as having in the beginning dissuaded people from buying tickets, and having thrown stones. His case is similar to that of the 1st accused and his conviction has to be similarly modified.

So far as the 12th accused is concerned the evidence is that he threw stones during the riot and assaulted Constables at about midnight. No one says that he was present after that. He was, therefore, in my opinion, guilty of the acts of the mob up to midnight as he was still taking part in the attacks at midnight, and his conviction by force of sections 34 and 149, Indian Penal Code, for the acts committed up to that time by the mob, i.e., under sections 147, 336, 337 426 and 447 appears to me correct, but his conviction under section 341 as I shall indicate later, cannot be upheld.

As to the 13th accused there is evidence against him similar to that against the 12th accused and his case must be similarly dealt with.

GANAPATHI SARMA V. EMPEROR.

As to the 15th accused he is proved to have held P. W. No. 9, one of the spectators, as he was running away from the shed. He is said to have recognised P. W. No. 9 and let him go. There is nothing to show that his action was in concert with the mob or that his action was not wholly innocent, and it is not said that any crowd was with him at the time. I do not see how it can be inferred from that act alone that the 15th accused was one of the mob who took part in its common object. There is no other evidence that an offence under section 341 was part of the common intention of the mob at any time. I find, therefore, no evidence on which the 15th accused can be convicted and his conviction must be set aside. It also follows that section 341 must be struck out in the case of all accused since this act of the 15th accused is the only evidence that any wrongful restraint of ordinary spectators by the mob occurred.

As to accused No. 21 there is the strong evidence of his taking part in the initial stone-throwing and that he was present also when the mob burst open the gate at 11-30 P. M. His case is, therefore, the same as accused No. 12.

As to accused No. 29 there is evidence that he took part in the throwing of stones before the advance into the compound was made.

As to accused No. 31, there is evidence that he was inside the compound after the first entry by the mob, burning Policemen's clothes about 11 P. M. or midnight and that later on he took part at 8-30 A. M. in burning the doors. That evidence was sufficient for the Trying Court to conclude that he was present throughout, and his conviction directly or constructively for all acts of the mob, except the offence under section 341 is, therefore, correct.

As to accused No. 33, his case appears to me to be the same as that of accused No. 9.

The next batch of accused is Nos. 3, 27 and 48. All three appear only in the later attack in the early morning. Accused No. 3 is identified as a member of the mob by P. W. No. 15. I am asked to interfere in his case as he is an old man and was shot during the riot. He was evidently the man at whom P. W. No. 1 fired because he saw him aiming a stone at him although P. W. No. 1 was not able to identify him. (P. W. No. 1 in the list in paragraph 113 of the Trying Court's judgment is a mistake for P. W. No. 15). The evidence shows clearly that he was inside the compound and, therefore, there was enough evidence for the lower Courts to find that he was guilty of being a member of an unlawful assembly.

As to accused Nos. 27 and 48 they were seen by many witnesses committing mischief by fire to the property in the compound. The acts committed by the mob in this second attack were obviously criminal trespass, mischief and mischief by fire, and the mob's intention then was not only to get at P. W. No. 2 but also at P. W. No. 1, the Deputy Superintendent of Police. I think that the evidence as to the acts of the later mob is, in the absence of other evidence, sufficient to clearly identify it with the original mob and its actions. It is found that the mob had remained all night at the spot between 11-30 P. M. to 6-30 A. M. and that at 6-30 it continued the efforts to break down the resistance and was still as is evident from the case of accused No. 3, throwing stones. I hold that these three accused were, in the absence of reliable evidence to the contrary, fairly proved to have been members of the mob and in the riot throughout and were, therefore, guilty in law of all the acts of the mob, from which I exclude the offence under section 341, Indian Penal Code.

The net result is that all the accused are acquitted of the offence under section 341, Indian Penal Code, and that the convictions of accused Nos. 3, 12, 13, 21, 27, 31 and 48 are otherwise confirmed: that the convictions of accused Nos. 1, 9, 29, 33, under sections 426 and 447 are set aside and otherwise confirmed: and that the 15th accused is acquitted altogether. In the case of accused Nos. 12, 13, 21, 27, 31 and 48, I reduce the sentence of imprisonment by two weeks, and in the case of the 3rd accused who has already been two weeks in jail, I think that is sufficient and reduce the sentence of imprisonment to the period already undergone.

In the case of the 1st accused I reduce the fine to Rs. 200, and in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 6 weeks, and in the case of the 9th accused the period of imprisonment not undergone will be remitted but the fine of Rs. 500 will stand. In the case of accused Nos. 29 and 33 I cancel the fine and the sentence will otherwise stand. Accused Nos. 12, 13, 21, 27, 31, 29, 33 and 48 will go back to Jail to serve out their sentence.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 40—Possession, determination of—Revenue Court, jurisdiction of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 146, 435 (3)—Property attached under s. 146—Release after determination of possession by Revenue Court—Revision.

Under section 40 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, the Revenue Court is competent to decide as to which of the parties is entitled to the possession of the property in dispute although it has no jurisdiction to determine finally the question of the title to that property. [p. 154, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a Magistrate releases property attached under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code consequent upon possession being awarded to a party under section 40 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, the order of release cannot be questioned in revision by virtue of section 435 (3) of the Code. [p. 154, col. 2.]

Messrs. Chhail Behari Lal, Niamat Ullah and Satyanand Roy, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application, under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Lucknow, dated 18th April 1922, confirming an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Lucknow, dated the 8th March 1922.

The Talukdar of Itaurja died in January 1921. Two claimants came forward—the present applicant and the opposite party. The Magistrate took action under sections 145 and 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as he apprehended a breach of the peace between the two claimants and, finally, on the 27th January 1921, after deciding that neither party was then in possession, made an order under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure attaching the taluka. A Receiver was appointed.

Subsequently, proceedings at the instance of one or other of the parties were taken in the Revenue Court for mutation of names. An Assistant Collector, under section 40 of the Land Revenue Act, likewise found that neither party was in possession but after ascertaining by summary enquiry which of them was best entitled to the property in question, that is to say, both the taluka and the non-talukdari property, made an order in favour of the applicant for possession in respect of the non-talukdari property and of the opposite party in respect of the taluka. This decision was appealed against to the Collector and the appeal was transferred to the Deputy Commissioner of Rae Bareilly who upheld the decision of the Assistant Collector.

SURENDRA BIERAM SINGH v. EMPEROR.

A copy of this decision was sent to the District Magistrate of Lucknow, who had attached the property under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and he removed the Receiver and delivered the taluka to the non-applicant. There was an application in revision to the Sessions Judge on the ground that the District Magistrate had no power to release the property from attachment until a competent Court had determined the rights of the parties thereto, and that the Assistant Collector acting under section 40 of the Land Revenue Act, was not a competent Court to determine such rights. This application was rejected by the Sessions Judge (he has wrongly signed himself as District Judge) on the ground that under section 435 (3) an order passed under section 146 (being an order under Chapter XII) of the Code of Criminal Procedure could not be called in question in revision.

The questions for me to decide in this application are :—

(1) Was the District Magistrate of Lucknow justified in releasing the property from attachment on the ground that the decision of the mutation case in favour of the non-applicant amounted to a determination by a competent Court of the rights of the parties?

(2) If not, is this Court debarred by section 435 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure from interfering with this order?

(3) Should this Court interfere?

As to question (1) it has been argued that the Assistant Collector, acting under section 40 of the Land Revenue Act, had only jurisdiction to "ascertain by summary enquiry who was the best person entitled to the property" and that this could not mean that he had jurisdiction as a competent Court to determine the rights of the parties to the property. The expression quoted, no doubt, merely means that the Revenue Court shall decide by a summary enquiry who appears to have the best prima facie title. This is not the same thing as determining the rights of the parties. But the argument advanced omits the fact that section 146 adds to the expression "until a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties thereto" the words "or the person entitled to possession thereof." I am of opinion that the Assistant Collector, although he was not competent to decide the rights of the parties to the property was entitled to decide the person entitled to possession thereof. Section 40 requires that, after the summary enquiry as to the person who has the best prima facie title, the Court "shall put such person in possession." It is impossible to hold that this provision does not give the Court power to decide the person entitled to possession. The questions of title to possession and of an absolute title are quite different and the fact that the decision as to title to possession is based merely on a summary enquiry as to the person best entitled to the property cannot be used as an argument that the Court is not competent to decide the question of title to possession when the section requires a Court to put the person into possession.

As to question (2), under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Criminal Court after attaching the property is functus officio unless the subsequent event occurs of a competent Court determining the rights of the parties to the property or the person entitled to possession thereof. If, therefore, I had held that a competent Court had not determined either of these questions, I should have been prepared to hold that the action of the District Magistrate in releasing the property was without jurisdiction and as such could not be said to be an order under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Consequently, the bar against revision created by section 435 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure would not operate. Question (3) does not arise.

Consequently I dismiss this application.

Irregularity.*

An order of the Government sanctioning, under section 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution of a person for a political offence did not say in its body to whom the order was given but the District Magistrate, the Special Magistrate and the Public Prosecutor concerned were designated below it. It was objected that the order was open to objection on the ground that it was not given to any determinate person:

Held, (1) that the order must be taken as addressed to the persons designated below who were the persons concerned in the holding of the trial;

(2) that even if the objection was valid, the omission was a mere irregularity covered by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.—Preliminary objection has been taken to the trial in the lower Court in this appeal and a similar objection on an identical ground has been taken to the trial in Criminal Appeal No. 847 of 1922. We have accordingly heard the learned Counsel in both these cases before giving judgment. Our decision on the objections in this case will apply also to the objection in Criminal Appeal No. 847 of 1922.

The objection is that, the case being instituted under an order of the Local Government based on section 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the order, Exhibit A, in the present case being similar to the order in the other already referred to, is not as contemplated by law, and a condition precedent to the validity of the proceedings is, therefore, wanting; or more definitely that the order of authorization by Government is not given to any determinate person as (it is said) section 196 impliedly requires. This objection was not taken in either case in the grounds of appeal in any specific way, but the learned Public Prosecutor has not demurred to our proceeding at once. It is further material that in neither case was any such objection taken at the trial. This might be important if we proposed to deal with the matter under the explanation to section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code or the last portion of section 16 of the Ordinance No. 1 of 1922. For we have not been shown how the accused were prejudiced in any way in the disposal of the case on the merits. Nothing of that sort is in fact alleged; and, when the question is only of the machinery for the institution and prosecution of the proceedings and not of the mischief, which section 196 is designed to prevent, the institution of proceedings in respect of grave political offences without the approval of the Government at all, we should be prepared to hold that we are concerned only with an irregularity covered by section 537 or section 16 of the Ordinance, not with an illegality by which the proceedings would be vitiated.

But in fact there is, in our opinion, neither illegality nor irregularity. The order in question, no doubt, runs simply: "His Excellency the Governor in Council in exercise of the powers conferred on him by section 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, hereby sanctions the prosecution of the said persons before Special Judge for offences punishable under section 121 of the Indian Penal Code." But this order was communicated and is and must be taken as addressed to the three persons, designated below it; the District Magistrate, Malabar, the Public Prosecutor, Malabar and the Senior Special Judge as the person concerned in the holding of trials. There is some difficulty about the Public Prosecutor, Malabar. But we are informed that appointments of Public Prosecutors, who are, no, doubt called Additional Public Prosecutors, have been made for the whole of the Malabar District, and not, as the appointment of the ordinary Public Prosecutors attached to the existing Sessions Court is made, for North and South Malabar. The important point, however, is the communication of the order to the District Magistrate, because he is the officer who in Malabar, as elsewhere, is entrusted with the duty of initiating prosecutions generally for offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code. There is no suggestion that the District Magistrate is not directly or indirectly responsible for the prosecution. The complaint was presented and the prosecution was carried on by Mr. Rama Pattar, who signs and describes himself as Additional Public Prosecutor, South Malabar; we must then apply to what he did, section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act and particularly illustration (e) thereto; and it must be presumed that Mr. Rama Pattar was a person duly empowered to initiate and carry on the proceedings. No objection was taken at the trial to that presumption and there is nothing on the record to support any objection to it. In these circumstances, we do not think that any objection to the order of the Government, as insufficient in itself or as insufficient to justify the initiation and carrying out of the proceedings by Mr. Rama Pattar has been established.

We turn then to the contentions peculiar to Appeal No. 1160 of 1922; and we have first to deal with an application, Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 653 of 1922, for the admission in evidence of the depositions of two Police Officers in another case or for their examination now as witnesses. The circumstances are that these two Police Officers gave evidence in Case

No. 7 of 1921 on the 7th October 1921 and succeeding days; that is to say, over six months before the trial in the present case was held. The petition is argued on the ground that the accused could not, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have known of or adduced this evidence, which is said to be material. We cannot see how there was anything in the circumstances to prevent their knowing of and adducing this evidence, when what these witnesses spoke to had been public property for over six months before the trial. We have, moreover, had the evidence read; and we do not see how it can be regarded as material. Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 653 of 1922, therefore, fails and is dismissed.

On the merits of the present case, as disclosed by the evidence, there are the statements of the 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th prosecution witnesses, eye-witnesses. There is no doubt, that, if those statements are believed, the charge against the accused is amply made out. Against the 3rd, 5th, 6th and 7th prosecution witnesses there is nothing, either in the shape of enmity or against their credit. The credit of the 4th prosecution witness may be doubtful since he is a dismissed village servant. Of these witnesses, 7th prosecution witness says that he gave information to the authorities a few days after the occurrence; and that is not contradicted. Sixth prosecution witness was a Head Constable who might very naturally note or remember the names of these two accused, since they were both prominent persons, having been Secretary and President of the Local Khilafat Association. The witnesses deposed consistently, no successful attack being made on their evidence in cross-examination. The main objection to the prosecution case is based on the delay after which it was instituted: and there is also the allegation of the accused that they were living in their usual homes and that they surrendered at once, when a warrant for them was issued. That they were living in their usual homes is not, however, supported by any evidence on their side and no questions were put to the prosecution witnesses on the point. It is possible that more important occurrences, in which loss of life or direct responsibility for destruction of property, engaged the attention of the authorities in the first instance. In any case this delay is quite inconsistent with the suggestion, which has also been made that the accused have been prosecuted because of their prominence in the Khilafat movement. There is further alibi evidence; and we concur in the lower Court's estimate of it adding only that the evidence of the second defence witness, relating to the first accused is not; even if believed, necessarily conclusive.

Taking this view of the evidence we think that reasonable doubt as to the convictions is excluded. We, therefore, confirm them and also the sentence dismissing the appeal.

Appeal & Petition dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 76-B OF 1922.

EMPEROR—APPELLANT

NGA KALA—RESPONDENT.

Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act (II of 1912), ss. 6, 7, 10—Restricted offender—Surety bond, whether can be taken—Restriction of person to village other than his own—Double report, legality of.

A person restricted under the Burma Habitual Offenders Act, should not be made to report himself to the Police in addition to reporting himself to the village headman.

A person who is proceeded against under the Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act cannot be required to execute a surety bond.

In order to justify the restriction of a person to a village other than his own, there must be proof that he is able to support himself at that village.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Bassien, in Criminal Revision No. 18 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the following Referring Order:—

In his Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 131 of 1921, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Henzada has passed a restriction order under section 7 of the Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act against the respondent Nga Kala. In my opinion the order cannot stand. He speaks of the respondent entering into a bond. The word "bond" is not to be found anywhere in the Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, an order is passed against the respondent for disobedience of which he can be prosecuted under section 18 of the Act. There is no such thing as a bond. In the second place, the respondent has been made to move his residence to another village tract, apparently the special reason required by r. 3 of the Rules under the Act Police Department Notification No. 280, dated 17th November 1919) is that he has a well-to-do relative in the village tract who can support him. But there is nothing on the record to show that she is willing to support him, and section 10 of the Act certainly contemplates that he should earn his own livelihood. There is on the record no evidence to prove and no finding that the respondent can earn his livelihood within the area of restriction. Again, the respondent has been ordered to make a double report, once a day to the Village Headman and twice a week to the Officer in charge of the Neikban Police Station. Such a double report is clearly illegal, (vide r. 6 of the Rules under the Act). Moreover, r. 6 says that report of a Police Officer shall only be ordered in exceptional cases for reasons to be recorded in writing; there is nothing to show that the present case is an exceptional one, and no such reasons have been recorded. For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the order of restriction against the respondent, Nga Kala, must be set aside. Submitted to the Chief Court.

ORDER.—I have read the reference of the learned Sessions Judge of Bassien and also the proceedings of the Magistrate.

I will deal with the learned Sessions Judge's criticisms seriatim.

The Magistrate, in the circumstances stated, clearly had the option of proceeding against Nga Kala under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, or under the Burma Habitual Offenders Restrictions Act. In the former case a bond was necessary. In the latter it was not. The Magistrate, from what he endorsed on the Form Criminal 57, appears to me to have recognised this and to have made no error. Moreover, when he decided to take action under the Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, he never mentioned that any bond was required. He went astray in having a bond executed. As regards his restriction to another village tract than his own, the Magistrate was probably, in the circumstances stated by the learned Sessions Judge, in error. There is no enquiry whether and no proof that the respondent is able to support himself at that village.

As regards the double report, that to the Police was clearly not called for. The reasons stated by the learned Sessions Judge show this adequately. At the same time, after reading the evidence in the case and the reported case of Emperor v. Po Mya (1) these appear to me good grounds for a restriction order against Nga Kala.

The order will not, therefore, be set aside, but will be modified in respondent's favour as follows:—Nga Kala, son of Maung Shwe Ba, will restrict his movements within the village tract of Thayetoh during the day, will remain at his residence during the night and will report himself to his Headman at 8 P.M., every night for one year or till the 30th November 1922. If he has occasion to leave the village tract he shall obtain the necessary pass from the Headman. The bond which he executed, will be cancelled. This order must be explained to Nga Kala and the Headman concerned.

Order accordingly.

Penal Code (Act XL V of 1860), ss. 147, 426
—Damage to property of another—Mischief— Rioting.

In a Collectorate partition a certain building which was in the possession of the complainant fell to the share of one A. Subsequently, there was a compromise between A and the complainant whereby the former agreed to give up the building to the latter in exchange of a plot of land. This compromise was filed before the Collector who gave effect to it in the Collectorate partition. Complainant continued in possession of the building. Accused, a servant of A, along with others, demolished the building and ploughed up the site asserting that the building belonged to his master A and that the compromise was ineffective as no deed of exchange has been drawn up in accordance therewith:

Held, (1) that the compromise having been given effect to by the Collector in the partition the title in the building had passed to the complainant;

(2) that the accused was, therefore, guilty of mischief, and consequently of rioting.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Madhubani, upholding the conviction and sentence passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Madhubani.

TANAK CHAUDHRY v. EMPEROR.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and A. P. Upadhyaya, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madhubani for rioting under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The conviction and sentence has been upheld on appeal by the Sessions Judge.

The facts, shortly stated, are that in village Mukhiapati one Ramchunder Babu and Sunder Babu had each 8-annas share and each had a kutchery house situated therein, the kutchery of Ramchunder Babu being to the North of that of Sunder Babu. The two kutcheries were surveyed in plots Nos. 2432, 2433 and 2437 in the Cadastral Survey. The entire sixteen-annas of the village were sold to Babu Mahanti Lal and others in the following shares:—Babu Mahanti Lal and others 8-annas, Babu Anrudh Singh and others 4-annas, and Babu Paryag Singh and others 4-annas. There was a Collectorate partition of the village and in that partition all the three plots whereupon the two kutcheries were built fell to the share of Babu Anrudh Singh. An objection was filed by Babu Mahanti Lal who was in possession of one of the kutcheries, and subsequently there was a compromise between the parties whereby it was agreed that one of the kutcheries with the lands and trees standing thereon be allotted to Mahanti Lal and in exchange thereof, Mahanti Lal should make over certain Zirait land to Anrudh Babu. This compromise was filed before the Collector and on the 16th of July 1919 the Collector gave effect to this compromise and made the final order in the partition case. Delivery of possession was given on the 27th April 1921 and since then disputes have been going on between Mahanti Lal's party and Anrudh Singh's party as regards the possession of the kutchery. In 1921 there was a case under section 447-147, Indian Penal Code, about dismantling the cook-shed attached to the kutchery. In 1922 there was a proceeding under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, relating to the kutchery. The occurrence giving rise to the present case took place on the 19th June 1922. On that date at 9 A. M. the complainant, who is a servant of Babu Mahanti Lal, lodged a Sanha before the Police to the effect that on the morning of that date while he was alone in the kutchery Anrudh Babu's men came and threatened him and that there was a likelihood of the breach of the peace. The Sub-Inspector deputed a Constable to see that no breach of the peace occurred and the complainant with the Constable returned to the village at about 2 P. M. when he found that the kutchery was no longer existing and the land had been ploughed up. The Sub-Inspector arrived in the village at about 5 P. M. and then the complainant lodged his First Information in which the present petitioner was named for the first time. The information was to the effect that in the absence of the complainant the petitioner came there with a mob, dismantled the kutchery and ploughed up the land. An investigation was made by the Sub-Inspector with the result that the petitioner and others were placed on their trial and convicted as stated above.

The defence story was that the exchange was never given effect to and that the delivery of possession on the 27th April 1920 was in accordance with the original allotment whereby the three plots of land upon which the two kutcheries stood were allotted to the petitioner's master and that the petitioner's master continued in possession throughout.

It has been found by both the Courts below that the petitioner's master was not in possession of the kutchery which was given to Babu Mahanti Lal under the compromise. That the compromise was given effect to by the Collector and although in the petition of compromise it was stated that a regular deed of exchange would be executed between the parties, yet title passed to Mahanti Lal under the Collectorate partition which gave effect to the compromise.

Having regard to the finding of both the Courts below that Mahanti Lal never parted with the possession of the kutchery and, that Anrudh was not given actual possession of that kutchery house, the argument of the learned Vakil for the petitioner that in dismantling the kutchery house, the petitioner was not guilty of any criminal offence inasmuch as the kutchery house belonged to his master cannot be accepted. The learned Vakīl relies on the case of Ram Krishna Singh v. Emperor (1) and argues that the petitioner by destroying the property belonging to his master did not cause any mischief, and, therefore, he could not be convicted of any offence of rioting the common object of which is stated to be "to commit mischief to Mahanti Lal and his co-sharers by dismantling their kutchery house and by means of criminal force or show of criminal force to obtain possession of its site and thus to enforce any right or supposed right of Anrudh Singh." The facts of that case are quite distinguishable from those of the present case. In that case there was a delivery of possession under O. XXI, r. 95 of the Civil Procedure Code and the complainant who was the judgment-debtor still asserted his possession after delivery of possession by the Civil Court. It was held that the delivery of possession by the Civil Court had the effect of making the possession of the judgment-debtor that of a trespasser and the accused in that case was justified in taking possession of the property by ousting the judgment-debtor, and the property being his own it could not be held that he committed mischief by causing damage to that property. In the present case the findings of both the Courts below are clear that the kutchery house in question was the property of Mahanti Lal and he was in possession and, therefore, there was no justification for the petitioner to dismantle the house which amounted to a mischief under section 425 of the Indian Penal Code.

The second point taken by the learned Vakīl for the petitioner is, that there is no finding as regards the common object stated in the charge. His argument is that the Court cannot infer the common object but it must find it upon the evidence adduced in the case. He says that it must be found that the mob was actuated by the common object alleged in the charge, and reliance is placed on the case of Jadubar Singh v. Emperor (2). On reading the two judgments of the Courts below it is quite clear that the finding as regards the common object stated in the charge is based upon the evidence on the record and is not a mere surmise. There is no substance in this contention also.

The third point taken is that the accused bona fide believed the kutchery to be the property of his master and, therefore, he committed no offence. Having regard to the circumstances proved by the evidence there can be no reasonable ground for the petitioner to entertain a bona fide belief that the property belonged to his master. There had been previous cases in which the possession of Mahanti Lal was declared. This contention almost must, therefore, be disallowed.

As regards the sentence it is said that no bodily injury was caused to any person, there was no assault or beating, and all that the accused did was to dismantle the kutchery house and to plough up the land and the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment is unduly severe. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, I am of opinion that three months' rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice. The conviction is accordingly upheld but the sentence is reduced to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

BANSIDHAR MARWARI v. INDAR NARAIN SINGH.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 144 OF 1923.

April 6, 1923.

Present:—Justice Sir John Bucknill, KT.
BANSIDHAR MARWARI—PETITIONER
versus

INDAR NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS—
OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145—Proceedings under s. 107—District Magistrate, power of, to interfere—Direction to Subordinate Magistrate, to initiate proceedings under s. 145—District Magistrate, jurisdiction of.

A District Magistrate has no power to set aside an order made under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code by a Magistrate subordinate to him. If he finds that an improper order has been made, all he can do is to submit the case to the High Court for the exercise of its revisional powers. [p. 162, col. 2.]

A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to direct a Magistrate subordinate to him to take proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 162, col. 2.]

Revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Bhagalpore, dated the 23rd February 1923.

Messrs. G. C. Pal and S. C. Majumdar, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in criminal revisional jurisdiction. The matter is a very simple one. The Sub-Divisional Officer of Bhagalpore, on the 25th January 1923, as a result of the perusal of a Police report and under the belief that there was an imminent danger of a breach of the peace, made an order restraining both parties from going upon certain lands about which there was a dispute between them; this he did under the provisions of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He ordered that notices should be issued on the parties accordingly and that they should show cause before him on the 7th February last. On the 7th February the matter came before him. His order-sheet reads: "Cause shown by both parties. Draw proceedings under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against second party. Fix 26th February 1923 for showing cause by the second party why they should not be ordered to execute a bond of Rs. 200 each to keep the peace for the period of one year with a surety of like amount." Now, I think that it is common ground here that the Sub-Divisional Officer seems to have made a mistake. He does not clearly round off or finish the proceedings under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code which were actually before him. Presumably, he intended to conclude the proceedings under section 144, and after having closed them down, to initiate proceedings under section 107, but at any rate he passed no order under the provisions of section 144. I think that I should mention that, in coming to the conclusion to which he did, the Sub-Divisional Officer had the advantage of seeing the written statements which had been filed in response to his notice of the 25th January by both parties. Now, on the 23rd February, it would appear that the second party, (that is the respondent here) applied, it is said, ex parte, to the District Magistrate of Bhagalpore to set aside the Sub-Divisional Officer's order. The District Magistrate on that date and, it is alleged, without any notice having been given to the first party, made an order which is the principal subject-matter of the application now before this Court. In this order, after reciting that he had read the records and the Police report and after commenting upon the fact that the Sub-Divisional Officer did not appear to have made any order absolute under the provisions of section 144 and assuming that it had been intended that those proceedings under section 144 had been in some fashion or other dropped, the District Magistrate writes: "The petitioner has questioned the propriety of a proceeding under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. The dispute, he says, is a dispute concerning land and this is admitted by the Police report on which the Magistrate relies." He then expresses the view that, on the materials which were available before him, it could hardly be said that the claim which was put forward by the second party could be regarded off hand as not bona fide, and, then, makes the following order: "This is, therefore, a case in which section 145 should be applied. Therefore, under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code I set aside the preliminary order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, and direct that proceedings be taken up under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code." Now it is admitted here that each part of this order is bad. In the first place, had the District Magistrate desired to deal in any way with the order which had been made by the Sub-Divisional Officer under the provisions of section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he might possibly have referred the matter to this Court; but he certainly had no power to set aside the order which had been made by the Sub-Divisional Officer. In the second place, it is also similarly admitted that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct the Sub-Divisional Officer to take proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Now, when the District Magistrate's order was sent down to the Sub-Divisional Officer, he, obeying the directions which had been given to him by the District Magistrate, made the following order on the 16th February: "Perused District Magistrate's order. Draw proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and fix the 16th March 1923. In the meantime the land is attached under section 145, clause (4), Criminal Procedure Code. Send copy of this order to Police for attachment." This series of errors was brought to the attention of this Court on the 5th March and a Rule was obtained from Mullick and Adami, JJ., all further proceedings being stayed pending the hearing of the application. The matter has now come before me.

What has actually taken place is not defended or excused by the learned Assistant Government Advocate who appears for the opposite party. Indeed, the District Magistrate himself in his reply to the communication from this Court asking him whether he had any cause to show why his order should not be set aside, does not, so far as I understand in his explanation, seem now to contemplate that he can justify his having made an order of this character. What, however, is urged, very sensibly, by the learned Assistant Government Advocate is that in many cases where in orders there has been irregularity of form but where it would seem, on such investigation as is possible in this Court, that no harm would be done to the parties and that although by a wrong method a right result may perhaps have been reached, it is undesirable that this Court should exercise its discretionary jurisdiction in revision. Whilst I am in full accord with that proposition I must say that in this case I think it can hardly be said that it is one in which it is not more important to draw attention to the series of errors which has taken place than to take up the attitude that formalities have not been observed which should be condoned. It was, I think, quite obvious that the Sub-Divisional Officer ought to have concluded his investigation under the provisions of section 144 and, at any rate, to have made some order which would indicate what had happened to those proceedings which seem to have been left by him in the air. It is also equally clear that the District Magistrate had neither power to quash the proceedings which had been initiated by the Sub-Divisional Officer under the provisions of section 107, nor to order the Sub-Divisional Officer to initiate proceedings under section 145. Lastly, as a corollary it was doubtless irregular for the Sub-Divisional Officer to have drawn up proceedings under the provisions of section 145 simply on the ground that he was told so to do by the District Magistrate. I fear that, if such a series of errors were passed over without comment and the orders which have been wrongly made were allowed to stand, simply because it may possibly be that no harm will eventuate to either of the parties as a result of such orders, those who have to administer the Criminal Law in subordinate capacities might perhaps feel that any close adherence to the formalities prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code is unnecessary. In this case, therefore, I feel that a sense of the irregularity of what has taken place would be marked by setting aside these orders. I direct, therefore, that the order of the District Magistrate of the 23rd February last and the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of the 26th January last be set aside. The result will be that the Sub-Divisional Officer will be left with the proceedings which were commenced by him on the 7th February under the provisions of section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In order to place his order-sheet upon a proper footing, he ought, strictly speaking, to pass some order indicating what has happened to the proceedings under section 144 which he initiated so long ago as the 25th January. I wish, however, specifically to mention that it does not necessarily follow that other proceedings in addition to or in lieu of those taking place under section 107 may not also be desirable or even necessary. With that, however, I have here nothing whatever to do. Whether such steps are desirable or necessary must depend upon circumstances as they arise:

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 384 OF 1922
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION NO. 333 OF 1922.

December 22, 1922.

Present:—Sir Walter Schwabe, Kt.,
Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Phillips, Mr.
Justice Devadoss, Mr. Justice Venkata-

—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 254, 256, 342, 537—Examination of accused—Cross-examination of prosecution witnesses under s. 256—Fresh examination of accused, whether obligatory.

Section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code which requires that the accused shall be examined generally in the case after the examination of the prosecution witnesses and before the accused is called on for his defence, is mandatory and not discretionary and failure to comply with the terms of the section is an illegality vitiating the trial and not a mere irregularity which can be cured under section 537 of the Code. [p. 164, col. 2.]

Per Curiam (Venkatasubba Rao, J. dissenting):—The mere fact that in a warrant-case after the framing of a charge under section 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution witnesses are recalled and cross-examined under section 256 of the Code, does not render a fresh examination of the accused obligatory and the omission to question the accused again at this stage does not amount to a non-compliance with the provisions of section 342 of the Code and does not vitiate the trial.

In re, Marudath Mathu Vannian, 71 Ind. Cas. 252; 43 M. L. J. 402; 16 L. W. 420, (1922) M. W. N. 601; 44 M. 820; (1922) A. J. R. (M) 512; 24 Cr. L. J. 124, overruled.

The expression "after the prosecution witnesses has been examined" in section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, means when the prosecution has finished calling evidence. Cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under section 256 is not part of the examination of the prosecution witnesses within the meaning of section 342, nor does such re-examination generally amount to giving fresh evidence for the prosecution, but is merely explanatory of the cross-examination. If new and material matter in support of the prosecution is elicited in cross-examination or re-examination, it is desirable that the accused should again be questioned on the case and asked generally to explain the circumstances, and if fresh evidence on material matters in support of the prosecution case is elicited in re-examination it would be obligatory on the Court to question the accused on that. [p. 164, col. 2.; p. 165, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ramnad, in Criminal Appeals Nos. 10 and 15 of 1922, confirming the conviction and sentence of the Court of the Second Class Magistrate, Paramakudi, in C. C. No. 163 of 1921.

This case coming on for hearing on 17th November 1922, upon pursuing the petition and the orders of the lower Courts and the records in the case, and upon hearing the arguments of Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioners, and of the Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown, the Court (Krishnan, J.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The point taken here is based on In re Marudath Mathu Vannian (1). This point is being taken in a good many cases and it is argued that the trial in the lower Courts is vitiated entirely by the omission to question the accused after the taking of the prosecution evidence is completed. I am inclined to think this requires further consideration. The case is referred to a Bench.

This case coming on for hearing on the 27th and 28th November 1922, in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench, dated the 17th November 1922, upon perusing the petition and the records in the case and the said Order of Reference to a Full Bench, and upon hearing the arguments of Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioners, and of the Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown the Court made the following:

VARISAI ROWIHER, In re.

ORDER.—This petition will be dismissed. We propose now only to say that the Court are of opinion that the recent decision of Oldfield and Ramesam, JJ. in In re Maruda Muthu Vannian (I) is wrongly decided and cannot be relied on on a future occasion. What our reasons are for that judgment will be stated later on. In re Maruda Muthu Vannian (I) is wrong and as there are many cases pending it is right that the view of the Court should be stated as soon as possible though there must be some slight delay in formulating our reasons.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Accused.
The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

This case having been posted this day for formulating the reasons the Court made the following ORDER.

Schwabe, C. J.—This criminal revision petition has been ordered to be referred to a Full Bench by reason of a large number of similar cases pending in which decisions of Magistrates throughout the Presidency would be vitiated if the recent decision of this Court in In re Maruda Muthu Vannian (I) was correctly decided.

The facts are that the accused were charged by the Police in a warrant-case for receiving stolen property before the Second Class Magistrate of Paramakudi. The procedure adopted by him was the following. Witnesses for the prosecution were examined. The accused being given the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses when their examination was completed did not avail themselves of that opportunity. The accused were then questioned generally on the case for the purpose of enabling them to explain the circumstances appearing from the evidence against them, and they stated that they would put in a written statement. The Magistrate then, under section 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code, being of opinion that there was ground for presuming that the accused had committed an offence which was triable as a warrant-case and which he was competent to try, framed in writing a charge against the accused under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused pleaded not guilty and the case was adjourned. At a later date, at their request, and in exercise of their rights under section 256, Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution witnesses were re-called for cross-examination by the accused, and, where necessary, were re-examined. Evidence was then called for the defence and, the accused through their Counsel addressed the Court. The accused were not further questioned generally on the case after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses. It is contended that the omission to question the accused again at this stage was an illegality, being a failure to comply with section 342 and vitiated the whole trial. The point was not taken before the Magistrate who heard the case or an appeal before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Ramnad who affirmed the conviction, but comes before us in revision.

Section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, requires in all cases that the accused shall be questioned generally on the case in order to enable him to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him, and this has to be done, in the words of the section, "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he (the accused) is called on for his defence." That this is mandatory and not discretionary has been held in many cases and I think by all the High Courts in India, and this must be taken as established. That failure to comply with the terms of the section is an illegality vitiating the trial and not a mere irregularity which can in a proper case be excused under section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code has also been held in many cases, though that has not been with such unanimity. In my judgment, failure to comply with the provisions of section 342 is an illegality and that must be considered as established in this Presidency.

The question remains as to the point of time at the trial when this questioning of the accused has to take place. Under the section it must be after the prosecution witnesses have been examined and before the accused is called on for his defence. In my judgment, "after the prosecution witnesses have been examined" means

when the prosecution has finished calling evidence. Generally speaking, in most cases, the examination will include the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses, if there is any. In Sessions cases this will always be the case as the witness remains in the witness-box until the re-examination is complete. But the position is different in proceedings before Magistrates. In a warrant-case, which is all we are concerned with here, the procedure authorized by the Code is that the prosecution witnesses are called and can then be cross-examined on behalf of the accused and, if necessary, re-examined. The prosecution witnesses called at this stage are generally the whole prosecution evidence and the prosecution is closed. The Magistrate then, either dismisses the case on the ground that no case is made out, or, after questioning the accused generally to enable him to explain any circumstance appearing against him from the evidence, formulates a charge under section 254, Criminal Procedure Code. The charge is then read over and explained to the accused under section 255 and he is asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make. This procedure is directly in accordance with the Code, and it is difficult to see how any other is possible. It may be that the accused is not going to ask that the witnesses for the prosecution be re-called for cross-examination under section 256, but proposes at once to call his evidence; or it may be that he is not going to call any evidence, but to rely only on his address to the Court. In either event he will have been called on for his defence and by the words of the Statute, the questioning has to be after the termination of the prosecution evidence and before he is called on for his defence. It is true that, under section 256, although he has not availed himself of the first opportunity of cross-examining prosecution witnesses, he can ask for them to be re-called for that purpose. That does not, in my judgment, make that cross-examination part of the examination of the prosecution witnesses within the meaning of section 342. Nor does re-examination generally amount to giving fresh evidence for the prosecution, but is merely explanatory of the cross-examination. If new and material matter in support of the prosecution case is elicited in cross-examination or in the re-examination, it is desirable that the accused should again be questioned on the case and asked generally to explain the circumstances, and, indeed, if fresh evidence on material matters in support of the prosecution case were elicited in re-examination, it would probably be obligatory on the Court to question the accused on that. It is open to the prosecution to call fresh evidence after the formulation of the charge, and if this is done, on the termination of that evidence, the accused must be questioned generally under section 342 after this further examination of the prosecution witnesses. This procedure provides a reasonable method of carrying out the obligation of the Statute in the interest of the accused, the object being that he should have an opportunity of explaining the prosecution evidence after it is completed. That this is the proper interpretation and, in fact, the only workable one seems clear from an examination of section 257, because that section provides that, after the accused has entered upon his defence, the Magistrate may on the application of the accused have the prosecution witnesses re-called for examination. The questioning of the accused under section 342 has to take place before the accused is called on for his defence, and it follows that if this cross-examination of re-called prosecution witnesses is examination of prosecution witnesses within the meaning of section 342, it would be impossible to comply with the Statute, because the questioning would then be taking place after the accused had been called on for his defence and not before as the section requires. It was probably for this reason that the word "examination" is used in section 342, so that in warrant-cases, in which under the earlier section the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses might take place after the accused had been called on for his defence, the time occupied in this cross-examination should not be included in the time before which questioning was to take place. Nor is there anything unreasonable in this, because the accused has already had an opportunity of cross-examining and knows the whole force of the prosecution case, and if he chooses to exercise his right of cross-examination at a later stage, this cross-examination can be fairly treated for the purpose of this section as being rather evidence for the defence than evidence for the prosecution.

Direct authorities against this view are Mitarjit Singh v. Emperor (2), in which it was held that examination under section 342 means examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination, and In re Maruda Mathu Vannian (1) to the same effect but with neither of these, for the reasons given above, do I agree.

In the result, this petition will be dismissed.

Phillips, J.—I agree.

Wallace, J.—I agree.

Devadoss, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is whether a trial is "vitiating entirely by the omission to question the accused after the taking of the prosecution evidence is completed." The objection that the trial is vitiated by such an omission is based upon a recent decision of a Bench of the High Court reported as In re Maruda Mathu Vannian (1), which, in the opinion of Krishnan, J., required further consideration.

The facts necessary to appreciate the objection are: the accused were charged by the Police with an offence under section 411, Indian Penal Code. After the prosecutor examined his witnesses, the accused were questioned evidently under section 253, Criminal Procedure Code. The accused said that they would put in a written statement but did not file any; and a charge was framed against the accused under section 411, Indian Penal Code, on 3rd September 1921. The accused pleaded "not guilty", and their plea was recorded on the same day. They cross-examined the prosecution witnesses on 3rd October 1921 and on 21st October 1921. On 21st October 1921 they entered upon their defence and adduced their evidence. The accused were not questioned generally on the case to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against them after the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was over and before they entered upon their defence. The contention is that the accused should have been questioned generally on the case as required by the latter part of section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, and the omission to do so vitiated the whole trial. In In re Maruda Mathu Vannian (1) it was held that the omission by the Magistrate to examine the accused generally on the case after the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was over vitiated the trial, and the conviction was on that ground illegal.

It may be taken as settled law that the omission to examine the accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, generally on the case after the prosecution witnesses have been examined is an illegality and not an irregularity, which vitiates the whole trial. Two questions have to be settled in this case. The first is, when should the examination of the accused take place in order to comply with the mandatory provisions of section 342, and the second, whether the examination prior to the close of prosecution case will fulfil the requirements of section 342. The first clause of section 342 consists of two portions. The first is optional with the Court and the second is obligatory on the Court. The first portion runs as follows:—"For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial, without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary," and the second, "(The Court) shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." The non-compliance with the first portion does not render a trial illegal or the proceedings irregular; and under the second portion it is the duty of the Court to question the accused, and that after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. Chapter XX of the Criminal Procedure Code relates to the trial of summons-cases by Magistrates, Chapter XXI relates to the trial of warrant-cases by Magistrates, Chapter XXII relates to summary trials, and Chapter XXIII relates to trials by High Courts and Courts of Session. section 245, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, examine the accused, but he is not bound to do so. Under section 253, the Magistrate may examine the accused if he thinks necessary. Section 342 is in chapter containing general provisions as to inquiries and trials. Under section 209, which is in the chapter relating to inquiry preliminary to commitment, the Magistrate may, if he thinks necessary, "examine the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him." Section 342 makes the examination of the accused obligatory only in cases where the accused is called on for his defence. A Magistrate may discharge an accused without framing a charge, in which case his non-examination would not vitiate the proceedings. But where a Magistrate, or Judge in a Sessions trial, finds that the prosecution has made out a case which the accused has to meet then it is incumbent upon the Magistrate or Judge to question the accused generally on the case for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. It may be taken that the stage at which the examination is to be held is before the accused is called on for his defence. In the chapter relating to the trial of warrant-cases, provision is made in section 254 for the framing of a charge against the accused before the whole of the prosecution evidence is completed, if there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under the chapter. The difficulty in interpreting section 342 is caused by the amendment to sections 254 and 256, which were made in the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898. Under the Code of 1882, under section 252 the Magistrate was required to "take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution," and under section 254, "If, when this evidence and examination have been taken and made, the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under this chapter, he should frame a charge in writing against the accused." Under the Code of 1882, therefore, the Magistrate could not frame a charge against the accused till the evidence for the prosecution was completed. Under the Code of 1898 the Magistrate could frame a charge before the prosecution evidence is completed, if he thinks there is ground for presuming the accused has committed an offence. Under section 256 of the old Code after the charge was framed the accused had the right to cross-examine any of the witnesses for the prosecution present in Court or its precincts. But under section 256 of the Code of 1898 the duty was cast upon the Court to ask the accused whether any of the prosecution witnesses should be re-called for cross-examination. He has, therefore, an undoubted right to have all or any of the prosecution witnesses re-called for cross-examination after the charge is framed and after he exercises such right the evidence of any of the remaining witnesses for prosecution should be taken and after cross-examination and re-examination they should be discharged. So then, if a Magistrate frames a charge against the accused before the examination of all the prosecution witnesses is over, he shall ask the accused whether he wishes to re-call any or all the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, and after such cross-examination he shall take the evidence of the remaining prosecution witnesses. It is only after that, that the accused shall be called upon to enter upon adduced evidence and he can be said to enter upon his defence only when he begins to adduce evidence on his behalf. The contention that, if an accused person cross-examines any of the prosecution witnesses under section 256; the Magistrate is bound once more to examine the accused generally on the case seems untenable. Section 342 says: "The Court shall question the accused after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." That can only mean that the examination of the accused should take place after the prosecution has placed its whole case before the Court. If the accused chooses not to cross-examine or reserves his rights to cross-examine the prosecution witness after a charge is framed, I do not think the Magistrate is bound to question him after cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is over, provided he questions him after the prosecution has placed its whole case before him. If the Magistrate frames a charge before the whole of the prosecution evidence is placed before him, he should examine the accused under section 342 after the remaining witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and cross-examined. The accused in a warrant-case has three opportunities of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses; once, before the charge is framed, secondly, under section 256, and, thirdly, after he has entered on his defence. He can apply to the Magistrate under section 257 to issue process for compelling the attendance of one or more prosecution witnesses for cross-examination. It cannot be the intention of the Legislature to make it obligatory on the Magistrate to question the accused if he chooses to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses after all the defence evidence has been taken. Such cross-examination could only be to help him in his defence, and, therefore, it must be taken that such cross-examination is part of his defence. The words in section 342 are, "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined," and the expression cannot reasonably be interpreted to mean "after the accused has chosen to exercise his right of cross-examination at the very end of his defence." If the prosecution applies to the Court to allow it to adduce fresh evidence after the charge is framed and if such evidence is adduced, then it is the duty of the Court, under section 342, to question the accused generally, for, it cannot be said that the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined till the whole of the prosecution case is before it. But where the prosecution has let in all the evidence it wishes to rely on, and if the Magistrate questions the accused after taking all such evidence before framing a charge, whether the accused has cross-examined the witnesses or not, I think the mandatory provisions of section 342 must be held to be substantially complied with. It, therefore, follows that any examination of the accused which is made before all the evidence for the prosecution has been let in cannot satisfy the mandatory provisions of section 342.

I shall briefly deal with the cases quoted in argument before us. The cases quoted fall under three heads:

I. Cases in which the Sessions Judge did not question the accused generally on the case after the close of the prosecution. In those cases the High Court held that the whole trial was vitiated by the failure to question the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him even though his statement before the Magistrate was read as part of the prosecution evidence. They are reported as Fatu Santal v. Emperor (3), Raghu Bhumij v. Emperor (4), Emperor v. Savalya (5), In re Nainamalai Konan (6), and In re Raja Padaiyachi (7).

2. The following are the cases in which a Magistrate did not question the accused generally, and the High Court held that the trial was vitiated by the omission to comply with the mandatory provisions of section 342. Suraj Pandey v. Emperor (8), Gulam Rasul v. Emperor (9), Emperor v. Harishchandra (10), Gulabjap v. Emperor (11), Basapaningapa v. Emperor (12) and Mahomed Hossein v. Emperor (13).

3. In the following cases the Magistrate examined the accused before framing the charge, but did not question the accused generally on the case under section 342 after cross-examination under section 256 was over, and the High Court held that the trial was vitiated by the omission to comply with the mandatory provisions of section 342: *Mitarjit Singh v. Rai v. Emperor (15), Emperor v. Nga Po Mya (16), Abbas Ali v. Emperor (17) and Fernandez v. Emperor (18).

In Raghu Bhumi v. Emperor (4) Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad of the Patna High Court observed: "The accused adhered to the retraction of their confessions. They were not examined as to the circumstances disclosed in the prosecution evidence which the learned Sessions Judge has used against the accused and this, to my mind, amounts to an omission to examine the accused under section 342, and to prepare a proper record thereof under section 364. So much is essential in a Sessions trial where an accused is entitled to have his statement considered by assessors and the Appellate Court." This omission was held by the learned Judge to vitiate the whole trial. In Tilak Gope v. Bhaya Ram (14) Mr. Justice Bucknill held that "this omission to examine the accused after the case for the prosecution has been closed, or, rather after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, is a vital defect and cannot be cured by trying to bring into operation the provisions of section 537, Criminal Procedure Code." In that case, after the accused had been examined by the Magistrate, one witness at any rate for the prosecution was subsequently examined. The learned Judge qualified his first statement, "after the case for the prosecution has been closed" by adding the words, "or, rather, after all the prosecution witnesses have been examined." Section 342 makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to examine the accused after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, and does not require the Magistrate to wait till the accused has exercised his right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed. As I said above, the amendments to sections 254 and 256 were made in 1898 without in any way altering the wording of section 342, and a reasonable construction must be put upon the words without attributing to the Legislature the fault of enacting inconsistent provisions. It is a well-known canon of construction that where a reasonable construction would reconcile the provisions of an enactment, that construction ought to be adopted.

In Mitarjit Singh v. Emperor (2) a Bench of the Patna High Court held that, "until the witnesses have been cross-examined and re-examined it cannot be said what the exact case that the accused will have to meet is, and, if he is forced to disclose his defence before cross-examination, it might very well be that the prosecution witnesses would be on their guard and the value of the cross-examination to a great extent destroyed. Considering... both the wording of the section and its intention it appears to me clear that the Court must question the accused generally on the case after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses." No doubt, this is a direct authority for the contention of the petitioner, but, with great respect to the learned Judges, it is not easy to conceive how an accused person would be prejudiced by disclosing his defence after the whole of the prosecution evidence has been taken and before he exercises the right to re-cross-examine them. No doubt if, before the whole of the prosecution evidence is taken, he is asked to disclose his defence the prosecution witnesses who remain to be examined may change their version in order to meet the defence of the accused. But where the prosecution has definitely put forward the whole of its case the mere fact that the prosecution witnesses are not subjected to a second cross-examination would not in any way prejudice the accused, if he discloses his defence before such cross-examination. It is open to the accused not to make any statement. The law does not cast upon him the duty of making a statement. If he feels that by disclosing his defence before the whole of the cross-examination is over his case will not suffer, he need not answer the Court questions. We are only concerned with the duty of the Court under section 342, and not with the option of the accused. It may be said that his answers to the questions put to him by the Court, even after the whole of the cross-examination is over, might prejudice him. But that is left to the discretion of the accused and his legal advisers. The Court is not asked to cross-examine the accused but its duty is only to ask the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him. I, therefore, consider, with all respect, that the reasoning of the learned Judges does not militate against the view that I take that the duty of the Magistrate under section 342 is discharged if he questions the accused generally after the prosecution has placed its whole case before the Court.

In Shamlal Kalwar v. Emperor (19), after the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses a charge was framed against the accused. The accused were asked if they would cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses, but they declined and then they were called on to enter upon their defence. On a subsequent date, at the instance of the Public Prosecutor, a charge under section 325, Indian Penal Code, was added to one of the accused and the charge under section 147, Indian Penal Code, was verbally altered. The prosecution witnesses were then re-called and cross-examined. It was not disputed that the prosecution evidence was closed when the accused were called on to enter upon their defence. It was contended that after the alteration of the charge under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and the addition of a charge under section 325, Indian Penal Code the accused should have been examined and the omission to do so contravened the mandatory provisions of section 342. Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and Mr. Justice Adami held: "The trial does not commence de novo so that if the accused had already been called on to enter upon his defence there is no further obligation upon the Magistrate to examine the accused under section 342 of the Code." They also observe: "The authorities of which we are so well cognisant do not all apply to the present case."

In In re Maruda Mathu Vannian (1) the Magistrate in trying a warrant-case examined the accused before framing the charge, but did not examine the accused generally on the case after cross-examination.

The learned Judges held that the omission of the Magistrate vitiated the whole trial. If the whole of the prosecution case had been before the Magistrate before he framed the charge and if he questioned the accused generally on the case before framing the charge, I think he satisfies the mandatory provisions of section 342. It is not necessary that the accused should make a statement by word of mouth. No doubt, section 364 requires the Magistrate and a Court other than the High Court to record the whole of the examination "including every question put to him (accused) and every answer given by him in the language in which he is examined, or, if that is not practicable in the language of the Court or in English; and such record shall be shown or read to him, or, if he does not understand the language in which it is written, shall be interpreted to him in a language which he understands, and he shall be at liberty to explain or to add to his answers." Section 256, clause (2), makes provision for the accused putting in a written statement and the Magistrate filing it with the record. When the Magistrate questions the accused if he says, "I will put in a written statement," I think it is the duty of the Magistrate to take the written statement as an answer to his questions. In other words, in such a case the accused does not wish to answer by word of mouth questions put to him, but prefers to put in a written answer.

In the present case, after the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, a charge was framed against the accused on 3rd September 1921. The accused were examined by the Magistrate on the same date. They cross-examined the prosecution witnesses on 3rd October 1921 and 21st October 1921. The examination of the accused by the Magistrate, after the prosecution had let in all their evidence, satisfied the provisions of section 342, and, therefore, the trial is not vitiated by any omission to examine the accused after the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was over. The accused did not answer the questions put by the Magistrate Court but said they would put in a written statement, and the default, if any, is on their part. The Magistrate did what was required of him under section 342, and if the accused did not choose to put in any written statement, they could not contend that the proceedings before the Magistrate were vitiated by an illegal omission.

The petition, therefore, ought to be dismissed.

My answer to the question referred to the Full Bench is, that a trial is not vitiated by the omission to question the accused generally on the case after re-cross-examination of all the prosecution witnesses is completed, provided the Magistrate examines the accused after the whole of the prosecution case has been placed before him.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I regret I am not of the same opinion, and as I venture to take a different view I shall very briefly state my grounds.

The Magistrate says in his judgment:—"Accused Nos. 1 and 2 who were questioned after the prosecution evidence was heard, preferred to put in a written statement, but no such statement was filed. * * * There were grounds for presuming that accused had committed an offence under section 411, Indian Penal Code; a charge was accordingly framed. * * * This happened on 3rd September 1921. There was further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses on 3rd October 1921 and 21st October 1921. The accused was not further examined and he commenced to produce evidence in his defence on the latter date.

Section 342 consists of two parts. The first part leaves it to the option of the Magistrate to put such questions to the accused as he considers necessary. The accused may be similarly examined under sections 209, 210, 245, 253 and 254. Whereas the latter sections indicate the stage when the examination may at the discretion of the Magistrate be made, the first part of section 342 gives the Magistrate a wider discretion, as it permits him to put questions to the accused at any stage of the enquiry or trial.

Then, we come to the second part of section 342. The provision here is mandatory. It is agreed on all hands that it is the duty of the Court to make the examination of the accused at some stage of the case. The more difficult question remains:—At what stage is this examination to be made? The point of time is indicated by the words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he (the accused) is called on for his defence."

Comparing these words with the words used in the last portion of section 256 which runs thus:—"The evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken and, after cross-examination and re-examination (if any), they also shall be discharged. The accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence," the conclusion seems irresistible that the point of time indicated is between the close of the prosecution case and the entering by the accused upon his evidence.

It is said that an examination of the accused immediately upon the taking under section 252 of the evidence in support of the prosecution, complies with the mandatory provision contained in section 342. I am unable to accept this view. In the first place, at that stage, it cannot be said that all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, because section 256 contemplates further evidence likely to be forthcoming on behalf of the prosecution. In the second place, the accused is not called upon to enter upon his defence upon the taking of the evidence referred to in section 252. Far from the accused entering on his defence at that stage, if the Magistrate is of the opinion, that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, the Magistrate is required to frame a charge against the accused. It cannot be said that the stage preceding the framing of the charge is the point of time conveyed by the words "before the accused is called on for his defence."

The words used in section 342 are "called on for his defence." I may notice in this connection two other sets of words. Section 255 (1) runs thus:—The charge shall then be read and explained to the accused and asked whether he has "any defence to make." Section 256 contains the following sentence:—"Accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce evidence." In my opinion, the words in section 342 "called on for his defence" are used in the same sense as the words "to enter upon his defence" in section 256. I must point out that neither side has attempted to argue that the stage when the accused should be examined under section 342, is after the charge has been framed, read and explained and before the accused is asked under section 255 whether he has "any defence to make." The rival contentions before us were (1) on behalf of the Crown—the examination indicated in section 342 should be made after the taking of the evidence in support of the prosecution mentioned in section 252 and before the framing of the charge under section 254; (2) on behalf of the accused—the said examination should be made after the entire evidence for the prosecution mentioned in section 256 is given and before the accused is called upon to enter upon his defence. I am clearly of the opinion that the right construction is that contended for on behalf of the accused. If the other construction were right, it would follow that the accused would be "called on for his defence" before a charge against him is framed, that is, at a point of time which is anterior to his being asked whether he "has any defence to make." I see no warrant for this position in the sections to which I have referred.

I have so far given my reasons for construing the section in the manner I have done. The learned Public Prosecutor has argued that this interpretation should be avoided, as it would lead to consequences inconvenient and unjust. I think, on the contrary, this construction alone carries out the object underlying the enactment of section 342.

Under section 342 it is only one examination that is made imperative. The other view will lead in certain events to the result that the Court will be bound to have a double examination of the accused; once when the evidence referred to in section 252 has been taken and again when further witnesses for the Crown, if any, have been examined under section 256. Moreover, the object of section 342 can be most effectually carried out only if the accused is examined at the very close of the case for the Crown and previous to his entering upon his defence. Not only may very material evidence be given in examination-in-chief of any further witnesses examined under section 256 but matters unfavourable to the accused may be elicited in the cross-examination and re-examination of the witnesses already examined under section 252.

It is intended that the accused should have an opportunity, in answer to a general question "What have you to say" to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him.

This seems to me a very useful provision.

It must also be noted that the accused cannot give evidence on oath. Whether this is a privilege which he enjoys or a disability under which he labours, the statement, if any, that the accused makes under this section corresponds, as nearly as possible, to his evidence or oath and it is distinctly provided by clause 3 of section 342 that the answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration by the Court. A mere statement of the accused at this stage may conceivably lead to his acquittal without any production of evidence on his behalf.

It seems to me that this view alone makes section 342 consistent with section 253. Otherwise, the words in the latter section vesting a discretion in the Magistrate,—"Of making such examination (if any) of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary" will be not only redundant but positively misleading because, at that point, the Magistrate, according to the other view, is under an obligation to examine the accused.

It has been said on behalf of the Crown that section 257 lends some support to the view contrary to what I have taken. I am unable to agree. It is, no doubt, true that section 257 gives a further opportunity to the accused to cross-examine any prosecution witnesses even after he has entered upon his defence. But this circumstance can have no bearing upon the right interpretation of the terms of section 342. The latter section fixes a point of time not only with reference to the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution but also with reference to the accused being "called on for his defence." The mere fact that some prosecution witnesses may be cross-examined at the instance of the accused even after he has entered upon his defence cannot alter the interpretation which the plain words in section 342 should receive.

Then, turning to section 537, I am of the opinion that the infringement of the rule enacted in section 342 is not a mere error, omission or irregularity. Assuming for a moment that the disregard of the rule amounts only to an error, omission or irregularity, how can it ever be ascertained that such an error, etc., has in fact or has not occasioned a failure of justice? We shall be left to speculate what the statement of the accused would have been or in what manner it would have influenced the mind of the Trying Judge. I would for that reason assume in every instance that the non-observance has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

The result is that, in my view, the decision in In re Maruda Mathu Vannian (1) on both the questions is correct. I would, therefore, set aside the conviction of the accused and order a re-trial.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 103 OF 1923.

March 22, 1923.

Present.—Mr. Justice Kulwant Sahay.

ANOTHER—SECOND PARTY—PETITIONERS

versus

PIAR KOERI—FIRST PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceeding under—Written statement, failure of one party to file, effect of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Transfer of case to another Magistrate, when can be made.

The basis of a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not the written statement of the parties but the Police report or other information from which the Magistrate is satisfied about the fact of the likelihood of a breach of the peace. [p. 174, col. 2.]

When a Magistrate is so satisfied he should make a note stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and require the parties to attend and put in written statements of their respective claims. [p. 174, col. 2.]

If a party fails to put in a written statement that would not take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed with the case. The proceeding having been properly initiated it is incumbent on the Magistrate to make the enquiry and to take such evidence as the parties offer irrespective of the fact that one or other of them has failed to put in a written statement. [p. 174, col. 2.]

In re Goluck Chunder Mytee, 11 W. R. 9 Cr., relied on.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires the Magistrate who draws up a proceeding under the section to call upon the parties concerned to attend his Court and to file written statements of their respective claims. He cannot direct them to appear before another Magistrate. But after the parties have attended and are ready to proceed with the case, it may be validly transferred to another Magistrate competent to try it. [p. 175, col. 1.]

Application against an order of the Honorary Magistrate, Arrah, dated the 5th of February 1923.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners were the second party in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The dispute relates to the possession of three plots of land bearing Survey Nos. 1100, 1106, and 1153 in village Parbatpur. These plots formed the raiya holding of two brothers Singar Koeri and Piar Koeri. Singar Koeri died about four years ago and Musammât Ramjharia, of the second party, is his widow. The surviving brother Piar Koeri is the first party in these proceedings and his case is that the two brothers were joint and since the death of Singar Koeri he has been in exclusive possession of the three plots by right of survivorship. Musammât Ramjharia of the second party claims that her husband was separate from the first party and that she has been in exclusive possession of half of the three plots in dispute as the heir of her husband. Mukhan Ahir, the other member of the second party, claims actual possession of a part of the land in dispute as a mortgagee from Musammât Ramjharia.

On the 13th October 1922, the first party filed a petition before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Arrah setting out the above facts and stating that, on the 10th October 1922, he was obstructed by the second party when he went to sow Khesari crops in the lands; that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace and he prayed for proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate thereupon made an order upon the Police to enquire and report by the 7th November 1922, and to see that no breach of the peace takes place. The Police submitted a report and on the 7th of November 1922 the Magistrate ordered the proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to be drawn up, fixing 23rd November 1922 as the date for filing written statement and adducing evidence. After some adjournments the second party filed a written statement on the 21st December 1922. The first party prayed for time and the case was adjourned to the 16th January 1923. On the 16th of January, it appears that no written statement was filed by the first party, but he was present in Court with his witnesses and was ready to go on with the case. The Magistrate thereupon made the following order on the 16th January 1923: "Case ready; transferred to Moulvi Abdul Gafoor for favour of disposal." On the same date the case was taken up by Moulvi Abdul Gafoor; some witnesses were examined on behalf of the first party, and on the petition of the first party the case was adjourned to the 29th of January in order to enable the first party to produce more witnesses. On the 29th of January three more witnesses were examined for the first party and three witnesses were examined for the second party, and on the 5th of January 1923, the Magistrate made his final order declaring the first party to be in possession and forbidding disturbance of such possession. The second party now applies for revision of this order.

The first point taken by the learned Counsel on behalf of the second party is, that as no written statement was filed by the first party, the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order in favour of the first party. Sub-section (1) of section 145 provides that, "whenever a District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of First Class is satisfied from a Police report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof, within the local limits of his jurisdiction, he shall make an order in writing, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and require the parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court in person or by Pleader, within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate, and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute." In order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to proceed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, all that is necessary is that he should be satisfied of there being a likelihood of a breach of the peace and he should make a note stating his grounds of his being so satisfied and require the parties to attend and to put in written statements of their claims. This was done in the present case. The Magistrate was satisfied upon the Police report and he made an order requiring the parties to put in written statements. Now, if a party fails to put in a written statement that would not take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed with the case. The proceeding being properly instituted it was incumbent on the Magistrate to make the enquiry and to take such evidence as the parties offered irrespective of the fact that one or other of the party failed to put in a written statement. The Magistrate would not be justified in refusing to proceed with the case because the parties neglected to file a written statement on the date fixed; he has to take evidence, if offered by any of the parties, and to decide the case upon such evidence. Reference in this connection may be made to the case of In re Goluck Chunder Mytee (1). This case was undoubtedly decided under the Act of 1861, but the principle enunciated therein is applicable to proceedings under the present Code. The learned Counsel for the petitioner argues that the written statement is the basis upon which a case under section 145 proceeds and it is upon the allegations contained in the written statement that the parties know what the case of their opponent is, and have to adduce evidence accordingly, but, in my opinion, the basis of a proceeding under section 145 is not the written statement but the Police report or other information from which the Magistrate is satisfied about the fact of the likelihood of a breach of the peace. In the present case we find that the case sought to be made by the first party was clearly set out in his petition of the 13th of October 1922, and when he appeared on the date fixed for hearing and adduced evidence the Magistrate was bound to receive such evidence and to decide the case. The learned Counsel relies on sub-section (4) of section 145 which provides that the Magistrate shall, without reference to the merits of the claims of any of the parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statements so put in, hear the parties, and receive the evidence produced by them, and contends that if no written statement is filed, the Magistrate cannot proceed further, or, in any event, cannot make any order in favour of the party failing to file a written statement; but this sub-section does not say that if no written statement is filed the Magistrate cannot make the order. If no written statement is put in he certainly cannot peruse it, but all the same he is bound to hear the parties and to take the evidence produced by them. I am, therefore, of opinion that the not filing of the written statement by the first party did not take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to make an order in his favour.

The second point taken is that as no written statement had been filed on the 16th of January 1923 the learned Sub-Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction to transfer the case to any other Magistrate for disposal, and reliance is placed upon the case of Misri Chaudhury v. Narsingh Prasad Tewari (2). In that case the proceeding was drawn up by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and in the order initiating the proceeding the learned Magistrate directed the parties to appear before another Magistrate on the 28th of August 1920 and to file their written statements there. This Court held that it was illegal for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to direct the parties to appear before another Magistrate and to file their written statement there, inasmuch as section 145 requires the Magistrate to draw up proceeding calling upon the parties concerned to attend his Court and to file written statements. In the present case the case was not transferred until the parties were ready and one of the parties had filed his written statement. This objection, therefore, also must be disallowed.

The third objection taken is, that the second party claims possession of the plots in dispute jointly with the first party, and, where the dispute is between two parties, one of whom claims joint possession, proceedings under section 145 cannot be maintained and reliance is placed on the case of Sham Lal Mahton v. Rajendra Lal (3). That was a case of admitted joint proprietors. In the present case each party claims exclusive possession of one half of the plots in dispute. This objection is without any foundation and cannot be allowed.

The result is, that this application is dismissed.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 362-B OF 1922.

June 10, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Duckworth.

NGA BA SEIN—ACCUSED

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act (I I of 1919), ss. 2, 10—Area of restriction—Magistrate, duty of.

An order under the Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act confining a person to the four corners of his house is improper. The narrowest limits of restriction should be the village of the person concerned, or the limits of the village to which he is restricted.

Before making an order of restriction under the above Act the Magistrate should satisfy himself that the accused is able to earn his livelihood within the area of restriction.

Reference made under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Toungoo, to amend the restriction order passed on the accused by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pegu.

NGA BA SEIN v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—The accused, Nga Ba Sen, had an order of restriction passed against him under the Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, by which he had to report his presence to the headman every day before 6 P. M., was not permitted to leave his village tract without the leave of the Police Station Officer at Kawa, and not depart from his house between the hours of 10 P. M. and 5 A. M. without making a report to the headman.

The case has been referred to this Court by the learned Sessions Judge, Toungoo, more especially with reference to the last portion of this Court's order, as reported in the case of Emperor v. Nga Kala (1). The Sessions Judge has rightly raised the point as to whether an order confining a man to the four corners of his own house at night is a proper order under the provisions of the Act. I am aware that this is a common form of order under the Act in the districts, and it is necessary that a definite ruling be pronounced in regard to it, especially in view of the last paragraph of the decision quoted. I have fully considered the point, and am of the opinion that it was never intended that a man should be confined to the four corners of his house at night in such cases as this, and that the narrowest limits of restriction should be the village of the man concerned, or the limits of the village to which he is restricted, as the case may be.

The Act itself does not define the limits of restriction, further than laying down that a person may be restricted to any area prescribed in the order of restriction. This is in section 2. Section 10 would perhaps lead to an inference that the area must be the whole area of a village, inasmuch as it speaks of the person being able to earn his livelihood within the area of restriction. Further, rule 3 of the Police Department Notification No. 280, dated November 17th, 1919, Published at page 918 of the Burma Gazette of November 22nd, 1919, seems to make it clear that the area shall ordinarily be the village-tract or town where the person resides, or to which he is restricted by the order. It is going too far to restrict the person to his house within such an area. It is clear, however, that, in the case quoted from the Burma Law Journal, the point was never considered either in this Court, or by the referring Sessions Judge, and the fact that in that case the man was restricted to his house at night was, due to the causes suspected by the learned Sessions Judge, Toungoo, in his present Order of Reference. In other words, it was due to oversight, and must be read as in the nature of an obiter dictum. The rest of that decision is correct but that portion of it, by which the person in question was restricted to the four corners of his house at night, is erroneous and is overruled.

The first portion of the Magistrate's order is unobjectionable. With regard to the second part it appears that the accused's village is four miles away from the Police Station. In order to obtain leave from the Police Station Officer, he would have to leave his village-tract, and thereby offend against the order. This is contrary to the spirit of rule 5 of the Notification already referred to. Under rule 6 his headman can grant him leave for three days, which would enable him to apply to the Police Station Officer, in case he required longer leave of absence.

There is another defect in the present proceedings. The Magistrate never, as provided by section 10 of the Act, satisfied himself that the accused was able to earn his livelihood within the area of restriction. I find that this error is almost universal, and shows that the Act is never carefully or intelligently read.

Accordingly, the order is amended as follows:—"That the accused do report his presence every day before 6 P. M. to his headman, and that he do be restricted to his village-tract."

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3, O. XLIII, r. 1 (m)—Order holding that no compromise has been proved—Appeal, whether lies.

R. 3 of O. XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code applies only where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit. The rule does not lay down what the Court is to do if it finds that there has been no adjustment, compromise or satisfaction.

Therefore, an order holding that there has been no compromise is not an order under r. 3 of O. XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code and is not appealable under r. 1 (m) of O. XLIII of the Code which pre-supposes the existence of an agreement, compromise or satisfaction.

Mahamad Idris Meah v. Mahamad Esahak, 42 Ind. Cas. 192, distinguished.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 7th June, 1922.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhny, for the Appellant.

Lala Balwant Rai and Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff's next friend alleged, and the defendants denied, that the dispute had been compromised. The lower Court has found on inquiry that there was no compromise. The plaintiff appeals, contending that he has a right of appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (m), Civil Procedure Code, whilst it is contended for the respondents that the right of appeal given by that rule from an order refusing to record a compromise applies only where a compromise has been found to have been made and the Court has for some reason refused to record it, and does not apply to a case in which it has been found that no compromise took place.

No authority on the point has been cited. Counsel for the appellant has referred to Mahamad Idris Meah v. Mahamad Esahak (1), but it does not appear that in that case the existence of the compromise was disputed.

It appears to me that the contention of the respondent's Counsel is correct. In the first place, I think that the words used in O. XLIII, r. 1 (m), "an order under r. 3 of O. XXIII recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction" pre-suppose the existence of an agreement, compromise, or satisfaction. In the second place r. 3 of O. XXIII applies, as its very wording shows, only where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit. The rule does not lay down what the Court is to do if it finds that there has been no adjustment, compromise, or satisfaction. Consequently, the order passed by the lower Court in the present case finding that there has been no compromise is not an order under r. 3 of O. XXIII and is not appealable.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Where a duly notified meeting of the members of a Temple Committee cannot be held owing to there being no quorum, such meeting cannot be adjourned to, and held at, a later hour, without notice of such adjournment having been previously given to all the members of the Committee; an adjourned meeting held without such notice, and all business transacted thereat are invalid.

Messrs. S. V. Palekar and D. R. Ugrankar, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—The question on this appeal is whether defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have been properly appointed trustees of the suit temple. That in its turn depends on whether they were validly appointed trustees on November 15, 1913, by the Temple Committee. This Temple Committee is one appointed under the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, and at the date in question it consisted of some ten or eleven members. A notice, Exhibit 39, is alleged to have been given for this Committee to meet at 8 o'clock in the morning on November 15, 1913. At that hour only two members of the Committee were present, and, according to the minutes, Exhibit 34, as there was not present a sufficient number of members to form a quorum for the commencement of the business of the Committee, it was decided that the work of the Committee be deferred and that the Committee should meet at 3 P. M. that day. Then at 3 o'clock that day, three members were present. They then proceeded to transact certain business, and incidentally to elect the defendants I have mentioned.

Now, the real point of the dispute is this, that away back in 1884 or thereabouts the Collector had settled a dispute between the Vaishnavs and the other branch of the Smarth sect as to the proportions in which their respective sects should be appointed Muktesars of various temples. As set out in paragraph 3 of the plaint, it was decided that the Muktesars of the first three temples there mentioned should be in the hands of the Smarths only, and that of the other three temples should be in the hands of the Vaishnavs. The plaintiffs allege that by means of the 1913 election the Vaishnavs have got their nominees elected Muktesars of the suit temple, which, under the 1884 agreement, was to be in the hands of the Smarths. That is what is at the bottom of this dispute.

It will be seen, therefore, that the question of the appointment is no mere technical matter. In the first place, the appointment of trustees is, generally speaking, a matter in which the terms of the appointment have to be properly complied with. In the second place, particularly when religious feelings are aroused, it is to my mind important that any election should be properly conducted. The learned Trial Judge found that the elections were invalid. On appeal the lower Appellate Court set aside this judgment and dismissed the suit holding that the whole suit was bad, because it was within section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the requisite consent of the Collector had not been obtained. That decision was reversed by the High Court and the case remanded.

On remand, the learned Appellate Judge's judgment really comes to this: that the meeting was continuous from 8 A.M. to 3 P.M.; and that there was really no adjournment or postponement. What he says is: "In strictness of speech, it should be said that there was no postponement; there was a waiting for the third member to come. The meeting was convoked at 8. The members were late. Business did not begin till 3. This is easy going. But there are many Committees which must go easily if they are to go at all." On the facts here, I do not think the Judge could fairly inter that the members waited at the place of meeting from 8 to 3. The minutes do not say so, and the evidence of the recorder Santaya does not say so. What he says is: "The time fixed for the meeting was 8 A.M. Defendants Nos. 8 and 10 were present at that time. So we waited for the arrival of the other members. But as nobody turned up, the meeting was adjourned till the afternoon of that day."

So that brings one to this point. Admittedly, there was no quorum, for the quorum is three. Could then the two members adjourn the meeting either to a later hour that day or to some subsequent day, and in any event would such an adjournment be valid unless notice of the adjournment was given to all the members? Now there are no special rules of this Committee which have been framed, or at any rate which have been brought to our attention, and we must, therefore, decide the case on general principles. There being no quorum, I fail to see what power the two members had to adjourn the meeting to 3 o'clock that day or to 3 o'clock say two days afterwards, unless at any rate notice of the adjournment was given to all the members. Ex hypothesi no such notice of the adjournment was given, and it seems to me, therefore, that the adjourned meeting at 3 o'clock was invalid.

This seems to me to be no mere technicality. If, for instance, some member had come at 9 o'clock and found no body present, he would naturally assume that either the meeting had been held and was over: or that it had failed for want of a quorum, and that in any event he had come too late, and might go away. He would not necessarily know without some express notice that the meeting was to be held at 3 o'clock. I do not say that that happened in the present case. But one has to consider the matter on general principles.

It seems to me, therefore, with all deference to the learned Appellate Judge, that the view he took cannot be sustained. One argument was addressed to us to the effect, that in India and in particular in the districts the various Committees are easy-going people, especially as regards time, and that accordingly it would be a hardship to lay down any hard and fast rules about time. I am not laying down any such hard and fast rules. It is open to the Committee to frame any special rules they like within reason for the conduct of their own business. But it seems to me on the whole that the evils of allowing an indefinite delay in business are likely to outweigh the alleged hardships of reasonable punctuality, and to lead possibly to irregularities of a kind which it is very desirable to avoid.

There is one other point, and that is, that the notice convening the meeting did not specifically state that the meeting was called for the election of new trustees, nor was the notice given to all the members. The notice, Exhibit 39, does say that one member of the Committee had died. So possibly one might infer that his place on the Committee was to be filled up. But that is different from the trusteeship of the suit temple. And the mere fact that the notice states that some very important matters were to be transacted does not give one an express notice that appointments of new trustees of the suit temple were to be made. It would also seem from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that notice was not served on one member of the Committee, Dewan Bahadur Yennemadi, and that the notice on one other man was doubtful, for only word was left at his house, he being away from home.

Having regard to the view I take on the other part of the case, I do not think it necessary to decide this point about the sufficiency of the notice, nor as to whether it was properly served. But as the point has been raised, I may refer to Young v. Ladies' Imperial Club (1) where Lord Sterndale, M. R., lays down some general principles governing meetings for special purposes. He says: "I cannot entertain any doubt that, with certain very limited exceptions where a special meeting of a Committee or any other body has to be specially convened for a particular purpose, every member of that body ought to have notice of and a summons to the meeting." Then he refers to a case of Smyth v. Darley (2) which was the case of an election and not as in Young v. Ladies' Imperial Club (1) of an expulsion from a club, and quotes Lord Campbell as saying: "The election being by a definite body on a day of which, till summons, the electors had no notice, they were all entitled to be specially summoned, and, if there was any omission to summon any of them, unless they all happened to be present, or unless those not summoned were beyond summoning distance—as, for instance, abroad—there could not be a good electoral assembly." Then he cites another case of In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines, Limited (3) and quotes Lord Esher as saying: "All the Directors should have had notice of the meeting of the 24th." Then Lord Sterndale proceeds.

"That was on general principles I think, and not any special provision in the articles that notice should be sent to every member." Next, he again quotes Lord Esher—"If they had not, then the meeting of the 24th was no valid meeting, and being an invalid meeting could not adjourn itself to the 26th." Then Lord Sterndale continues, "therefore, as to the general principle, I think, there can be no question," and he points out that there are or may be exceptions where it is physically impossible for a member to attend, he being abroad, or possibly dangerously ill, but that he does not know of any other exception.

As I have said, I do not propose to decide whether in this particular case the notice sent was sufficient, or whether it ought to have stated expressly that new trustees were to be appointed. I have no doubt that the latter course is far preferable, but whether its omission would invalidate the appointment is a question that I leave open.

There is one further point. It is said that even if the election of 1913 was invalid, it was ratified by a subsequent resolution in 1916. It appears that the custom was for the persons who had been elected Mukteshis to be entered in a particular book belonging, I gather, to the Collector. Some hitch arose about this, and consequently the Collector suggested that the matter should be reconsidered by the Temple Committee. Accordingly, they purported to meet again and to re-elect these particular persons.

This point is not dealt with by the lower Appellate Court. But the learned Trial Judge points out that the persons who purported to make these new elections were only three, of whom one was defendant No. 11 who quite clearly had not been validly appointed a member of the Committee. He had only been co-opted by the members of the Temple Committee, which is clearly invalid under the Act regulating the appointments of new members of the Committee.

It, however, appears that this point was not relied on in the written statement of the defendants, nor did they make it a ground of their appeal to the lower Appellate Court. That no doubt is a reason why the lower Appellate Court did not deal with the point. One can understand that in any event there would be the greatest difficulty in upholding this alleged confirmation, having regard to the illegality of the appointment of defendant No. 11. Under the circumstances, I do not think it is open now to the respondents to rely on the validity of that confirmation.

In the result, therefore, I would allow this appeal, and restore the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge.

As regards costs, the appellants had to amend their memo. of appeal by specifically raising the points on which they eventually succeeded, and an adjournment of the appeal became necessary for their opponents to meet these points.

On the whole, we think the justice of the case will be met by letting the judgment of the Trial Judge as to the costs of the trial stand. As regards the costs of the proceedings before the District Court both on the first occasion and on remand, we will direct that each party should bear his own costs. As regards the costs of this appeal, we direct they be paid by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 including the costs of the remand Appeal No. 269 of 1920 decided by this Appellate Court on June 7, 1921.

Fawcett, J.—I agree. I am certainly indisposed to be too technical in dealing with meetings in the Mofussil of bodies like this Temple Committee, whose appointment of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 is in question. I quite agree with the learned District Judge that practice must to a large extent be considered as sufficient authority for the mode of transacting business. But, at the same time, I think it is clear that the view he has taken in treating the adjourned meeting as merely a continuation of the first meeting is one that contravenes a very necessary and reasonable principle of justice and equity, viz., that every member of a Committee or other body should have due notice of the time when he may attend the meeting, if he wants to. This is a principle which has been laid down very strongly by the Courts in England, as is shown by the cases to which my learned brother has referred. It is also, I think, recognised very plainly by the Legislature both in England and in India, for the Companies Acts of both countries contain provisions in the model articles enacted in a Schedule, under which due notice of a general meeting is to be given to all persons concerned. [8 Edw. VII. c. 69, Schedule I., section 49, and Indian Companies Act, 1913, Schedule I, Art. 49.]

It is obvious, as my learned brother has pointed out, that even in this particular instance, it might have happened that some member attended late, and not knowing of the time to which it had been adjourned, did not take part in the proceedings at the adjourned meeting. No doubt it is true that that is not alleged in this case, and that it probably did not happen. But that does not, in my opinion, affect the principles of law, on which, in dealing with a case of this kind, we must act, especially as the business which was transacted is of a very important kind, viz. the appointment of trustees, a matter concerning which the Courts are scrupulous to see that ordinary principles regulating the validity of election, &c., have been properly complied with.

The assumption of the District Judge that the second meeting was a mere continuation of the first is opposed to the actual fact and I do not think that it can be properly justified by a reference to dilatory habits and easy-going ways. If we are to accept that as a sufficient excuse for a departure from the ordinary principles regarding meetings of Committees, then it would be very difficult to draw the line; and I think that, as my learned brother has pointed out, it would lead to far greater confusion and injustice than the opposite view.

The learned Judge has cited an instance which he considers is in favour of his view, viz., that at the first session of a newly constituted House of Commons, two University Members (no one else appearing) adjourned the House until His Majesty's pleasure be further known. But in my opinion that does not really support the view of the matter that he has taken. In that case there would necessarily be notice to all the Members of the House as to the time when they were to meet again; for His Majesty's pleasure would be signified in a form that would reach all members concerned in due time. Then, again, there is an arrangement in the House of Lords in England, by which if there is not a quorum of members at the proper time, there is automatically an adjournment to a definite hour later on. (See Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, Volume I, page 129) See also in the case of companies, there is usually a provision under which "if within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting a quorum is not present, the meeting... shall stand adjourned to the same day in the next week at the same time and place." [8 Edw. VII. c. 69, Schedule I, section 52, and Indian Companies Act, 1913, Schedule I, section 52.] But that is quite a different case, for there is a definite time fixed for the adjourned meeting, which is known to all the members, so that they have an opportunity of attending at the proper time. In the present case no evidence was adduced that there was any similar practice in this case, and it is too late now to ask us to consider that point. In any case the time fixed, viz., 3 P. M., is not alleged to have been a time fixed according to such a practice, but it happened to be the particular time selected by the two members.

Therefore, I agree with my learned brother

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 72, 76, 77—Refusal to register, refusal to admit for registration, and refusal to accept for registration, distinction between—Refusal to register—Appeal to Registrar—Suit to enforce registration, when maintainable.

For a suit to lie under section 77 of the Registration Act the following requisites are necessary:—

- (1) The presentation of the document required to be registered by a person authorised to present it to the Sub-Registrar;
- (2) A refusal to register by the Sub-Registrar;
- (3) An appeal within time to the Registrar;
- (4) A refusal to register by the Registrar; and
- (5) The institution of the suit within time.

[p. 186, col. 2.]
The expression "refusal to admit a document for registration" in section 72 of the Registration Act refers to cases where registration has been refused rather than to cases where a Sub-Registrar has declined to accept a document at all at the first stage of his proceedings. In other words, refusal to admit to registration and refusal to register are the same thing. There is, however, a distinction between the expressions "refusal to accept for registration" and "refusal to register." [p. 184, cols. 1 & 2.]

Therefore, in order to validate a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act there must be a refusal to register and not merely a refusal to accept for registration. [p. 184, col. 2.]

Section 72 of the Registration Act must, however, be read widely as giving a general power of appeal in all cases where registration is refused and where refusal is not on the ground of non-execution. [p. 185, col. 2.]

There is no authority for the proposition, that where the Sub-Registrar refuses registration on a number of different grounds, there is no appeal to the Registrar under section 72 of the Registration Act, merely by reason of the fact that one of those grounds refers to a question of limitation. Petition for revision of the order of the Divisional Judge, Derajat, dated 12th June 1922, reversing the order of the Munsif 1st Class, Kohat, dated 22nd December 1921.

Mr. Saaduddin Khan, K. S., for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Abdul Ali Khan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case instituted a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act for a decree directing the registration of a document executed on the 23rd of January 1921 between Rukan Alam and his wife Musammat Aimna. Musammat Aimna denied execution of the document and the question of the execution was alone put in issue. The first Court held that execution was not proved and dismissed the suit. The Divisional Judge on appeal by the plaintiff held that execution was proved and passed a decree directing registration. In the first Court the plaintiff's Counsel claimed the framing of an issue on the question whether a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act would lie. The Munsif on the same day declined to deal with the question in a short order which simply states that there is no need to alter or add to the issue. I regard this refusal as a material irregularity. The jurisdiction of the Court was challenged on grounds which clearly deserved consideration, and an issue should have been framed and adjudicated upon. The question was naturally not raised in the grounds of appeal in the Divisional Court as the plaintiff was the appellant and, as the judgment of the Divisional Court is silent on the subject, it may also be assumed that it was not there argued. The question, however, appears to me of considerable importance and I have, therefore, at the instance of the defendant, taken up this question on the revisional side. The finding of fact by the Divisional Court that the document was duly executed by the defendant will not be re-opened. The present proceedings deal solely with the question of law involved. The history of the case before the registering authorities is as follows:—The document, as already stated, was executed on the 23rd of January 1921. On the 22nd of June 1921 or nearly five months after execution the plaintiff made an application to the Registrar which is headed as an application under section 36 of the Act. The application states that registration is allowable as the 4 months prescribed for registration has expired and fifth month is beginning and that registration can be permitted on payment of penalty fees within an additional four months. The application recites that the defendant is intentionally keeping out of way and a request is made that she be summoned. The Registrar on receiving this application simply endorsed upon it on the same day: "To go to the Sub-Registrar." The application was received by the Sub-Registrar on the 29th of June and on that day the plaintiff was present. The Sub-Registrar gave orders that the defendant was to be served with a notice for the 8th of July. On that day the parties duly appeared. The Sub-Registrar then passed the following order:—Musammat Aimna denies completion and execution of the document. The document was written on the 23rd of January 1921 and was presented to the Registrar on the 22nd of June 1921, which is also time barred. This agreement is vague (mohmal). It is written jointly on behalf of Musammat Aimna and Rukan Alam. There should have been a separate agreement by Rukan Alam and a separate agreement on behalf of Musammat Aimna. Therefore, in these circumstances, registration is refused." The plaintiff then put in an appeal to the Registrar under section 72 of the Act. The Registrar rejected the appeal in limine by an order stating that as registration was refused on the ground of denial of execution, the appellant should have applied under section 74 of the Registration Act and not under section 72. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit within 30 days of the order of the Registrar rejecting his appeal.

It is argued for the petitioner that compliance with all the provisions of the law of Registration must be established to allow the institution of a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act. It is contended that, in this case, there has been no "refusal to register," but merely a "refusal to accept for registration." The document was not presented for registration within 4 months of its execution as prescribed by section 23 of the Act. No application was made to the Registrar under section 25 of the Act for extension of the time allowed for presentation and no such extension was granted. There is no adjudication by the Registrar on an appeal under section 72, or on an application made under section 75 and consequently no refusal to register under section 72 or 76, a refusal to register under one or other of these sections being an indispensable requisite to create the right to sue under section 77. It is urged that in this case the Sub-Registrar rightly declined to accept the document for registration as presented after time, and that there is preponderance of authority for the view that such "refusal to accept" is distinguishable from refusal "to register." The argument may be viewed from two standpoints. One is the legal effect of refusal to accept as opposed to refusal to register. The other is, whether, even assuming that there has been a refusal to register, the provisions of the Law of Registration have been sufficiently complied with in this case to enable the plaintiff as against this refusal, to sue under section 77 for a direction that the document be registered. It is not easy to treat these two aspects of the case entirely independently. The distinction, if it exists, between refusal to accept for registration and refusal to register itself depends upon what view is taken of the requirements of the law of registration.

There are three different expressions used in the Act: Refusal to register, refusal to admit for registration and refusal to accept for registration. It is tolerably clear that section 72, where it says that "An appeal shall lie against an order of the Sub-Registrar refusing to admit a document for registration," refers to cases when registration tration has been refused rather than to cases where a Sub-Registrar has declined to accept a document at all at the first stage of his proceedings; in other words, refusal to admit to registration and refusal to register are the same thing. The Act, however, evidently intended some distinction between refusal to accept for registration and refusal to register. Section 19 of the Act lays down that the registering officer shall refuse to register a document which is in a language which he does not understand. The immediately succeeding section, section 20, lays down that a registering officer may in his discretion refuse to accept for registration any document in which an interlineation, erasure, etc., etc., occurs. Section 21 again uses the expression "accept for registration" in prescribing the conditions necessary for the proper description of property to which a document relates. Clearly, the Legislature must, in framing these sections, have had some object in view in using two different expressions. This further is the view generally taken by High Courts in India. Gangava v. Sayava (1) is very definite in this respect. Another authority is Udit Upadhia v. Imam Bandi Bibi (2). As against this there is a well-known ruling of the Madras High Court Gangadara Mudali v. Sambasiva Mudali (3) in which the view is taken that no distinction exists between refusal to register and refusal to accept for registration so far as regards the provisions of section 77, and that both can equally validate a suit under that section. The ruling in question dealt with a case in which the circumstances were most peculiar and in which the plaintiff had been prejudiced by advice given to him by the Sub-Registrar which had had the effect of an unexpected order passed by the Collector under section 25 of the Act refusing to extend the time. That ruling, if it were followed, would have an important bearing upon the present case inasmuch as it is an authority for the view not only that refusal to accept and refusal to register are the same thing but that when the refusal is based upon non-presentation within time, a Court is nevertheless entitled to hear a suit brought under section 77. The force of the ruling, however, is considerably weakened by the fact that the two Judges who composed the Bench were not unanimous and also the fact that the circumstances of the case were so peculiar that the law may almost be said to have been to some extent twisted to avoid an inequitable result. We find, indeed, that the Madras High Court itself has not followed that precedent to its logical conclusion. In a case reported as Yeliambal Achi v. Govindasami Odayar (4) it was held that no appeal would lie to a Registrar under section 72 when the Sub-Registrar had merely refused to take up a document for registration under section 20. It is not quite clear why the term "take up" is used instead of the term "accept." Possibly, this was to avoid conflict with the previous case in which it was laid down that no distinction between refusal to accept and refusal to register could be maintained. There is, however, another important authority Shama Charan Das v. Joyenoolah (5) for the view that when a Registrar has refused to extend time such refusal may create the right to sue under section 77. That case related not to refusal to extend the time for presentation under section 25 but to a refusal to extend the time for the admission of execution under section 34. It is a little difficult to reconcile that judgment with the view generally taken by the same High Court that refusal to accept for registration and refusal to register are to be distinguished. If a Registrar declines to extend time under section 34 the obvious presumption would seem to be that there has been a refusal to accept for registration. There can be little doubt that the distinction between refusal to accept for registration and refusal to register must be preserved, and that to validate a suit under section 77 there must have been a refusal to register. It appears to me, however, that too much stress has been laid upon the ground of refusal as opposed to the stage of the proceedings at which the refusal was made. The refusal to accept for registration implies a refusal to take up the case in limine, whereas a refusal to register postulates something more than a mere security of the date and outward form of the document. Now what we clearly have to consider in the present case is whether there was a refusal to register which cannot be explained alone on the ground that the document was not presented within time. The Act may, I think, be considered exhaustive as regards the case in which refusal to accept for registration is warranted and in each case there is a remedy. If acceptance is refused under section 20 it is tolerably simple for correction to be made by the executants and for the document to be presented again. Under section 21 the defects in the document may be cured by attaching the necessary descriptions of the property. If acceptance of the document is refused under section 23 because it has not been presented within time, the person presenting can apply to Registrar under section 25 for time to be extended. It is clearly not the intention of the Act to give the Sub-Registrar a final voice in a decision in cases where any contentious question is involved. Under section 68 (1) of the Act he is under the superintendence and control of the Registrar. Now, when we come to the question of refusal to register as opposed to refusal to accept in limine it is quite clear that the Act is not exhaustive. In fact, the only sections which directly refer in so many words to refusals to register by a Registrar are section 19 and section 35. There may be numerous other grounds on which registration is actually refused. Section 35 deals with refusal to register on the ground of non-execution and a special remedy against such refusal is provided for by section 73. Unless, therefore, it is assumed that the Act is not exhaustive, the only other ground of refusal would be that given in section 19 which relates solely to the rare case in which a document is in a language which the Registrar does not understand. Now, section 72 provides for an appeal to the Registrar in all cases of refusal to register other than those in which the refusal is on the ground of non-execution. It is inconceivable that section 72 applies only to cases where registration is refused under section 19. The ruling already quoted Shama Charan Das v. Joyenoolah

(5) is a good authority for the view that section 72 must be read widely as giving a general power of appeal in all cases where registration is refused and where refusal is not on the ground of non-execution. The learned Judges may, perhaps, have gone too far in including among the orders appealable under section 72 an order of refusal based upon the ground that extension of time was not allowed under section 34. But if they are held to have gone too far it must be solely for reason of the fact that a refusal on the ground of non-appearance within time is a refusal to accept for registration and not a refusal to register. In all case where actually registration has been refused on grounds other than the denial of execution section 72 applies. I can see no authority for the proposition, that, when a sub-Registrar refuses registration, as in the present case, on a number of different grounds, there is no appeal to the Registrar under section 72 merely by reason of the fact that one of those grounds referred to a question of limitation. Further, in the present case it is to my mind clear from the order of the Sub-Registrar dated the 8th of July 1921 that the question of limitation was not the main ground for refusal. The remark that the presentation is also time-barred seems to be rather in the nature of an obiter dictum. The Sub-Registrar was refusing to register mainly on the ground that the document was vague, that it was not executed in counter-part, and that execution was denied. There was, therefore, in the present case, in my opinion, a clear and unmistakeable refusal to register and one which was made not at the preliminary hearing but after a regular proceeding to which both parties had been summoned. The concluding words of the order corroborate this view. The contention that there was nothing more than a refusal to accept for registration cannot be sustained.

The finding, however, that there has been a refusal to register and not a mere refusal to accept for registration does not finally dispose of the petitioner's contention that in the present case the requirements of the Law of Registration have not been complied with. It is argued that the presentation of the document after the period allowed by section 23 and the omission of the plaintiff to apply for and obtain an order extending the time under section 25 are fatal to his power to sue. I am not prepared to accept this contention in the present case. The application made to the Registrar on the 22nd of June 1921 is, no doubt, described as one under section 36, to compel the attendance of the other party, but it also most clearly implies a demand that time for presentation be extended. It seems to assume that this demand will be granted. The Registrar made no inquiry into this question and merely forwarded the application to the Sub-Registrar. This may be regarded either as an acceptance of the application that time should be extended or it may be regarded as a direction to Sub-Registrar to report upon the question; it can at least not be interpreted in any way as a refusal to extend time. If such a refusal was implied there would have been no meaning in the transmission of the document to the Sub-Registrar. It may be argued, however, that, once the Sub-Registrar had said that the presentation was time-barred, the plaintiff could and should have moved the Registrar under section 25 to allow an extension of time. It appears to me that it was extremely difficult for the plaintiff to know how to act. Registration had been refused by the Registrar on a number of grounds. Some of these grounds would have warranted an appeal under section 72 and another an application under section 73. There was the difficulty that the procedure is not the same in these two sections. Section 72 relates to an appeal which is heard, without fresh evidence as an appeal, and section 73 refers to an application on which the Registrar acts in an original capacity. In view of the nature of the order passed by the Sub-Registrar I hardly think that the plaintiff could be blamed for making his application in the form of an appeal under section 72. He undoubtedly had the right to appeal under that section and there was no doubt that he was intending bona fide to move the Registrar to exercise his powers under the Act to give him redress against an order refusing registration. The case became still further complicated when the Registrar refused even to take up the appeal under section 72 on the ground that there was denial of execution and that, therefore, an application should have been made under section 73. It seems to me that the plaintiff was at least entitled to assume that the Registrar had refused to order the document to be registered under section 72 and that, therefore, his proper remaining remedy was to come to the Civil Court under section 77. There is a consensus of rulings to the effect that, for a suit to lie under section 77, the following requisites are necessary:—

1. The presentation by a person authorised to present the document to the Sub-Registrar.

(2) A refusal to register by the Sub-Registrar.

3. An appeal within time to the Registrar.

4. A refusal by the Registrar; and

5. The institution of the suit within time.

I am unable to see in the present case that any of these requisites have been omitted. There has been presentation to a Sub-Registrar by a person authorized to present. There has been a refusal by the Sub-Registrar and, as I have already shown, not a mere refusal to accept for registration. There has been an appeal within time to the Registrar. There has been a refusal by the Registrar to direct registration and there has been the institution of a suit within 30 days from that refusal. In Holmwood's Law and Practice of Registration in India the broad proposition is laid down that when a Registrar has refused to order the document to be registered under section 72 or section 76 there is nothing in section 77 to oust the jurisdiction of a Civil Court. There has been a refusal to register under section 72 and it cannot be said that, because there has not also been a refusal under section 76, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted. Whether or not the plaintiff could and should under the Registrar's order of the 22nd of June 1921 have lodged a further application under section 73 (out of which section 76 arises) seems to me immaterial. He was undoubtedly entitled to appeal under section 72 and he did so. The rejection of the appeal in limine appears to me to amount to exactly the same thing as its dismissal on the merits. I must hold, therefore, in the present case that no defect in procedure has been shown which would oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court under section 77 of the Act and that the present suit was, therefore, legally brought. In view of this finding there is no reason for me to interfere in the order of the Appellate Court and I dismiss this application for revision with costs.

A preliminary decree in a mortgage suit must be made final before it can be executed, and an application to make such a decree final must be made within three years and six months from its date. Such an application cannot be looked upon as a proceeding in execution, and the fact that a previous application, made within the period prescribed, is dismissed for want of prosecution will not avail to save limitation for a subsequent application made after the expiry of that period.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 14 of 1921.

Mr. P. B. Shingne for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—On the 29th June 1911 the plaintiffs obtained a decree in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Thana on a simple mortgage. The decree directed as follows:—"The defendant do pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 598 and costs within 6 months from this date or do pay the same into Court. In default, the plaintiffs do get the mortgaged property or a sufficient portion thereof sold and do recover their amount." That was a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, which corresponded to section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act as it stood prior to the passing of the Civil Procedure Code. Sections 85 to 90, 92, to 94, 96, 97, 99 and part of 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, were repealed and re-enacted in the Civil Procedure Code in O. XXXIV with certain variations, decrees passed in accordance with the provisions of sections 86 and 88 of Act IV of 1882 were regarded by some Courts as final decrees and by some Courts as preliminary decrees, with the result that there was a conflict of decisions on the question whether any further proceedings should be treated as in execution or as applications to make the decree final. That conflict was set at rest by the alteration made in section 89 when it became O. XXXIV, r. 5, whereby it was directed that the Courts should pass a final decree, the terms of which would depend upon whether the mortgage amount had been paid or whether there had been default. Unfortunately, sections 86, 88 and 92 were not materially amended when inserted in the Civil Procedure Code as O. XXXIV, rr. 2, 4 and 7, with the result that not only those rules but also the forms 3, 4 and 5 of preliminary decrees appearing in Appendix D are misleading. An ordinary layman and even a lawyer might well think that all that is necessary after a decree has been obtained under one of those rules and drawn up in accordance with the relative forms is to apply to the Court in execution to get the mortgaged property sold, purchased or redeemed. In this case the plaintiff on the 7th December 1913 took out a darkhast to make the decree final which was not prosecuted. We do not think, although it was called darkhast, that the Court would be entitled to look upon it on that account as a proceeding in execution considering that the application really was to make the decree final. A similar darkhast was issued on the 24th April 1915 which was also dismissed for want of prosecution.

Now, the time allowed for applying to the

Court for making a decree final is three years from the time when the right to apply accrues under Art. 181, First Schedule of the Limitation Act. So that after three years and 6 months from the 29th June 1911 the plaintiffs were time-barred from asking the Court to make the decree final.

On the 25th April 1918 an application was made to make the decree final and that was rejected as being out of time. The plaintiffs have appealed from the rejection of their application. Since it is clear under the provisions of the Code that there has been only a preliminary decree which must be made final before it can be executed, all the previous applications were futile to prevent the present application being time-barred. The decision of the learned Judge in the Court below dismissing the application was right, and the appeal, therefore, must be dismissed.

It might be desirable, until the rules in O. XXXIV and the corresponding forms are re-cast, that the Courts when drawing up preliminary decrees under rules 2, 4 and 7 should add the following heading, "Preliminary decree which requires to be made final within the prescribed period of limitation before it can be executed."

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—In this suit it has been found that one square yard of house site was included in the mortgage-deed merely to give jurisdiction to the Peddapur Sub-Registrar, who registered the document, whereas the property really intended to be mortgaged was situated in Amalapur. Following the decision in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (1) and Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2) it has been held that the mortgage-deed is invalid as being "in fraud of the Registration Law." The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, found that the general personal covenant to re-pay is not invalid and has given a decree for the part of the claim that is not barred by limitation, holding that Art. 116 of the Limitation Act is applicable in accordance with the ruling of Ameer Ali, J., in Joginee Mohun Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (3). In appeal it is contended that that ruling is wrong, and that as the registration of the mortgage-deed is invalid, the document as a whole must be treated as unregistered, and consequently the covenant to re-pay must also be treated as an unregistered covenant.

What was held by the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (1) and upheld in Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2), was that "an entry intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a District where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact exists is a fraud on the Registration Law and no registration obtained by means thereof is valid." The principle which I take to underlie this decision is that no person shall be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud. If that principle be applied to the present case, the object attained by the fraud was the registration of the mortgage-deed as such, for had the document been merely a covenant to re-pay, the Peddapur Sub-Registrar would have had jurisdiction under section 29 of the Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908), for under that section parties are at liberty to choose their own place of registration. In so far then as the document evidenced a mere covenant to re-pay there was no fraud upon the Registration Law, and to hold that such registration was invalid would be to extend the principle above-mentioned so as to deprive a party of a right which he had not obtained by fraud as well as of the advantage gained by his fraud. To do this appears to me to extend the principle to inequitable length and I am supported in this view not only by the direct ruling of Ameer Ali, J., in Joginee Mohun Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (3) but also by the action of the Privy Council in the case reported as Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2), for that case was remitted to the Calcutta High Court for a decision as to whether the plaintiff had a valid alternative claim for a personal judgment for the mortgage-debt. No doubt, there was no finding that the claim for a personal decree was based upon a contract in writing registered but it would appear from a perusal of the argument in the case reported as Mathura Prasad v. Chandra Narayan (4) that a period of limitation of 6 years was contemplated, the argument being that a payment of interest in 1903 would save limitation for the suit brought in 1908. Unless it was the opinion of the Court that the debt was secured by a registered instrument the argument would have been of no avail, for such a payment was not within three years of institution of the suit, and the suit would have been barred if based upon the personal covenant. Had that been the case, it appears to me improbable that the case would have been remitted for a consideration of the claim. I am, therefore, of opinion that the decision in Joginee Mohun Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (3) is right and that the registration of the personal covenant to re-pay is not procured by fraud and is consequently valid. The other cases cited in Amba v. Shrinivasa Kamathi (5) and Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath

Mukerji (6) do not appear to have any bearing on the present case and the facts reported in Sham Lal v. Tehariya Lakhmi Chand (7) are too vague to give that case any value here.

The second appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The Memo of Objections must also be dismissed with costs as the lower Court exercised its discretion in awarding a personal remedy and was entitled in so doing to reduce the rate of interest contracted for in the mortgage-deed.

Devadoss, J.—The plaintiff brought the suit as transferee of an hypothecation bond executed by the first defendant in favour of one Seshayya impleading defendants Nos. 5 to 7, the undivided sons of Seshayya and the alienees of some portions of the hypothecation. Various contentions were raised by the defendants. The District Munsif of Amalapuram dismissed the suit on the ground that the registration of the document was invalid as a parcel of land not belonging to the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 was included in the document only for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar who registered the document and that the claim was barred by limitation. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry held that the document was invalid as a mortgage-deed and that the suit was not barred by limitation and gave a money-decree to the plaintiff. The defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 11 have preferred this second appeal.

It is contended by Mr. Narayanamurthi for the appellants that the registration of the document was in fraud of the Registration Law, and that the document cannot be treated as a registered document for any purpose and, therefore, Art. 116 of Limitation Act did not apply to the case; he relied upon Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Hari Dasi Debi (1), Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2), Amba v. Shrinivasa Kamath (5) and Kalka v. Mathura Das (8). In Harendra Lal Roy

Chowdhury v. Hari Dasi Debi (1), the plaintiff brought the suit upon mortgage-deed registered in Calcutta. The defendant contended among other things that the deed had not been legally registered because no portion of the property mortgaged was situate in Calcutta. It was found that the only portion of the property alleged to be in Calcutta was described as "25, Guru Das Street." But the property so described was found to be non-existent. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held "that this parcel is in fact a fictitious entry, and represents no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage, or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security. Such an entry, intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a District where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact exists, is a fraud on the Registration Law, and no registration obtained by means thereof is valid. To hold otherwise would amount to saying that mortgages relating solely to land in other parts of the Presidency could be validly registered by the Sub-Registrar at Calcutta if the parties merely took the precaution to add as a last parcel, Government House, Calcutta, or any similar item." In Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2) "a mortgage-bond for Rs. 8,000 which purported to mortgage a 7-anna share in a village in the Darbhanga District and a one kauri share in the Muzaffurpur District was registered only in the Muzaffurpur District. The mortgagor had purchased the one kauri share shortly before the execution of the mortgage and in order that he might register in Muzaffurpur. He paid Rs. 50 for the one kauri share, but there was no registered instrument or delivery of possession as required by section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Their Lordships found that none of the parties intended that the one kauri share should vest in the mortgagor or pass under the mortgage." Viscount Finlay in delivering the judgment of their Lordships: "In coming to the conclusion that this appeal must be dismissed, their Lordships' judgment rests on the view that none of the parties ever intended that the one kauri share in Mouza Kolhua should vest in Udit (Narayan) or should pass by the mortgage from him to the mortgagee. This case differs toto celo from the case suggested in argument of a mere failure to make a good title to property dealt with by the instrument and which both parties had intended should form part of the security." With regard to the contention that a personal decree should be passed in favour of the plaintiff the noble Viscount observed: "As regards the alternative claim for a personal judgment for the mortgage debt, it is to be observed that no such claim was made in the Courts in India. There is nothing in the evidence or in the judgments which would enable their Lordships to deal with such a claim. At the same time, their Lordships think it desirable in this case that the plaintiffs should have an opportunity of bringing this matter before the High Court. If any such application is made, it will be for the High Court to consider whether any such claim is open upon the present pleadings and, if not, whether any amendment raising it should be made; and, further, whether, under all the circumstances, the claim should be entertained at this stage of the proceedings. If the High Court should think it right to enter upon the consideration of this claim, all defences on the merits or arising out of the lapse of time must be open to the defendants, and the High Court should have power to impose any terms which it thinks just and to deal with the costs. The appeal, so far as it relates to the enforcement of the mortgage on the land, must, in their Lordships' opinion, be dismissed." In that case the mortgage-bond was dated 27th February 1902; the amount of the bond was payable on the 7th September 1902. The suit was instituted on 14th September 1908. It may be safely assumed that the plaintiff could not have expected to get a personal decree against the mortgagor unless Art. 116 was held applicable to the case. No doubt, the respondents were not represented before the Privy Council. But it is quite clear from the order of their Lordships remanding the case to the High Court to enable the plaintiff to amend his plaint and claim a personal decree that they thought that the personal remedy was not barred. Though their Lordships did not say so in so many words in their judgment, it is quite apparent what their view was from the observation of their Lordships in the course of the argument.

With reference to the contention of the appellants' Counsel that "in any case there is no reason why we should not have a personal decree for money."

Sir John Edge observed: "if this was merely a suit to recover money, would not limitation have run" and Counsel for the appellant answered "no, payment of interest saves it." Then Lord Shaw said: "That payment of interest was in 1903."

The contention that the registration which is ineffectual to validate a document required by law to be registered cannot avail for any other purpose seems untenable.

Under section 17 of the Registration Act, certain classes of documents

- (1) gifts of immovable property;
- (2) non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit, or extinguish any title or interest in immovable property of over Rs. 100 in value;
- (3) non-testamentary instruments which acknowledge the receipt or payment of any consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation or extinction of any such right or interest;
- (4) leases of immovable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent; are required to be registered in order to be valid and if they are not registered under section 49 of the Act, they cannot affect the immovable property comprised therein or shall be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property.

Other documents are registrable at the option of the parties. Under section 28 of the Act the class of documents mentioned in section 17, sub-section (1), clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) and section 18 clauses (a), (b) and (c) shall be presented for registration in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose Sub-District the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates is situate. By section 29 every document other than those referred to in section 28 may be presented for registration either in the office of the Sub-Registrar in whose Sub-District the document is executed, or in the office of any other Sub-Registrar at which all the persons executing the same desire to. There is nothing in the Registration Act, therefore, to prevent the registration of a simple money-bond in the office of any Sub-Registrar at which the parties desire to have the document registered.

A simple mortgage usually contains a personal covenant to pay. In fact in almost all the mortgage transactions in this Presidency there is a personal covenant by the mortgagor to re-pay the mortgage amount personally. The portion of the document in which there is a transfer of specific immoveable property as security for money is severable from the portion in which the mortgagor undertakes to re-pay personally the money advanced or to be advanced to him. Where a document consists of two or more parts, or where there are two or more covenants in a document, the mere fact that one part becomes inoperative or invalid by reason of non-compliance with or violation of the provisions of the Registration Act need not necessarily make the other parts of the document invalid or inoperative. Though that portion of the document which by law is required to be registered would be invalid unless registered in accordance with the rules governing registration of documents yet the portion of the document optionally registrable would be valid as the parties have consented to present it in the office of the Sub-Registrar by whom it is registered. It is clear from the observation at page 517 in 48, Calcutta 509 "[Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2)] the appeal, so far as it relates to the enforcement of the mortgage on the land, must, in their Lordships' opinion, be dismissed" that their Lordships did consider the document to be a valid one so far as the claim for a money-decree was concerned.

The case in Amba v. Shrinivasa Kamathi (5) has no application to this case. Their Lordships observe: "It was not and is not disputed that these two deeds cannot be given in evidence or enforced if they have not been duly registered. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that as the appellant was not only a minor but a married woman, her father had ceased to be her natural guardian and had never been appointed her legal guardian, and was not, therefore, her assignee or representative within the meaning of section 3 of the Registration Act, 1877. He was not an executant of the said deeds or either of them; neither was he, within the meaning of the section 34 of that Act, the representative, assign or agent duly authorised on behalf of Krishna Kamathi, deceased, the only executant. The presentation by him of these two deeds for registration was in direct conflict with the express provisions of this 34th section. The deeds were consequently never legally registered. The registration of them which was procured was illegal, invalid and a nullity; and, if that be so, as in their Lordships' opinion it must be held to be, it is not disputed that the deeds would be void and unenforceable." In that case there was no valid presentation of the document and not as in the present, all the parties to the document wanted to get round the provisions of the Registration Act by recitals intended to mislead the Sub-Registrar to do what he would not otherwise have done. The registration of a document by false personation would be no registration at all, and the document being a fraudulent document becomes unenforceable against the party sought to be bound by it as he never consented to the registration being effected by a person falsely personating the executant. That class of cases differs from the present where both parties with their eyes open get a document registered with the intention of treating the document as a validly registered document, but for purposes of convenience or other reasons they violate the specific provisions of section 28 which requires that documents of a certain class should be registered by a Sub-Registrar within whose Sub-District the whole or any portion of the property comprised in the document is situate. The case in Kalka v. Mathura Das (8) is of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh. No doubt, the Judicial Commissioner held that where registration is invalid for one purpose it is invalid for all purposes. This view is evidently on the assumption that all the covenants in a document and all the parts of the document form one indivisible whole. A mortgage-deed, as I have said above, contains more than one part and more than one covenant. A mortgagee can give up his security and sue on the personal covenant alone. He may choose to sue for all or any of the remedies in respect of it. To read an ordinary mortgage document as one indivisible whole is opposed to the recitals therein and the intention of the parties to the document.

Mr. Lakhshman for the respondent relied upon Ram Narayan Singh v. Adhindra Nath Mukerji (6). It was a case in which a mortgage document which by law is required to be attested by two or more witnesses was not so attested. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the document could not be treated as a mortgage document as it contravened the provisions of law which laid down the essentials for a valid mortgage-deed and the absence of the necessary requisite prevented the document taking effect as a mortgage. But it was treated as a simple money-bond. The case which is directly in point is the decision of Mr. Justice Ameer Ali (now a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council) reported as Joginee Mohun Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (3). The learned Judge observed: "I am not satisfied that there was any such property as No. 251-2 belonging to the defendant within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Sealdah so as to give him, under section 28 of the Registration Act, jurisdiction to register the document. If I am right in that conclusion, it follows that the document cannot take effect as a mortgage-deed; but, as it is registered, although the suit has been brought more than three years after the date of execution the claim is not barred as was contended for by the defendant's Counsel." This decision was long before the ruling of the Privy Council reported as Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (1) which settled the law on this point. Though the learned Judge did not give reasons for holding that the document which was invalid as a mortgage on account of want of jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar who registered the document was a valid document for purposes of limitation, yet his opinion is entitled to great weight, and it is in consonance with reason. The Registration Act does not prohibit the use of a document as a registered one if the provisions of section 28 of the Act are contravened. If a document is otherwise properly registered there can be no objection to the use of it as a registered one. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff document is a registered document so far as the personal covenant contained in it is concerned and, therefore, Art. 116, Limitation Act, applies to the case. The Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the suit is not barred by limitation. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff did not sue in the first instance on the personal covenant alone. He based his suit on the footing of a valid mortgage and prayed for a mortgage decree. In the circumstances, the rate of interest allowed to him by the lower Appellate Court is fair, and there is no reason to interfere with the discretion of the lower Appellate Court. The Memorandum of Objections is dismissed with costs.

Appeals against the decrees of the Calcutta High Court, dated May 26, 1919, modifying those of the Subordinate Judge, Hoogly, dated February 28, 1917, which had affirmed the decrees of the Munsif, dated September 30, 1915.

Mr. Beyram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Wallach, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These consolidated appeals arise out of two suits brought by the plaintiff, a putnidar under the Burdwan Estate, to recover rent from the defendants in respect of three dar-putni taluks they held under him. The Burdwan Raj contains a large number of putni tenures, and subinfeudation is recognised and largely given effect to in that Estate. Not only are putnidars entitled to grant sub-tenures called dar-putnis, but the dar-putnidar on his side can grant subordinate-tenures under himself which bears a designation of se-putni. The plaintiff's case is that the fifteen defendants whom he sued for the dar-putni rents of the three dar-putni taluks were all jointly interested in the under-tenures. The defendants, other than defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, contended that although, originally, they held a share in the dar-putni tenure, they had, on the 25th August 1906, conveyed their 12-annas interest to one Ramtarak Bhattacharjee as the benamidar of the defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 and that two years later, viz., in June 1908, Ramtarak had, by a registered document, renounced all interest in the dar-putni in favour of the defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 acknowledging that they were the real purchasers and that he was only their furzidar. The defendants, other than Nos. 3, 14 and 15, accordingly urged that they were not liable for the rent of the under-tenure and were wrongly sued.

It appears that after the execution of the deed of sale in 1906, the plaintiffs have instituted against these several defendants, including defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, suits for rent in which the defendants, other than defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, denied their liability on the ground that they had parted with their interest in favour of their co-defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, and that in those suits the Court before whom the question came for trial had held that the contending defendants had failed to establish that the transaction was bona fide and not a mere sham; and had declared that, notwithstanding the transaction of 1906, the plaintiff was entitled to rent from all the defendants, and had decreed his claim accordingly. There were further suits between the parties; the same contentions were raised by the defendants, other than defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15; but the defence was disallowed on the ground that the question relating to their liability was res judicata. The defendants, other than the defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15; thereupon, on the 6th July 1914, executed a fresh document in favour of their co-defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15, by which they purported to confirm the transaction of 1906 and release in the latter's favour whatever right and title they possessed in their 12-annas share of the dar-putni.

The present suits are brought for rents partly due for a period prior to July 1914; and partly for a period thereafter. The Munsif before whom the cases came for trial held that the rent for the period anterior to the execution of the last document, viz., the release of 1914, came within the terms of the previous decisions and that, consequently, the matter was res judicata; but with regard to the period after the execution of the document of the 6th July 1914 he held that the transfer by the contending defendants to their co-defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 was valid, and that, therefore, they were entitled to be absolved from liability for all subsequent rent. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim for the rent of this later period against defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 alone.

From this part of the Munsif's decree, the plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Hoogly, who, on the 28th February 1917, dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree of the Munsif.

He held that the point in controversy was concluded by the decision in the case of Hamenādra Nath Mukerji v. Kumar Nath Roy (1) that the deed which the contending defendants had executed ratifying the previous transaction of sale was not only a "disclaimer of any subsisting right or interest of the executants, but also purported to vest whatever right or interest they might, by reason of the decisions of Courts in the previous rent suits, be said to have had in the properties covered thereby, in the defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 as from the date of its execution." He held, further, in respect of the contention, that there was no consideration for this last document, that it did not concern the plaintiff, whether a consideration passed or not between the two parties to the transaction, that was a matter between them and them alone, and that the plaintiff himself had ample security in the dar-pulni tenures. He further held that the defendants Nos. 3, 14 and 15 were in possession of the property. He accordingly, as already stated, dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. The plaintiff not content with this decision, appealed to the High Court of Calcutta, which reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and decreed the plaintiff's claim as against all the defendants.

From these decrees of the High Court in the two suits, the contending defendants have appealed to this Board. A preliminary objection has been taken as to the competency of the appeal, on the ground, firstly, that the subject-matter is below the appealable value; and, secondly, that the certificate granted by the High Court is not sufficient. On both points, in their Lordships' opinion, the objection fails. The subject-matter in dispute relates to a recurring liability and is in respect of a property considerably above the appealable value. The certificate in the circumstances is quite in order.

The reasons upon which the learned Judges of the High Court have based their judgment are somewhat involved, but closely examined they amount to this: that as it had been held in the previous suits, that there was no consideration and as there could be no transfer without the proof of consideration, the transaction of July 1914 is affected by the previous decisions, and the plaintiff was entitled to go on suing the defendants as he had done heretofore. There are certain passages in the judgment which inclined their Lordships to think the learned Judges did not clearly apprehend the legal position of the parties in relation to the provisions of section 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They say in one place:—

"It cannot be disputed that if the title is perfected by a proper deed and for consideration the former decisions cannot operate as res judicata," and then go on to say:—"But there is no consideration apart from the consideration of the previous kobala, and the question of consideration under the kobala is res judicata."

In the case of Kristo Bulluv Ghose v. Kristo Lal Singh (2) a transfer of a permanent tenure, by a registered document was held to be complete under section 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as soon as the document was registered, and the same view was expressed in the case of Hemendra Nath Mukerji v. Kumar Nath Roy (1), already referred to. Their Lordships consider that the present controversy is covered by the latter decision.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decrees of the High Court should be set aside and the order of the Subordinate Judge restored. The appellants will be entitled to their costs here and in the High Court.

And their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty accordingly.

Order accordingly.

A Hindu widow, who claimed the widow's estate in certain property which she alleged belonged to her husband, was offered maintenance only on the ground that the property belonged to the joint family. A compromise was arrived at by which she was given a restricted life-interest without power of alienation and the joint family was to have the reversion. A decree-holder against the widow urged that the restriction against alienation was void, and in the alternative that the interest of the widow as it was could be attached in execution:

Held, (1) that the compromise was a family arrangement under which the widow was to remain in the personal enjoyment of certain lands for the term of her life, and that it did not amount to a "transfer of property" within the meaning of section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act to attract the provisions of that section as to restraints on alienation; [p. 198, col. 2.]

(2) that the interest of the widow as it was was not liable to attachment, as the restriction on alienation prevented the widow from having a "disposing power" within the meaning of section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 196, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—The question on this first appeal is, whether the interest of Irawa, a Hindu widow, under the agreement, Exhibit 28, can be attached in execution of the decree against her and others in this suit. The learned Judge, following the decision of Sir Charles Sargent and Mr. Justice Nanabhai in Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (1), has held it cannot be attached. The appellants seek to distinguish that decision because it was before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation in this Presidency. Alternatively, they say it was wrong.

(1) 10 B. 342; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 615.

Now, section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code states what property is liable to attachment or sale in execution, viz., "lands .. and, save as hereinafter mentioned, all other saleable property, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of, which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. . . . Provided that the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale, namely, . . . (n) a right to future maintenance."

In Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (1) which was also the case of a Hindu widow, it was held in effect that the restriction on alienation contained in the document of compromise then under consideration prevented her having a disposing power, and that consequently her interest could not be attached. It was, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether her interest under that document amounted to a "right to future maintenance" within the meaning of sub-section (n).

In the present document of compromise, Exhibit 28, the restriction on alienation is equally, if not more, emphatic than in Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (1). It runs:

"I have taken for myself the property for the period of my life time, I alone shall pay juti . . . and I shall go on making vahitwat. I shall not sell or mortgage or give it on self reducing mortgage or give it as present or in any manner give it into the possession of others. If I do so, it will not be valid. . . . After my death, the said minor alone is owner of the said property."

In my judgment, this restriction on alienation prevents the judgment-debtor from having a "disposing power" within the meaning of section 60, and, consequently, if that restriction is valid, the property cannot be attached.

Stopping there, therefore, I am of opinion that the learned Judge was right in following Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (1). I may add that this decision was followed in Munisapthi Naidu v. Ammani Ammal (2) where by a slip the word "not" has been omitted from the head-note.

Turning next to the Transfer of Property Act, the appellant contends that under section 10 in Chapter II the above restriction on alienation is invalid. The respondent relies on section 6 (d) which enacts that "an interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally cannot be transferred by him." He also relies on section 2 (d) which provides that "nothing in the second Chapter shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu...law."

It is stated in Shepherd and Brown's Commentary (7th Edition) on the Transfer of Property Act, at page 42:

"It may in some instances be difficult to mark the distinctions between holdings to which this paragraph [section 6 (d)] may apply and cases falling under section 10, in which it is attempted to fetter the transferee's power of alienation. A right to future maintenance cannot be attached in execution of a decree. And it seems clear that such a right enjoyed by a Hindu widow cannot be made the subject of a sale or other transfer by her, since the right exists for her personal benefit only. It may be doubted even whether she can effectually transfer her interest in property allotted to her for maintenance."

In my opinion, it is clear that section 6 (d) recognises that an interest in property may be validly created which is restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally. The Act says the owner cannot transfer such an interest; but if the restriction was invalid, it would follow that he would be able to do so. Accordingly, in considering section 10, one has to see that it clearly applies to any particular document. Have we, then, in the present case any property "transferred subject to a condition or limitation absolutely restraining the transferee... from disposing of her interest?" Section 5 defines "transfer of property" as meaning "an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons, or to himself and one or more other living persons; and 'to transfer property' is to perform such act."

Now, in the present case, one must bear in mind the circumstances under which Exhibit 28 came into operation. The widow was claiming a Hindu widow's estate in all the lands on the allegation of a separation of interest. The minor, on the other hand, claimed that she was only entitled to maintenance because the lands had remained joint. The compromise arrived at was that the widow was to have a restricted life-interest in certain lands, and the minor was to take the rest of the lands and the reversion in the former lands. Prima facie, therefore, it would seem quite natural to restrict the widow's power of alienation and so prevent the possession or management passing out of the family.

But where do we find in this document a transfer from A to B? What the widow says is that she has taken for herself the suit property for the period of her life time; and the subsequent covenants by her make it clear that all she is intended to have is an interest in the property restricted in its enjoyment to her self personally. But that is the very type of interest referred to in section 6 (d). The deed does not expressly purport to transfer or convey anything. Nor does it decide the original point in dispute. She is to have the lands for a certain limited interest. This interest is less than that of a Hindu widow's estate which she claimed, but it is more than the bare right to maintenance which was all the minor was prepared to allow her. In my opinion, therefore, there was no such "transfer" here as is mentioned in section 10.

Nor is this any fanciful distinction. In English Law, for instance, there is a clear distinction drawn between an absolute gift followed by an attempted restriction on alienation and a gift to a man of an interest determinable on alienation. The distinctions between these two classes of cases are set out in Wace on Bankruptcy, pages 182 and 183, the latter class of interest being a valid one. The learned author proceeds at page 183:

"But a proviso for cesser on bankruptcy or alienation, without an express gift over, may be part of the original gift; and there are numerous decisions, chiefly on Wills, that a gift of real or personal estate to A. for life, with remainder over and a proviso that if A. should attempt to assign, etc., his life-interest should cease, is read as a limitation to A. during his life, or until he should attempt to assign; and upon that event over, and is valid accordingly."

BASANGOWDA VIRUPAXGOWDA v. IRGOWDATI KALLANGOWDA.

Similarly, in In re Detmold, Detmold v. Detmold (3), Mr. Justice North at page 588 said:—

"It is said that a gift over of a man's own property in the event of his bankruptcy is void, and no doubt that is so. But it has been held that a gift over in the event of a voluntary assignment by him is valid. This was established by Brooke v. Pearson (4) and Knight v. Browne (5) and I think the principle of those decisions applies to an involuntary alienation by operation of law in favour of a particular creditor."

Or, again, in the Transfer of Property Act itself we find in sections 12 and 31 instances of invalid and valid limitations on a transfer of a particular interest. I only quote these instances to show that section 10 cannot be taken merely by itself, but must be construed strictly, and that it must not be used to defeat well-recognised provisions. In the present case I am dealing with a Hindu widow, and it seems to me that the restrictions placed upon her powers in the present case were very natural ones.

In Kuldip Singh v. Khetrani Koer (6) there was a compromise of dispute between a Hindu widow and other members of the joint family. Under the compromise she was given possession for her life on account of maintenance of her husband's share in the property, and then followed a clause which I construe as a restriction on alienation. It provided that if the widow took or executed any sort of a document, it would be null and void. It further provided that both parties might execute a document, but any document not consented to by both parties should be null and void. Subsequently, the lady alone executed a lease for eleven years, and it was claimed that the execution of that lease was a breach of the covenant. The Court of first instance held that the covenant was invalid, but on appeal this decision was set aside, and

"We are unable to follow the reasoning upon which he (the Judge) comes to that conclusion. Admittedly, there is nothing in any Statute Law which renders such a provision inoperative. Sections 10 and 15 of the Transfer of Property Act have no application here; and we are unable to see any principle underlying those sections which can be applied to the present case, or that there was any sort of absence of equity in an arrangement of this kind. This was a settlement of a dispute, and effect should be given, as far as possible, to every portion of it. It is not at all an unreasonable provision that reversioners giving up their claim and allowing a Hindu widow to remain in possession of their property should wish to retain supervision over it and to prevent any acts on her part which might cause injury to their reversionary rights. A provision of this kind is not only not contrary to law, but is one which might reasonably be made in common prudence by reversioners. There being admittedly nothing in law to show that this covenant is illegal, effect must be given to it."

It was contended before us that the covenant in that case did not amount to a restriction on alienation, but, in my opinion, that argument is erroneous.

The distinction between a compromise and an alienation or transfer is further exemplified by Lord Moulton in Hiran Bibi v. Sohan Bibi (7), to which my learned brother has drawn my attention.

In the result, therefore, I am of opinion that Exhibit 28 was a compromise under which the widow was to remain in the personal enjoyment of certain lands for the term of her life, and that it did not amount to a "transfer of property" within the meaning of section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In that view of the case, it is unnecessary for me to consider whether the compromise is not also protected by section 2 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that nothing in the second Chapter of the Act is to be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu Law. Nor need I consider whether the document is merely a right to future maintenance within the meaning of section 60 (n) of the Civil Procedure Code or whether, as indicated in Govinda Pillay v. Meenatchi Achi (8), what the widow acquired was a right not to maintenance but to certain property or rather the usufruct of that property. In this latter case the property attached consisted of standing crops only and not of an interest in future as well as present income as in the present case. So, too, Sunder Bibi v. Rajinder Narain Singh (9) depends on the effect of section 60 (n).

Another authority cited to us is Gulab Kuar v. Bansidhar (10) where Mr. Justice Knox held that the interest of a widow in certain lands assigned to her in lieu of her maintenance allowance could not be attached. But on appeal in Bansidhar v. Gulab Kuar (11) the point was left open (see page 449), as it was held that no appeal lay.

In my judgment, therefore, on the true construction of the particular document we have to deal with, viz., Exhibit 28, there is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act or otherwise which invalidates the restriction on alienation. Consequently, in my opinion, the decision of the learned Judge was right and this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Fawcett, J.—In this appeal two points have been urged:—

(1) That defendant No. 2 had a power of disposal over the usufructuary interest of the lands, within the meaning of section 60, Civil Procedure Code, and that Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (1) does not apply, or, in any case, was wrongly decided;

(2) that the case does not fall under clause (n) of section 60, viz., a right to future maintenance.

As to (1) it is urged that the restrictions against alienation in Exhibit 28 are void under section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that this section applies (notwithstanding the last paragraph of section 2 of the Act) because there is no rule of Hindu Law against a widow alienating her life interest, as is indeed recognised by Sargent, C. J., in Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (1) where he says a Hindu widow's estate has long been held to be transferable.

In my opinion, the answer to this is, that Exhibit 28 is not a 'transfer' of property as defined in section 5 of the Act, so as to fall under section 10, but is a compromise or family arrangement to which the Courts should give effect, notwithstanding that a party may thereunder receive a less interest than he or she would ordinarily have under Hindu Law.

The basis of defendant No. 2's title under Exhibit 28 is not a conveyance by a person having an admittedly good title to convey, but a compromise of conflicting claims. The distinction is pointed out by Lord Moulton in Hiran Bibi v. Sohan Bibi (7) where the compromise was held not to be an alienation but a family settlement, in which each party took a share of the family property by virtue of independent title which was to that extent and by way of compromise admitted by the other parties.

As instances where the Privy Council have recognised the validity of such compromises, in spite of their deviating from the strict rights of the parties, I may refer to Khumni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (12), where the High Court wrongly held there was an alienation; Lekhraj Kuntear v. Harpal Singh (13), where there was a change of the impartible character of the estate; Brijraj Singh v. Sheodan Singh (14), where the compromise was upheld though there was an unequal partition among three sons; and Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal (15) where the compromise was upheld, though the last male owner deprived himself of his right to claim as a reversioner against a Hindu widow.

The Courts lean in favour of such family arrangements [Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XIV, Art. 1230, page 546; Chabildas v. Ramdas (16) and Ramdas v. Chabildas (17)]. As long ago as 1869, this Court acted on the same principle: see Abubekar v. Maibibi (18).

Therefore, I agree with my learned brother that section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to the case: cf. Kuldip Singh v. Khelrani Koer (6).

The settlement was a reasonable one. The minor had reversionary rights under Exhibit 28, and it was proper to restrict the widow from alienating or parting with possession, which might entail litigation after her death. Nor has the widow herself objected to this restriction. On the contrary, she relies on it in her opposition to the Darkhast.

I think, therefore, the lower Court rightly held that defendant No. 2 had no power of disposal over the usufructuary interest of the lands. At most, all that she can dispose of is actual usufruct in hand (e.g., a standing crop), and she has no power to dispose of future usufruct, which would, in effect, be a disposal of the corpus of the property. Consequently, she has no disposing power over the lands sought to be attached, or the future profits thereof which it is impliedly sought to attach by the attachment of the lands.

I think also that the reasoning in the penultimate paragraph of the judgment in Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh (1) applies exactly to this case, and should be followed. That case was also one of a compromise.

It is unnecessary to go into the question whether the interest sought to be attached is 'a right to future maintenance' within the meaning of section 60 (n).

I concur, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), s. 3 (2), (3)—Town—Rural area included within Municipality, whether town—Presumption—Bhanamari village, whether part of Peshawar Town.

An administrative act, including a rural area within the limits of a Municipality does not necessarily operate to destroy the pre-existing character of the area and such administrative action is not in itself sufficient to make the area so included a sub-division of a town for the purposes of pre-emption. [p. 201, col. 2.]

At the same time, the inclusion of a rural area within the Municipal limits of a town is strong evidence of the urban character of that area. [p. 201, col. 2.]

Any portion of an agricultural village may lose its character as such and become, by the force of circumstances, a suburb of a town, and a suburb of this nature is to be regarded as a sub-division of a town for purposes of pre-emption. [p. 201, col. 2.]

Mr. Aurangzeb Khan, for the Respondent.

SHER ALI V. KALANDAR KHAN.

JUDGMENT.—This suit is one for pre-emption of a house in Bhanamari. The question which I have taken up on the revisional side is an important question of law or custom within the meaning of section 84 (1) (b) of the North-West Frontier Province Law and Justice Regulation is whether a house in Bhanamari is urban immoveable property within the meaning of section 3 (3) of Act II of 1905 or village immoveable property within the meaning of section 3 (2) of the same, or, in other words whether Bhanamari is part of a town or is a village. It has been held by the Divisional Court that Bhanamari is a sub-division of the town of Peshawar.

Under sub-section (3) of section 3 of both the Pre-emption Acts of 1905 and 1913 (the former of which only is in force in the North-West Frontier Province) a specified place shall be deemed a town (a) if so declared by the Local Government by notification in the Official Gazette or (b) if so found by the Courts. No places have been notified as towns for the purposes of the Pre-emption Act by the Local Government of the North-West Frontier Province. We have to see, therefore, whether Bhanamari has already been found to be a town by the Courts of this Province or if there is evidence in the present case for a finding of this nature. There is already a ruling in existence of the Chief Court of the Punjab relating to Bhanamari in the case of Ghulam Mohd. v. Mohamad Din decided on the 12th of June 1896. At the time when that suit was decided pre-emption was governed by the Punjab Laws Act. Section 11 of that Act laid down that the right of pre-emption shall not be presumed to exist in any town or city or in any sub-division thereof but may be shown to exist therein. Section 12 of the same Act laid down that the right of pre-emption in a village belongs to certain categories of persons in the absence of a custom to the contrary. The onus of proving that pre-emption existed in a town lay upon the person alleging it. In the case dealt with by the Chief Court the question as to whether pre-emption existed in Bhanamari in respect of a serai was put in issue. When the question came before the Chief Court on the 13th of December 1894 and when a remand was ordered for further inquiry the learned Judge remarked, "The question is clearly one having reference to the merits of the case. By section 11 of the Punjab Laws Act, IV of 1872, the claimant for pre-emption of property situated in a town has to prove the existence of the right and to show by what persons and under what circumstances it is exercisable by local custom." In other words, it was clearly held, and this position was maintained throughout the judgment, that Bhanamari was a town for the purposes of pre-emption. If it was a village and not a town section 12 and not section 11 of the Punjab Laws Act would have been applicable. The finding in that case amounts, in my opinion, to a clear declaration that Bhanamari was a town and that pre-emption in it was governed by the rules relating to pre-emption in towns.

It is open, however, to parties in the present case to show that Bhanamari should, nevertheless, be found to be a village for the purposes of pre-emption by the present Court. At the same time, the onus will lie very heavily upon the person who asserts that Bhanamari is a village for the purposes of pre-emption. I am unable to see that this onus has been in any way discharged. Bhanamari has been included within the limits of the Municipality of Peshawar. It is no doubt true that an administrative act including an area within the limits of a Municipality does not necessarily operate to destroy the pre-existing character of the area and that such an administrative action is not in itself sufficient to make the area so included a sub-division of a town for the purposes of pre-emption. At the same time the inclusion of an area in Municipal limits is strong evidence of the urban character of that area. There are many rulings of the Chief Court of the Punjab to the effect that any portion of an agricultural village may lose its character as such and become, by the force of circumstances, a suburb of a town, and that a suburb of this nature is to be regarded as a sub-division of a town. Abdulla v. Punnu Ram (1), Umar Bakhsh v. Abdul Karim (2) and Allah Ditta

v. Muhammad Nazir (3) are authorities for this view. It may be said that the present case is peculiar in that Bhanamari is not an outgrowth of Peshawar City but undoubtedly had in the first instance, an independent existence as a purely agricultural settlement. It was originally founded as an ordinary agricultural village by settlers of the Orakzai tribe, the main part of which is domiciled across the administrative border. There is also, however, not the least doubt that so far as regards the site occupied by its buildings Bhanamari has lost its character in this respect and that it is in actual fact a suburb of Peshawar City. It is shown that it contains at least one industrial factory. It has been classed, though comparatively recently, for the purposes of appointment of members of the Municipal Committee as a sub-division of the City returning special members of its own. The learned Counsel for the petitioner in the present case has pointed to the fact that the Revenue Records of the Settlement of 1870 and of 1895 record in Bhanamari the ordinary customs prevalent in agricultural villages, that it is assessed to revenue and that it has two Lambardars responsible for the collection of revenue. This argument does not appear to me very material. It is perfectly easy to conceive that the agricultural land of Bhanamari may still be village agricultural land and there is nothing incompatible with the management of such land on the system in force in other agricultural villages with the recognition of the Bhanamari buildings as a portion of Peshawar City. Indeed, the definition given in the Acts of urban immovable property in any case excludes agricultural land. Further, I observe that both in the Records of 1870 and of 1895 Settlement it was noted that the land owners of Bhanamari were living in various quarters of Peshawar City. The connection, therefore, between the residential portion of Bhanamari and the main City of Peshawar was extremely close as far back as 1870. It lies right up against the walls of the original City of Peshawar. There is no agricultural land intervening between it and the main City. It is separated only by a main road and that portion of it which fronts the road is indistinguishable in character from the bazars and commercial buildings found in Peshawar City itself. There appear to me, therefore, overwhelming grounds for holding that Bhanamari has become a portion of the town of Peshawar exactly in the same manner as suburbs of large Cities have grown up in cases dealt with by the Chief Court of the Punjab and in which such suburbs have been held to be sub-divisions of the town itself.

I have already mentioned that we have in existence a finding of the Chief Court of the Punjab to the effect that the inhabited site of Bhanamari is a town. I can see nothing to rebut the presumption raised by this ruling and I consider that, apart from it, there is clear evidence to show that Bhanamari is, except as regards its agricultural land, a portion and a sub-division of the town of Peshawar. I concur, therefore, with the finding of the Divisional Court and dismiss this application for revision with costs.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree, dated the 10th October 1919, of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge at Ellore, in Original Suit No. 6 of 1919 (Original Suit No. 58 of 1918 on the file of the Sub-Court, Ellore.)

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit concerned in this Civil Revision Petition was instituted by a reversioner claiming the rights as an adopted son to have his title declared to certain properties in Schedules A, B and C and to recover possession of them from the person to whom the last male owner's wife and mother had alienated them. During the trial of the suit there were two references to arbitration under Schedule II, para. 1, Civil Procedure Code. The first was on 22nd August 1919 by plaintiff and defendants Nos. 6 to 8 who were interested in B Schedule properties. The second reference was on 29th August 1919 by plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 who were interested in A Schedule properties.

It is now urged as the sole ground of revision by defendants Nos. 6 to 8 that the entire reference to arbitration and the arbitrator's award are invalid because defendants Nos. 2 and 5 did not join in the reference. Second defendant is the brother of first defendant and 5th defendant is the undivided son of 2nd defendant. They had no interest in the B Schedule properties over which the plaintiff and these petitioners were disputing. But there was a common issue between the plaintiff and all the defendants as to plaintiff's adoption.

Under section 506 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 it was necessary that all parties to a suit should join in a reference to arbitration. In Pitam Mal v. Sadiq Ali (1) "all the parties to a suit" was interpreted as meaning all the parties interested, and in the present Code it was so expressed.

Here the defendants Nos. 2 and 5 were ex parte throughout and were exonerated on 1st September, that is, seven days before the arbitrator submitted his award. From the mere fact that they did not put in an appearance and the case proceeded ex parte so far as they were concerned, it cannot be assumed that they were not interested parties [vide Polita Pavana Panda v. Narasinga Panda (2) and Laduram-Nathmull v. Nandalal Karuri (3)]. It is more material that defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 in their written statement asserted that defendants Nos. 2 and 5 had no interest in the A Schedule properties and it has never been suggested that they had an interest in the B Schedule properties. After they were exonerated they had no further interest in the suit, even if they had an interest before. In Haswa v. Mahbub (4) it was held by the Allahabad High Court that it was essential that all parties who were interested at the time of the reference to arbitration should join and that otherwise the reference and the award would be invalid. There is no finding whether the defendants Nos. 2 and 5 were interested at the time of either of the two references and if necessary I should call for a finding from the Subordinate Judge on this point. But I hold that, in any case, it is not open to the defendants Nos. 6 to 8 to ask this Court to proceed under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. They did not raise this objection in their memo. of objections to the award presented in the lower Court, and they have failed to show that defendants Nos. 2 and 5 are necessary parties to the suit between the plaintiff and themselves. I, therefore, dismiss the Civil Revision Petition with costs.

No. 47 of 1921.Mr. G. N. Thakur (with him Mr. G. P.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for possession of the suit property against the defendants after cancellation of the alienations made with respect to the same by the defendant No. 1's father, Paramaya bin Subhaya Hegde, during her minority. The property belonged to one Shivram Hegde who died leaving a widow, defendant No. 1, and no son. On the 22nd August 1919 the widow adopted the plaintiff. The first question raised in the suit was, whether the adoption had, as a matter of fact, taken place.
That had been found against the plaintiff but the lower Court held the adoption had taken place. Then it was alleged that the adoption of the plaintiff was illegal as he was the only son, and so could not be given in adoption by a widow, his father at that time being dead. However, it was decided in Krishna v. Paramshri (1) that a Hindu widow can make a valid gift of her only son in adoption. Mr. Justice Ranade giving judgment said: "Now that the recent decisions have established the fact that the gift of an only son is not blamable, the implied defect ceases to be operative, and no restriction can be placed on the widow's power to make a valid gift of an only son."

The next question is, of what property should possession have been decreed to the plaintiff. The Trial Court held on issue 7(b) that certain properties only out of those claimed belonged to the estate of Shivram Hegde. The Appellate Court directed that the plaintiff should recover from defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 the lands in suit without considering whether the decision of the Trial Court was erroneous. The respondent, however, does not dispute the finding of the Trial Court on issue 7(b). Therefore, the decretal order must make it clear that it is only the lands found to have belonged to Shivram Hegde by the Trial Court according to its finding on issue 7(b) which could be recovered from defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, and that the plaintiff is entitled to possession of all lands in suit except S. Nos. 46 and 247 and such portions of S. Nos. 243, 244, 245, and 249 as have been held by the Subordinate Judge not to belong to the deceased Shivram-gauda.

The appellants objected to the order that mesne profits should be recovered from the date of the adoption until delivery of possession. Strictly speaking, as soon as the plaintiff was adopted, all the alienations of the estate made by the widow would become ineffective against him unless it could be shown that they were made for necessity. It seems that in the Trial Court it was suggested that there was legal necessity for these alienations, but the Judge has found that there is no satisfactory evidence to show that the alienations were for justifying legal necessity. We take that as meaning that there was really no evidence at all of necessity. If that were not so, then, as the Appellate Judge has not considered the question of necessity, it might have been necessary to remand the case to that Court for decision of that question of fact. We do not believe ourselves that there was any evidence of necessity, otherwise it would have been considered by the Trial Court, and the fact that the Appellate Court makes no mention of the question of necessity would show that the question was never really contested before the District Judge. But it might have been said that the lease was good until the adopted son chose to contest it. He might be willing to take advantage of the lease and receive rent under it. It would only be when he decided to contest the lease that the defendants would be liable to pay mesne profits in addition to the rent. Therefore, the inquiry as to mesne profits must commence from the date of the suit and not from the date of the adoption.

As the appellants were entitled to come to Court owing to the fact that the District Judge had awarded to the plaintiff all the lands in suit, and they ought to have succeeded to a small extent with regard to mesne profits, each party should bear his own costs of the appeal. The decree will be amended in accordance with the judgment.

The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Where proposal and acceptance are made by means of letters, the contract must be deemed to have been made at the place where the letter of acceptance is posted.

Defendants, carrying on business at Calcutta, sold goods to plaintiffs who carried on business at Amritsar. They consigned the goods to themselves at Amritsar, and endorsed the Railway receipt in favour of a Bank at Amritsar, instructing the latter to realise the price of the goods from the plaintiffs before handing over the Railway receipt to them and endorsing it in their favour. Plaintiffs sued defendants to recover damages for non-delivery of some of the goods and the suit was instituted at Amritsar. It was found that the defendants had a travelling agent at Amritsar who secured orders for them and forwarded them to the Head Office at Calcutta. He had, however, no power to enter into any contracts or to receive any monies on behalf of the defendants.

Held, (1) that it could not be said that the defendants carried on business at Amritsar within the meaning of section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 206, col. 1.]

(2) that inasmuch as the goods had to be delivered and paid for at Amritsar the Amritsar Courts had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. [p. 206, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act IV of 1919, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 3rd October 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, dated the 23rd July 1921.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of Rs. 1,000 damages for the non-delivery of certain goods and was instituted in the Court of the Munsif at Amritsar. The defendants resided and carried on business at Calcutta and a preliminary objection was raised on their behalf that the Amritsar Courts had no jurisdiction to try and hear the suit. Both the Courts below have concurrently found that the Amritsar Courts had no jurisdiction and have returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiffs have come up on revision to this Court and the first contention raised by Mr. Fakir Chand on their behalf is that the contract was made at Amritsar and that, therefore, the cause of action arose at that place. I am unable to agree with this contention. From the evidence it is clear that the offer was made by means of a letter sent by the plaintiffs from Amritsar to Calcutta. The acceptance was also made at Calcutta by means of a telegram.

KALIANASUNDARAM PILLAI v. KARUPPA MUPPANAR.

sent from that place to Amritsar and it is clear, in these circumstances, that the contract was made at Calcutta and not at Amritsar. It has been repeatedly held that when the proposal and acceptance are made by means of letters the contract must be deemed to have been made at the place where the letter of acceptance is posted.

Next, it is contended that the defendants have a branch office at Amritsar and that, therefore, they should be deemed to be carrying on business at Amritsar within the meaning of section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code. From the evidence of Devi Shankar, (P. W. No. 3), however, it is clear that the defendants have got no permanent office at Amritsar, but that there is only a travelling agent residing at that place who secures orders for the defendants and forwards them to the Head Office at Calcutta. He has no power to enter into any contracts or to receive any monies on behalf of the defendants. In these circumstances, it is clear that the defendants cannot be said to be carrying on business at Amritsar within the meaning of section 20, Civil Procedure Code.

Lastly, it is contended that the goods were to be delivered and paid for at Amritsar and that, consequently, the cause of action arose, at least in part if not wholly, at that place. I think there is force in this contention. From the evidence, it appears that the method of defendants doing business was that they would consign the goods to themselves and not to the customers. They would endorse the Railway receipt in favour of some Bank at Amritsar and not in favour of the customers and they would instruct the Bank to realise the price from the customers at Amritsar before handing to them the Railway receipt and endorsing in their favour. There is no doubt that the customers had to pay the freight and the Bank charges for collection of the money but, as pointed out in Suraj Bhan v. Punjab Cotton Press Co., Ltd. (1), the customers could have no control over the goods until they had paid the price at Amritsar and had thus obtained the Railway receipt, and endorsement in their favour and though the Railway would be deemed to take delivery at Calcutta on behalf of the customers of goods despatched from there and consigned to the customers, it is not easy to see how the Railway could take delivery on behalf of the customers of goods which were not consigned to the latter and not in any way under their control. I have no doubt that it must have been understood between the parties that the goods should be delivered and paid for at Amritsar. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Amritsar Courts had jurisdiction to try the case. I accept the revision and, setting aside the order of the Court below remand the case to the Court of first instance under O. XII, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for decision on the merits. No order as to costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 47, 49—Execution of deed of gift—Adoption of son—Registration subsequent to adoption, effect of.

The effect of sections 17, 47 and 49 of the Registration Act is that if a title under a deed is complete except for registration, no subsequent alienation of or dealing with the property by the vendor or donor, as the case may be, can defeat the title, which, on registration, becomes an absolute title dating from the date of the execution of the document. Nor does the subsequent birth or adoption of a child or death of the donor or vendor have any effect in defeating a title obtained under an instrument executed before the happening of these events but registered thereafter. Where a deed of gift was executed and handed over to the donee and the next day the donor adopted a son and thereafter the deed was registered:

Held, that the deed of gift was perfectly valid and the subsequent adoption did not affect its validity.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Ayling, in S. A. Nos. 112 and 113 of 1919 and printed as 62 Ind. Cas. 280, preferred against the decrees of the District Court, Tanjore, in A. S. Nos. 50 and 51 of 1918 respectively (O. S. Nos. 77 and 78 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam).

These Letters Patent Appeals came on for hearing on the 6th and 10th January 1922, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Before disposing of this appeal, we have decided to call upon the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam to submit a finding of the following issue:—

Was Exhibit A delivered to the trustees or any other before defendant's adoption?

The finding will be submitted in six weeks, and seven days will be allowed for objections. The parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been directed to submit a finding on the following issue:—

"Was Exhibit A delivered to the trustees or any other, before defendant's adoption?"

2. Fresh evidence was allowed to be adduced by either party as provided in the order of the High Court. The plaintiffs re-called and examined their first witness Manickam Pillai and the defendant examined two new witnesses Kamakshi Achi and Veeraperumal Padayachi and further re-called and examined his 2nd witness Ponnusami Pillai.

3. The original judgment of this Court shows that, although Exhibit A bears date the 9th September 1891 and the defendant's adoption admittedly took place on the 10th September 1891, it was set up and contended on behalf of the defendant that Exhibit

A was executed by the late Vaithilingam Pillai not on the 9th but only after the defendant was actually adopted by him. This contention will be found discussed and eventually negatived in paragraphs 12 to 14 of the said judgment. The conclusion arrived at by this Court was also upheld by the District Court on appeal (vide paragraph 6 of its appellate judgment) and must now be settled.

4. The plaintiffs' 1st witness, Manickam Pillai, who is apparently the only attestor of Exhibit A now alive, has sworn that after Exhibit A was executed and completed on the 9th, it was handed over to Chidambaram Pillai, one of the two trustees named therein, on behalf of himself and Palamalai Pillai, the other trustee, who is also said to have been present at that time. His evidence is supported by the recital therein that the possession of the properties conveyed thereby was given over to the trustees on that very day and there is not, in my opinion, sufficient ground to disbelieve it. The defendant's witnesses Nos. 2 and 16 have reiterated that only a very small portion of Exhibit A was written on the date borne by it and as by that time it became late in the evening Vaithilingam Pillai secured it (the incomplete document) in his box, which was produced by his wife, Kamakshi Achi, (who has now given evidence as the defendant's 15th witness), at his instance. But the latter part of their story must fall to the ground along with the former. Inconsistent statements have been made by them and by the other witnesses examined on behalf of the defendant at the original hearing, as to when Exhibit A was actually executed and completed, and this can only establish that their evidence is not reliable at all. And as regards the evidence of Kamakshi Achi who has now been called for the first time, it is hopelessly confused and unsatisfactory.

5. The endorsement of registration on Exhibit A shows that it was Vaithilingam Pillai who presented it to the Registering Officer, the Sub-Registrar, for registration and this fact is strongly relied on by the defendant's Vakil. I do not, however, attach much value to the above circumstance, seeing that the presentation for registration took place at the house of Vaithilingam Pillai and both Exhibit A and the deed of adoption executed by him, were presented at one and the same time. The plaintiffs' 1st witness, Manickam Pillai, has deposed that Chidambaram Pillai, Ramachandra Ayyar and he himself went to the Sub-Registrar and took him to the house of Vaithilingam Pillai for registering the said documents, and it was Chidambaram Pillai who placed Exhibit A in the hands of Vaithilingam Pillai for being presented to the Sub-Registrar along with the deed of adoption, and I see no reason to disbelieve his evidence.

6. I am on the whole satisfied that Exhibit A was delivered over to Chidambaram Pillai on behalf of himself and the other trustee on the 9th September 1891, i. e., the day previous to the adoption itself and the find accordingly.

These Letters Patent Appeals came on for final hearing after the return of the finding from the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar and S. Rangachariar, for the Appellants.—The finding is that the deed of gift was handed over to the donee on the day of execution. The adoption took place the next day and at once the rights of the adopted son intervened to prevent the deed from taking legal effect. There is no finding in the case that there was any agreement with the natural father by which the prior incomplete deed of gift was accepted on behalf of the adopted son. Without registration, the deed is incomplete. The son's right of survivorship under the Hindu Law cannot be defeated by the father by any act. But for registration, the deed would be invalid and the son's right of survivorship would have prevailed. The registration is not an act, under the circumstances, binding on the adopted son. The father's absolute powers of disposal prior to the adoption have been curtailed by the operation of the rules of Hindu Law on the adoption of the son. The decision in Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (1) merely states that where a donor died without presenting the document for registration, the donee could present it for registration without the consent of the legal representatives. In the present case the adoption affects the legal capacity and the powers of disposition of the donor to complete the document. The son's right of survivorship cannot be defeated by registration.

[Schwabe, C. J.—The principle of the decision in Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (1) is clearly against you. We are not prepared to reconsider that judgment. It is in consonance with correct principles.]

Messrs. Rangachariar and S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents, were not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—The facts of this case are that one Vaithilingam Pillai made a deed of gift of certain property on the 9th of September 1891, and it has been found as a fact—and that finding is accepted by the appellant—that that deed of gift was handed over to the donee on the day of execution. Next day the donor adopted a son, the present appellant. After the adoption the deed of gift was registered on the 15th of September 1891.

It is now contended that, as the adoption took place before the registration and on adoption the adoptee, according to Hindu Law, is in the same position as a child born to the adopter, his rights to this property had intervened and the gift is, therefore, void. Under the Indian Registration Act, 1908, (corresponding to Act III of 1877) section 47, "a registered document operates from the time from which it would have commenced to operate if no registration thereof had been required or made, and not from the time of its registration." Under section 49, "no document required by section 17 to be registered shall affect any immovable property unless it has been registered." The effect of these sections, in my judgment, is that, if a title is complete except for registration, no subsequent alienation or dealing with the property by the vendor or donor, as the case may be, can defeat the title which, on registration, becomes an absolute title dating from the date of the execution of the document. In this case, upon handing over the deed of gift to the donees, on the authorities, this deed became irrevocable, and upon the subsequent registration, the title dated back to the date of its execution. It is enough to say that there is a long line of authorities not altogether uniform but ending with Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (1), a decision of the Full Bench of this Court which has now established that the subsequent birth of a child, or the adoption of a child, or the death of the vendor or donor has no effect in defeating a title obtained under an instrument executed before the happening of these events, but registered thereafter. By that decision we are bound and I think it is right to add that I entirely agree with it and, in my judgment, these appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Coutts Trotter, J.—I am of the same opinion and only desire to add a word, because I had occasion in Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (1) to consider the present state of the case-law on this subject. My brother Seshagiri Ayyar and myself came to the conclusion that certain of the cases reported in the Madras series were contrary to the general trend of authority and incorrectly decided, and I pointed out in the reference that two well-known writers of text-books had expressed the opinion that some Madras cases—I may take Ramamirtha Ayyan v. Gopala Ayyan (2) as a type—were wrongly decided. Accordingly, in order to set doubts at rest, we sent the case up to a Full Bench asking this question: "Whether a deed of gift registered by the donee after the death of the donor without the consent of the legal representatives of the donor is valid?" The Full Bench in that case took the same view as the one which myself and my brother Seshagiri Ayyar had indicated, and decided that the registration was perfectly valid, even although the donor or his representatives did not consent to its registration; that the donee could effect registration, and that when that was done the title would date back to the date of the execution of the document. That seems to me to follow the plain words of the Statute, and I do not think that, after an authoritative ruling given by this Court so lately as 1917, we should depart from it. If the appellant wishes to show that that decision is wrong, I think he must seek to do so in the Privy Council.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice and have little to add. I think we are bound by the finding that the document was handed over to the trustees and by the decision of the Full Bench in Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (1) with which I agree.

It was not the intention of the Legislature to render the action of an occupancy tenant irrevocable once he had made an application under clause (2) of section 53 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, and he has as much right to refuse to carry on the proceedings as the landlord has to refuse to accept the valuation of the right of occupancy by the Revenue Officer. An occupancy tenant has a right to withdraw his offer made under section 53 (2) of the Punjab Tenancy Act up to such time as the landlord makes the payment contemplated by sub-section (5) of the section. Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 8th June 1915, one Wazira, an occupancy tenant, applied, under section 53 (2) of the Tenancy Act for the issue of a notice of sale as required by the said section. This notice was served on the landlord on the 4th July 1915, and on the 21st July 1915 the landlord, acting under clause (3) of section 53, expressed his intention to purchase the holding and asked the Revenue Officer to fix the price. In the course of the subsequent proceedings Wazira, on the 18th September 1915, expressed his unwillingness to sell his holding and thus withdrew from his application. Nevertheless, the Revenue Officer proceeded with the matter and on the 24th July 1916 fixed the price and directed the landlord to pay the same within two months. The money, it appears, was paid on the 23rd September 1916 to the Revenue Officer and possession was given to the landlord on the 6th March 1917. In October 1916 Wazira died and on the 31st October 1917 his nephews instituted a suit for possession of the occupancy holding as being the persons entitled to the same. The Courts below having decreed the plaintiffs' suit the defendant landlord has come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Zaffarullah Khan.

It has been contended before us that the suit was barred under section 76. (i) (e) and (f) and that no Court could take cognizance of any matter relating to applications under sections 53 and 54 of the Tenancy Act. In this view we are unable to concur as, in our opinion, the present suit does not attack either of the matters referred to in clauses (e) and (f) of sub-section (1) of section 70 of the Tenancy Act. The position really is that in answer to the suit for possession brought by the plaintiffs the defendant-appellant has set up a sale to him by Wazira under the provisions of section 53 of the Tenancy Act. It has been contended by Mr. Zaffarullah Khan that, under section 53, once an occupancy tenant governed by that section makes an application under clause (2) he has no further right or power to withdraw his application and he is bound to proceed with the sale of the occupancy tenancy. This view was negatived in Labhu v. Hamira (1), where it was held by the Financial Commissioner that the occupancy tenant had a locus penitentiae and that it was open to him to withdraw from the proceedings at any time prior to the completion of the purchase by the landlord as determined by section 53 (5) of the Tenancy Act. We have been asked to hold that this pronouncement of the Financial Commissioner is wrong and not warranted by the terms of section 53 of the Tenancy Act. It seems to us, however, that it was not the intention of the Legislature to render the action of a tenant irrevocable once he had made an application under clause (2) of section 53, and that a tenant has as much right to refuse to carry on the proceedings as the landlord has to refuse to accept the valuation of the right of occupancy by the Revenue Officer. It will be seen that, under sub-section (5) of section 53, the Revenue Officer after having decided on the value has to fix a date by which the landlord has to pay the ascertained price, but that the landlord is not compelled to pay that price and may resile from the position taken up by him under sub-clause (3). Similarly, we think that a proper construction of this section enables the tenant to withdraw his offer up to such time as the landlord makes the payment contemplated by sub-clause (5).

We, therefore, agree with the view taken by the Courts below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Step-in-aid of execution—Talana, payment of, whether step-in-aid.

The mere payment of talana in compliance with an order of the Court is not a step-in-aid of execution which would extend the period of limitation for the execution of a decree.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 19th May 1922, upholding that of the Munsif, Rae Bareilly, dated the 7th December 1921.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is whether the application for execution was barred by time. The last application for execution was made on the 19th July 1918 for the realization of the decretal money by the attachment of moveable property. A notice under O. XXI, r. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure was directed to be issued, and the 8th August 1918 was fixed for hearing. On that date the judgment-debtor did not appear. The Court thereupon passed an order that the service on the judgment-debtor should be taken to be sufficient and that a warrant of attachment should issue. The decree-holder was present in person and was asked to file the requisite talana which he did on the 8th August 1918. He filed the talana and made no application at the time. The Court below held that the mere filing of talana did not save limitation.

It is contended on behalf of the decree-holder that an oral application was made at the time and that in any case it should be presumed to have been made. But there is no reference in the order sheet to such an application having been made or otherwise and no presumption can be made in face of the fact that the talana was filed in pursuance of an order passed by the Court requiring the decree-holder to file the same.

NARINDRA NATH V. KISHEN LAL.

The payment of the talana was a compliance with that order and not an application to take a step-in-aid of execution which could extend the period of limitation.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed but as the respondents are not present no order is made as to the costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of this appeal, it being urged that it is time-barred. The order appealed against was passed on the 16th March 1920. The memorandum of appeal was filed in this Court on the 1st April 1920 together with an application asking that the matter be treated as urgent. As the copy of the order appealed against did not bear a Court-fee label the memorandum of appeal was returned by the office on the same day and was re-filed with the necessary Court-fee label affixed on the 7th April 1920, that is to say, on the twenty-second day from the date on which the order appealed against was pronounced. Section 169 of Act VI of 1882, Indian Companies Act, provides a period of three weeks within which not only has the appeal to be filed but notices of appeal have to be actually served on the opposite party. The section gives the Court power to extend this period and in recognition of this power a prayer for extension was made in a foot-note to the memorandum of appeal. The admitting Judge granted an extension of time for the service of notice subject to all just exceptions.

Dr. Narang for the respondent, Pandit Kishen Bai, contended that this power to extend should only be exercised on sufficient cause being shown, and that in the present case no such cause has been made out. It is perfectly clear that the appellant in this case was guilty of negligence in that he filed a memorandum of appeal together with documents improperly stamped. In Daulat Ram v. Woollen Mills Co. (1) it was held that appeals under the Indian Companies Act, 1882, ought to be filed with such promptitude as to render service of notice upon the respondent possible within the three weeks prescribed by section 169 of the Act, and that the Appellate Court will not extend the time for appealing unless the delay is caused either by the conduct of the respondent or by mistake of the officials of the Appellate Court. In the present case it has not been suggested that the respondent was in any way responsible for the delay in filing this appeal, nor can it be urged that the delay was due to any mistake made by an official of this Court. Daulat Ram v. Woollen Mills Co. (1), was followed by Chevis, J., in Hira Lal v. Himalaya Glass Works Co. (2), where it was held that the carelessness or ignorance of a Pleader is not a sufficient reason to extend the time fixed by section 169 of the Companies Act. Chevis, J., also pointed out that Courts should not show leniency in such matters without sufficient cause. In Ghisu Mal v. Porter (3) expression was given to the same view as that contained in Daulat Ram v. Woollen Mills Co. (1), and the same was the case in Ramanappa v. Official Liquidator, Bellary Brucepetta Stock and Loan Transacting Company (4).

In the present case the mistake is a bad one. Mr. Dharm Das Suri for the appellant has not suggested that either he, or the gentleman who filed the appeal, was ignorant of the necessity for stamping the copy of the order appealed against. It appears that from the 2nd to 5th April 1920 the Court was closed for the Easter holidays, but no reason has been shown why the appeal was not re-filed on the 6th April 1920 which does not appear to be a holiday. In these circumstances, the preliminary objection has force and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

NATESA CHETTIAR v. ANNAMALAI CHETTIAR.

Under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act, a person who has cultivated land without the consent of the landholder, becomes a tenant when the landholder chooses to acknowledge him to be so, either by suing for rent or by suing for ejectment, but until the landholder has exercised his option, such a person cannot be considered to be a tenant.

Sat Narain Prasad v. Ram Kumar, Sel. Dec. No. 3 of 1910, relied on.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 28th July of 1921.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailash Chandra Mital, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point raised in this appeal is, whether the defendant-appellant has acquired proprietary rights or occupancy rights and is consequently not liable to ejectment. The plaintiff sued for ejectment of the defendant under section 58 of the Tenancy Act, read with section 34 of the same Act. The pleas taken in defence were that the defendant had been in possession for more than twelve years and by such possession he had become either the owner of the plot or an occupancy tenant of the same and could not be ejected therefrom.

The two Courts below have concurrently found that the defendant had been in possession for more than 12 years without payment of rent but, acting under section 34 of the Tenancy Act, they have decreed the ejectment of the defendant as a non-occupancy tenant holding that the plaintiff chose to accept him as a tenant on the date when he brought the suit for ejectment. This view is supported by a ruling of the Board of Revenue in Sat Narain Prasad v. Ram Kumar (1). The opinion expressed by the Junior Member with which the Senior Member concurred is very clear on the point. He holds that, under section 34 of the Tenancy Act, a person who has cultivated land without the consent of the landholder becomes a tenant when the landholder chooses to acknowledge him to be so, either by suing for rent or by suing for ejectment. It is at the option of the landlord to treat such a person either as a trespasser and sue him in the Civil Courts or as a person liable to pay rent and sue him in the Revenue Courts, but until the landlord has exercised this option such a person cannot be considered to be a tenant. Agreeing with those remarks I hold that the suit has been rightly decreed. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Execution of decree—Assignment of decree by decree-holder—Transfer of decree for execution—Objection to executability of decree, whether maintainable—Provincial Insolvency Act (I.L.I. of 1907), ss. 16 (2) (b), 45 (2)—Execution of decree against insolvent—Leave of Court, whether essential.

Where a decree-holder assigns the decree and applies to the Court for the recognition of the assignment and for a transfer of the decree to another Court for execution, and the Court transmits the decree without adjudicating on its executability, the mere omission by the judgment-debtor to take objection to the assignment of the decree being recognised and to its transmission to another Court for execution, does not preclude him from raising in the Executing Court the question that the decree is not executable. [p. 210, col. 2.]

Section 45 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 gives a release to the insolvent at the time of his discharge, from debts entered in the schedule. But after adjudication and before discharge, section 16 (2) (b) of the Act absolutely prohibits all creditors, whether on the schedule or not, from taking execution proceedings against the person and property of the insolvent except with the leave of the Court. [p. 214, col. 2; p. 215, col. 1.]

(1) Sel. Dec. No. 3 of 1910.

from the order dated the 19th January 1922 and made in Execution Petition No. 592 of 1921 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Tiruvalur, in S. C. No. 11371 of 1914, on the file of the Court of Small Causes Madras.

FACTS.—A creditor who had obtained against the appellant, an insolvent, a money decree in the Presidency Small Cause Court, Madras, assigned it to the respondent. The latter applied to the Court for recognition of assignment and for transfer to Tiruvalur District Munsif's Court for execution. After notice to the insolvent who was ex parte, the decree was transmitted for execution. Execution was taken out in the Tiruvalur Court and the insolvent took the objection that since he had been adjudicated an insolvent, no execution lay against him. The District Munsif dismissed the application. The District Judge on appeal held the application was maintainable and remanded it to the First Court to restore it to its file and for disposal according to law. The debtor was the petitioner in insolvency and he did not include the creditor's name in the schedule filed by him.

Mr. N. S. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Appellant.—The order of the District Judge is clearly wrong. The petition was filed under the old Act and its provisions alone apply. Section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 is clear and express. Once an order of adjudication is made, no creditor can proceed against the insolvent. All creditors, scheduled and nonscheduled, are placed on the same footing. The creditor's remedy is only that provided in the Act, to prove his debt in insolvency proceedings or to proceed after leave of Court.

There is no question of constructive res judicata or estoppel in this case on account of appellant's failure to object to recognition of assignment and to transmission for execution. The question of executability was left open and was not decided at all. The order of the lower Court is wrong on both points.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar (with him Mr. N. C. Vijayaraghava Chariar), for the Respondent.—The respondent's name was not included in the schedule of creditors. The protection in section 16 is only against scheduled creditors. (See section 16 and section 24).

It is the duty of the insolvent to help in framing a schedule. Where he omits to include a creditor, he loses the benefit of the insolvency provision to that extent. The immunity from execution is a privilege which he can waive. His conduct here amounts to a clear waiver of the right if any under section 16 (2).

Section 45 (2) which deals with discharge refers only to scheduled creditors; the insolvent is not released from debts not entered in the schedule. Where there is no schedule framed or a creditor's name is omitted, the insolvency proceedings do not bar execution. See Des Raj v. Duni Chand, (1) and Fida Husain v. Collector of Shahjahanpur, (2).

Further, the prior order recognising transfer of the decree implies its executability. An application for transfer of decree is a step-in-aid of execution. Ramachandra Aiyar v. Subramania Chettiar (3). The insolvent by omitting to object to assignment and transmission has precluded himself from afterwards raising any question of executability of the decree. See Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (4).

JUDGMENT.—We do not agree with the opinion of the learned District Judge that the omission to take objection to the assignment of the decree being recognized and to its transmission to the Tiruvalur Court for execution, precluded the judgment-debtor from raising the question in the Executing Court that the decree was not then executable in the manner proposed by the decree-holder. The Small Cause Court at Madras did not adjudicate on the executability of the decree when it ordered it to be transmitted for execution.

The other distinction attempted to be made is between creditors who are on the schedule and those who are not.

At the time of an insolvent's discharge, section 45 (2) of Act III of 1907 gives a release to the insolvent from debts entered in the schedule. But after adjudication and before discharge, section 16 treats all creditors alike as to their remedy against the person and property of an insolvent during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings. This section in clause 2 (b) absolutely prohibits execution proceedings being taken against the person and property of adjudicated insolvents except with the leave of the Court, and that was the law in force at the time when the appellant was adjudicated insolvent; and under section 6 of the General Clauses Act, the introduction of Act V of 1920, which repealed Act III of 1907, could not take away his right.

The District Judge's order is set aside and the order of the District Munsif dismissing the execution application is restored with costs here and in the District Court.

Where there is delay in presenting an application for substitution of the representatives of a deceased party, due to the representatives being minors and to the fact that they had to obtain a Succession Certificate, there is sufficient reason to excuse the delay within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act, read with O. XXII, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 26th August 1922, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 2nd March 1922.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. N. Misra and K. P. Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an execution proceeding and the question for consideration is whether an application made by the representatives of the deceased decree-holder for the substitution of their names was barred by time. The decree-holder died during the pendency of the execution proceeding on the 21st October 1918. As his legal representatives did not appear to proceed with the execution, the Court struck off the execution proceeding on the 14th December 1918.

The decree-holder had died leaving the sons and a daughter, all of whom were and are still minors. The present application for the substitution of their names was made on the 19th December 1921, more than three years after the death of the original decree-holder and more than three years after the date on which the previous proceeding was struck off. The delay was due to the fact that the legal representatives were minors, who could not have obtained execution without obtaining a Succession Certificate under Act VII of 1889. This Succession Certificate was obtained on the 31st August 1920. There is sufficient reason to excuse the delay within the meaning of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, read with Order XXII, r. 9, Code of Civil Procedure and Article 181 of the Indian Limitation Act. It is not necessary to consider, in the circumstances, whether section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act could apply to an application for substitution.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Custom—Succession—Burden of proof—Gift in favour of sister, validity of—Makwal Jats of Isan Mahar, Tahsil and District Muzaffargarh.

The position of a sister in matters of succession in the Muzaffargarh District is a strong one.

In the Muzaffargarh District the burden lies on a collateral to show that he has a preferential right to succeed as against the sister of the last male-holder.

In the Muzaffargarh District the Jats, especially the Muhammadan Jats, have very large powers of alienation and gift.

Among Makwal Jats of Isan Mahar, Tahsil and District Muzaffargarh, a gift by a male proprietor in favour of a sister or sister's son in the presence of collateral is valid.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 6th May 1921, affirming that of the Munsif First Class, Muzaffargarh, dated the 4th January 1921.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Appellant.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case Hayat, a Makwal Jat of Isan Mahar, Tahsil and District Muzaffargarh, instituted a suit challenging certain gifts made by Ilam Din and Mubarak in favour of their sisters Alam Khatun and Musammat Roshan and the latter's son Ali Muhammad. The plaintiff's suit being dismissed he preferred an appeal to the District Court. This appeal having proved unsuccessful he has come up to this Court in second appeal armed with a certificate from the learned District Judge under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act, III of 1914. The certificate in question states that there is a question regarding the validity of a custom, viz., the validity of a gift in favour of sisters and sister's sons as against collaterals.

Mr. Anant Ram on behalf of the appellant frankly and rightly admitted that, so far as the evidence on the record was concerned, the appellant had failed entirely to prove that such gifts were invalid by custom.

He, however, contended that the onus of proving the custom had been wrongly placed on him. Now, in the primary Court the onus was placed on him without any objection on his part. In the lower Appellate Court it was never alleged that the onus had been wrongly placed. This is apparent from the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court as also from the judgment of the learned District Judge itself. The question of onus is, however, one of law and so can be taken up in second appeal. In support of Mr. Anant Ram's contention that the onus should have been placed on the other side, he drew my attention to the Customary Law of Muzaffargarh District, page 32, and particularly to the answer to question No. 10. As, however, this question does not relate either to the succession by sisters or gifts to them it does not appear to have any bearing on the matter before me. On the other hand, the answer to question No. 26, read with the answer to question No. 21, (pages 37 and 36) renders it perfectly clear that all the tribes of this District recognise that on a man dying without male lineal descendant and leaving neither widow nor daughters nor daughter's sons the property passes to his (1) father, (2) brother or their descendants, and (3) sisters or their descendants. The position of a sister, therefore, in this District in matters of succession is a strong one. Mr. Anant Ram then referred me to Hayat v. Rustam (1). That decision refers to Makwal Jats of Tahsil Alipur and, as the judgment shows, the decision was confined to that particular tribe in that particular Tahsil. At the same time, in that case itself it was recognised that the onus lay on the collaterals to establish a custom by which they excluded sisters. Mr. Anant Ram then cited Ranjha v. Jindwaddi (2) in which it was held that among Biloches of the Muzaffargarh District collaterals in the 5th and 6th degree had failed to prove that they excluded sisters. It was specifically held that the entry in the Riwaj-

i-am in favour of sisters threw the onus probandi on the collaterals. I have, therefore, no hesitation whatever in agreeing with the Courts below that it was for the plaintiff in this case to show that he had a preferential right to succeed as against the sisters of Mubarik and Ilam Din. Admittedly, the appellant has adduced not a single instance in support of his case, whereas on the other side there are several instances established. Further, in the Muzaffargarh District the Jats, especially the Muhammadan Jats, have very large powers of alienation and gift, and Mr. Anant Ram admitted that he was unable to press the matter with regard to this portion of the case. I confess I am unable to see on what grounds the certificate was granted and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

A suit to recover weightment charges due under a contract entered into between the parties is not excluded from the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, and if the valuation is below Rs. 500 a second appeal will not lie.

Second appeal from a decree of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh, dated the 30th July 1921.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is raised to this appeal on the ground that no second appeal lies under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The valuation was admittedly under Rs. 500. The only question is whether the suit was excluded from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts by Schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The case set forth in the plaint is that the defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiff's predecessor to pay him a sum of Rs. 210 for the right to collect weightment dues; that they only paid a portion of the amount due from them, and that a sum of Rs. 61-7-0 including interest is still due. It is suggested on behalf of the appellant that the case comes under clause 13 of the Schedule, being a suit to enforce payment of allowances called malikana, haq, cesses, or other dues. The suit is not, however, to enforce payment of cesses or dues from persons by whom these dues were payable. It is a right to recover a sum due under a contract entered into between the defendants and the plaintiff. The appellant contends that on the merits the Court below has overlooked the ruling in Sadanand Pande v. Ali Jan (1). I am, however, precluded from going into this question as, in my opinion, the preliminary objection is correct and no second appeal lies. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

A question relating to the effect on a particular case of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code as debarring the plaintiffs from proceeding by suit instead of in execution of a decree already obtained, is not such a substantial question of law within the meaning of section 109 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code as to entitle a party to leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION

No. 1642 OF 1922.

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree, dated 3rd November 1921, of the High Court in Appeal No. 374 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, at Madura, in Original Suit No. 58 of 1917.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION

No. 1643 OF 1922.

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to consolidate the appeals to His Majesty in Council against the decrees of the High Court in Appeal Suits Nos. 373 and 374 of 1919 (Original Suits Nos. 57 and 58 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, at Madura, for purposes of pecuniary valuation).

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar and N. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—These are applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decision of this Court in A. S. No. 374 of 1919 and for consolidation of the suit in question in that appeal and the suit in question in Appeal No. 373 of 1919 in respect of which leave to appeal has already been given, the latter application being made under O. XLV, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code. The consolidation is asked for, for the purpose of valuation; and it is not disputed that unless consolidation is allowed, the case in Appeal No. 374 of 1919 will not fulfil the requirement of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, in respect of the amount of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance or the subject-matter in dispute in appeal.

Under O. XLV, r. 4, consolidation is admissible, only when the suits in question involve substantially the same questions for determination and have been decided by the same judgment. We can easily hold that the two suits in question before us do involve substantially the same questions for determination. As regards, however, the second requirement in the order, the facts are that the suits were determined in the Court of first instance by two distinct judgments. In this Court the A. S. Nos. 373 and 374 of 1919 were, no doubt, originally heard together and decided by one judgment. There was, however, afterwards in A. S. No. 374 of 1919 an application for review of that judgment and, eventually, that appeal was re-heard on review and another judgment was given on the 3rd November 1921. The judgment of that date, no doubt, did not in any way modify the portion of the earlier judgment, in respect of which leave to appeal has been granted and is now asked for. That, however, does not, in our opinion, affect the character of the judgment of the 3rd November 1921, as the judgment is in Appeal No. 374 of 1919.

and as that judgment is distinct from the judgment in Appeal No. 373 of 1919 the earlier judgment was, of course, adopted so far as it still stood in the latter judgment A. S. No. 374 of 1919; but that did not entail that the latter judgment was not the judgment in that appeal and the final adjudication, against which a further appeal would have to be taken. In these circumstances, we cannot hold that the second requirement of O. XLV, r. 4, that the suits to be consolidated were decided by the same judgment has been met, since the judgments deciding them were, in our opinion, certainly different in the Court of first instance and were distinct in this Court. There is, therefore, no room for the application of such an authority as Bhagwan Singh v. Bhavani Das-Bhagwan Das (1). The petition for consolidation failing, it is not possible for us to treat the valuation in Appeal No. 374 of 1919 as fulfilling the requirement of section 110 Civil Procedure Code.

We are then asked to certify the case as a fit one for appeal under section 109 (2), Civil Procedure Code. The decisions as to fitness for appeal with reference to that provision are, no doubt, wide. But it seems to be well established that there must be some substantial question of law of general interest involved [see Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (2) and Sadagopa Chariar v. Krishnamoorthy Rao (3)]. We cannot see how such a question arises in the case before us, since the matter for appeal is only the effect on a particular case of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, as debarring the plaintiff from proceeding by suit instead of in execution of a decree already obtained.

It is then suggested that the case is covered by section 109 (c), Civil Procedure Code, because leave has already been granted in respect of another case, A. S. No. 373 of 1919, involving the same question as this. The only authority for this very wide construction of section 109 (c) is Makund Sarup v. Richard Ross Skinner (4). We are not prepared to act on the principle suggested without more and better authority.

In these circumstances, the petitions must fail and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—An application was made by some of the defendants to set aside an ex parte decree obtained against them by the present applicant from the Small Cause Court. The decretal money was not deposited with the application. The Court required the defendants to deposit the decretal money and fixed a date for the hearing of the application. On that date two days' further time was granted and within that time the decretal money was deposited. The Court below has accepted that deposit as a sufficient compliance of section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). There is a conflict of opinion in regard to the power of the Court to receive such deposit after the appli-

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Appellant.

Lala Kishen Chand, for the Plaintiff-
Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was by certain proprietors in the village of Raja Jang for possession of a site sold by Faqiria, a sweeper by caste and a non-proprietor, to another non-proprietor Muhammad Din tarkhan. The plaintiffs based their suit on the allegation that such a sale by non-proprietor was not sanctioned by custom. The defendant pleaded that Raja Jang is a town and not a village, that non-proprietors have the right to transfer their sites and that Faqiria was full owner.

The Trial Court decreed the suit and the decree was upheld on appeal by the Senior Subordinate Judge who granted a certificate for second appeal under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act stating the question regarding the existence of custom to be whether a non-proprietor in Raja Jang can transfer his right of residence in the village without the consent of the proprietor or has the right to remove malba. The first contention is that the finding of the Courts below that Raja Jang is a village is erroneous. I find no evidence on the record of the population of this place except an obviously exaggerated statement by a defence witness named Hazara Singh that there are 5,000 or 7,000 houses. There is no evidence that any trade is carried on.
According to other evidence produced by the defendants, there is no Municipal Committee and no Bazars. There are two primary schools and most of the houses are Kachcha.
On the other hand, it is proved that the organization of Raja Jang is that of an ordinary prosperous village in the Punjab, and no grounds have been established on which it can be held to be a town.

The second contention is that the evidence on the record establishes the right of a non-proprietor resident to transfer his right of residence and the materials of his house without the consent of the proprietor of the site. The defendants produced in all three witnesses. The first, Sundar Singh, states that he being a Zargar purchased sites from Nabi Bakhsh, weaver, and Faiz Khoja. He did not say whether the proprietors consented to the sale. He was unable to produce any sale-deed by Nabi Bakhsh but he exhibited the sale-deed of the purchase

MOHANLAL BALBHADRA V. BISSESARDAS DAGA.

from Faiz Khoja. The second witness, Hazara Singh Mirasi, stated that he had purchased land from two Christian sweepers, Chandu and Roshan, and he produced the sale-deeds. He stated that no one objected and that he did not obtain permission to make the purchase from anybody. The third witness, Roshan, says that twelve or fourteen years ago he purchased four marlas from the defendants, that a sale-deed was executed, but that he had not brought it to Court.

This was all the evidence and it is manifestly quite insufficient. It has often been ruled by this Court, e.g., in Kharak Singh v. Alladitta (1), Maya Das v. Jan Muhammad (2), Bu'a Mal v. Ruldu (3), Khudayar v. Kapur Singh (4) and Harsahai v. Ganga Ram (5) that several previous sales, even where the acquiescence by the proprietors is proved, do not necessarily imply a renunciation by the proprietors of their discretionary right to object to subsequent sales or establish a custom recognising such sales as authorised by the proprietors.

A number of deeds was presented to the Trial Court after the hearing of the case had been concluded, but no proof was offered of their genuineness and they cannot be accepted as evidence that the transaction which they profess to record in fact took place.

The appellant has failed to establish his case and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Important questions of law.

In order that leave to appeal to the Privy Council should be granted the questions involved in the appeal must generally be important in the way that the decision of them will affect a large number of persons.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree, dated the 9th January 1922, passed in First Appeal No. 84 of 1920.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Applicant.

Sir Bepin Krishna Bose, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—This Court's judgment did not affirm that of the lower Court but the value of the subject-matter in dispute is a few rupees less than Rs. 5,000. To say that the case involves "very difficult and intricate questions of law" is to say that it involves "substantial questions of law." If that were sufficient to bring it within the meaning of clause (c) of section 109, the word and at the beginning of the last clause of section 110 would be superfluous. The questions involved must generally be important in the way that the decision of them will affect a large number of persons. On the facts disclosed in this case it is clear that the decision will affect nobody in these Provinces except the appellant. The application for leave to appeal is rejected and the applicant will pay all the costs of the opposite party which we assess at Rs. 30.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35—
 Costs—Appellate Court, duty of—Appeal, second,

Under section 35 of the Civil Procedure Code it is the duty of an Appellate Court to award costs or make some direction as to costs, and the failure to make such provision, amounts to a failure to comply with the law, and as such is open to correction in second appeal. [p. 223, col. 1.]

The High Court will, in second appeal, interfere with an order of the lower Appellate Court varying the order of the Trial Court in the matter of costs, when such variation is based on either a wrong view of the law, or on a supposed fact for which there is no evidence whatever. [p. 223, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 21st February 1922, modifying the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 13th June 1921.

Mr. Hakim-ud-din Siddiqi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this second appeal the appellant, Ram Kishan Das, who was plaintiff in the Court of first hearing, appeals from the decree of the lower Appellate Court as to costs. The appellant, Ram Kishan Das, brought a suit against one Jagannath Prasad on the basis of an indemnity bond, dated 28th November 1920, by which a third party, Jagat Narain, charged certain immoveable property with the payment of two debts created by him by pro-notes. Jagannath Prasad had purchased the property charged and the plaintiff's suit was for recovery of the debts on the basis of the indemnity bond by sale of the property. We are not concerned with the decree against defendant No. 1, Jagat Narain. As against the second defendant, who is respondent in this appeal, the Court of first hearing decreed Rs. 346 odd with interest on the finding that the consideration for the indemnity bond was only good to this extent. It directed that the plaintiff-appellant and the defendant No. 2 respondent should bear their own costs. In first appeal to the Third Additional District Judge this order of the Court of first hearing as to costs was set aside and it was directed that the defendant No. 2, respondent, ought to get his costs on the Rs. 700 which he had succeeded in getting cut off the face-value of the indemnity bond. The lower Appellate Court admitted that the appellant had also pleaded that the whole of the security bond was not binding on him but remarked that this was merely a legal plea. It also apparently by inadvertence failed to pass any orders as to the costs of appeal to be borne by the parties to the appeal.

The plaintiff appeals against this order on two grounds. He maintains that the lower Appellate Court's order reversing the order of the Court of first hearing as to costs should be set aside; and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court's failure to award any costs of the appeal should be deemed an order requiring the parties to pay their own costs and as such should be set aside in favour of an order awarding the plaintiff-appellant his costs in the lower Appellate Court.

A preliminary objection is taken by the respondent-defendant No. 2 that no appeal lies. It will be convenient, in considering this question, to keep separate the question of the propriety of the lower Appellate Court's order as to costs in the Court of hearing from its failure to award any particular costs in the appeal. Reliance is placed by the respondent on Maula Bakhsh v. Musammat Masuman (1) where it was held that a second appeal lies against an order about costs only when the order of the first Appellate Court is contrary to some specified law and not otherwise. That ruling is, however, inapplicable to the present case. It dealt with an order as to costs passed by a lower Appellate Court in respect of proceedings before it. Doubtless, where there is an appeal against the costs awarded by any Court in respect of the proceedings before it the fact that judicial discretion is vested in any Court to award costs in respect of such proceedings will be a reason for a further Appellate Court refusing to interfere except on certain strong grounds with which we are not concerned.

(1) 8 O. C. 251.

HEMANGINI DEVI v. BEJOY SINGH.

Where, as in this case, the lower Appellate Court has interfered with the order of the Court of hearing as to costs, there appears to me no reason why the legality of the lower Appellate Court's order should not be open to question in second appeal. The Court of hearing had directed that the parties should bear their own costs. The lower Appellate Court varied this order because it held that the plea of the present respondent that the indemnity bond was altogether invalid was merely a legal plea. If this reason be treated seriously then it was wrong in law as there is no distinction made by the law between pleas based on facts and pleas based on law so far as the apportionment of costs is concerned. What I think was meant by the lower Appellate Court was that the plea that the indemnity bond was altogether invalid, was not seriously taken up and occasioned no trouble to the Court or litigants. That this was not so, however, is clear from the fact that the invalidity of the security bond was seriously contended in the appeal of the respondent before the lower Appellate Court. It is not permissible, therefore, to disregard this plea as taken in the Court of first hearing. In the circumstances, I think that the variation by the lower Appellate Court of the costs of the Court of first hearing was based on either a wrong view of the law or on a supposed fact for which there was no evidence whatever, and, in any case, varied the first Court's decree as to costs on a ground that was insufficient in point of law. The lower Appellate Court's decision, therefore, as to the costs in the Court of first hearing was bad in law and is liable to be upset in second appeal.

As regards failure of the lower Appellate Court to make any orders as to the costs of the appeal, I am of the opinion that section 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be construed to impose upon the Court a duty that it shall award costs or make some direction as to costs. The failure of a Court to make any direction could no, doubt, be remedied by way of review but it is equally open to a party to appeal against a decree which fails to make provision for costs. The failure to make such provision amounts, in my opinion, to a failure to comply with the law and as such is open to correction in second appeal.

Consequently, I allow this appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court as to costs, I restore the order of the Court of first hearing that the parties shall bear their own costs in the First Court and I make an order as to costs of first appeal that the present appellant shall get his full costs of that appeal. He will also get his costs of this appeal.

But if he builds, knowing it to be the property of another, nothing will prevent the real owner from afterwards claiming the land, with the full benefit of the expenditure upon it. [p. 225, col. 2.]

fraud. In the first place, the person making the building must have made a mistake as to his legal rights. Secondly, he must have expended some money or must have done some act, not necessarily upon another's land on the faith or mistaken belief. Thirdly, the owner, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the person making the building. Fourthly, the owner must know of the latter's mistaken belief of his rights. Lastly, the owner must have encouraged the person making the building in his expenditure of money or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. When all these elements exist, there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle a Court to restrain the owner from exercising his legal rights. [p. 226, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 23rd of November 1921, reversing a decree of the Munsif, First Court at Jangipur, dated the 31st of January 1920.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of right of way and for a mandatory injunction for the removal of an overbridge which the defendants had constructed over the pathway. We denied plaintiff's title and also pleaded that plaintiff was estopped from obtaining an injunction inasmuch as he acquiesced in the building of the overbridge. The First Court declared plaintiff's title but refused the mandatory injunction asked for. On appeal the suit has been decreed in full. On the 20th of November 1918, we wrote a letter to the plaintiff praying for permission to build the overbridge. The plaintiff did not condescend to reply to that letter. The plaintiff's local agent resides in the locality. The finding is that the overbridge was built in the presence of the Rajah's agent. He did not object to our building. I submit all this clearly proves acquiescence on the plaintiff's part. If that is so, the plaintiff is neither entitled to mandatory injunction nor to damages. See Kerr on Injunctions (3rd Edition) 17; 117; 484. The acquiescence of an agent is sufficient. See Woodroffe on Injunctions (4th Edition) 113; *Benode Coomaree Dossee v. Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Respondent.—There is no substance in the appeal. As regards the question of title it is concluded by findings of fact. As regards acquiescence, see Willmott v. Barber (6) where the fundamental propositions were laid down. The finding is that he did not wait for the Rajah's permission. See Ramsden v. Dyson (7), Smith v. Smith (8); section 55, Specific Relief Act. The learned Judge was quite right in holding that there was no acquiescence. See Shyam Lal Ghosh v. Rameswari Basu (9).

Dr. Kanjilal, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

Chatterjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a pathway, and for a mandatory injunction for the removal of an overbridge, which the defendants had constructed over the pathway, on the allegation that the pathway was a private pathway belonging to the plaintiff, and that the defendants had no right to construct the overbridge.

The defendants, among other things, denied the plaintiff's right, and also pleaded that the plaintiff was precluded, by reason of acquiescence in the construction of the overbridge, from having it demolished.

The Court of first instance declared the title of the plaintiff to the disputed pathway but refused the mandatory injunction to demolish the overbridge, and gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 100 as damages.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned District Judge directed the removal of the overbridge.

HEMANGINI DEVI J. BEJOY SINGH.

The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The first contention raised is that a certain letter by which the defendants had asked for the permission of the plaintiff for the erection of the overbridge was no evidence of the title of the plaintiff, and that the question of title should have been decided upon other evidence.

There is no doubt, however, that the letter contained a clear admission of the plaintiff's title and both the Courts below have found that the plaintiff's title was proved. The main contention, however, is that the Court below ought to have held that there was acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff and that the Court, therefore, was not justified in directing the removal of the overbridge.

It appears that the defendants, on the 20th November 1918, wrote the letter referred to above, asking for permission to erect the overbridge. No orders appear to have been passed on this letter and the defendants without waiting for any order built the overbridge. The plaintiff's local agents were residing very near the place and they did not raise any objection. It is accordingly contended that this amounted to acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff which precluded him from having a mandatory injunction. The cases of Noyna Misser v. Rupikin (2) and Benode Coomaree Dossee v. Soudaminy Dossee (1) have been relied upon on behalf of the appellants.

In the second case, the question was whether a building which had obstructed the entrance of light into the plaintiff's buildings should be demolished, when the plaintiff had not taken prompt steps. Wilson, J., observed: "When a plaintiff has not brought his suit or applied for an injunction at the earliest opportunity, but has waited till the building has been finished, and then asks the Court to have it removed, a mandatory injunction will not generally be granted, though there might be cases where it would be."

The building to be demolished, however, in that case was not erected upon any land belonging to the plaintiff and the case, therefore, is quite distinguishable from the present.

The first case related to an agricultural holding. The tenant of an agricultural holding planted the land of his jote with mango trees to the knowledge, but without the consent, of the landlord, thus changing the character of the land. More than three years afterwards, the landlord sued for a mandatory injunction to have the mango trees removed. It was held that having stood by for more than three years and allowed the tenants to spend his labour and capital upon the land without taking any action in the matter, the landlord was not entitled to a mandatory injunction. It was the case of a tenant, and it is unnecessary to consider under what circumstances a landlord is entitled to a mandatory injunction against his tenant.

Here the defendant was a stranger. So far as strangers are concerned, the law on the point appears to be quite settled. In the leading case of Ramsden v. Dyson (7) it was observed that, "if a stranger begins to build on land supposing it to be his own, and the real owner perceiving his mistake, abstains from setting him right and leaves him to persevere in his error, a Court of Equity will not afterwards allow the real owner to assert his title to the land. But if a stranger builds on land knowing it to be the property of another, equity will not prevent the real owner from afterwards claiming the land, with the benefit of all the expenditure upon it".

The principle was referred to by the Judicial Committee in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (10), (which was a case of a tenant). Their Lordships pointed out that the rule of equity "might possibly be made to apply to the case where the owner of land sees another person erecting buildings upon it, and knowing that such other person is under the mistaken belief that the land is his own property, purposely abstains from interference, with the view of claiming the building when it is erected."

The circumstances under which the owner of a legal right will be precluded by his acquiescence, from asserting it, was considered by Fry, J., in Willmott v. Barber (6); the learned Judge observed: "It has been said that the acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud, and, in my opinion, that is an abbreviated statement of a very true proposition. A man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights. What, then, are the elements or requisites necessary to constitute fraud of that description? In the first place, the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights. Secondly, the plaintiff must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the defendant's land) on the faith of the mistaken belief. Thirdly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff. If he does not know of it, he is in the same position as the plaintiff, and the doctrine of acquiescence is founded upon conduct with a knowledge of your legal rights. Fourthly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights. If he does not, there is nothing which it calls upon him to assert his own rights. Lastly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must have encouraged the plaintiff in his expenditure of money or in the other acts which he has done, either directly, or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. Where all these elements exist, there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it, but, in my judgment, nothing short of this will do."

(10) 26 I. A. 58; 21 A. 496; 1 Bom. L. R. 400; 3 C. W. N. 502; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 523; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1022 (P. C.).

As stated above, the defendants in the present case were under no mistake about their rights, they were perfectly aware that the land belonged to the plaintiff, and they wrote a letter to the plaintiff asking for permission to construct an overbridge. The principal ground upon which the doctrine of acquiescence is applied, namely, that the party must have made a mistake as to his right, therefore, does not apply to the present case.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellants that after having written that letter, the defendants expected that the plaintiff would agree to the construction, and that having regard to the fact that no steps were taken to prevent the construction of the overbridge by the local agents and the further fact that one of them when invited to the house of the defendants passed over the bridge, and did not object to it are relied upon as acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff. Our attention has been drawn to the provisions of section 56 (j) of the Specific Relief Act which lays down that an injunction cannot be granted when the conduct of the applicant or his agents has been such as to disentitle him to the assistance of the Court. It is further contended that the acquiescence of the agent is sufficient to bind the plaintiff.

There may be cases where the acquiescence of the agent is binding on the principal. In the present case, however, the letter was admittedly written to the Raja himself and not to his local agents. The defendants constructed the overbridge without waiting for the plaintiff's permission, and if they constructed it in the expectation that permission would be granted, they must be taken to have done so at their own risk.

Under these circumstances, I do not see how the mere fact that the plaintiff's local agents did not raise an objection to the construction of the overbridge could be held to be acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff. The permission, as stated above, was asked for not from them but from their master, the plaintiff himself, and there is nothing to show that the plaintiff was aware of the construction of the overbridge or that his local agents had any authority to sanction the construction of the overbridge. As to the fact of one of the agents having passed over the overbridge when invited to the defendants' house that must have been after its construction as he could not have passed over it unless the construction was completed or nearly so. There was some criminal proceeding in connection with the overbridge, and it does not appear that there was much delay in instituting it, and, shortly after, this suit was instituted.

The last contention was that the overbridge having been completed, the plaintiff could only ask for damages and not an injunction. But the principle applicable to such cases has already been pointed out above. If the land belongs to the plaintiff and the defendants, with full knowledge that they have got no right to the land, erect a structure on it, there is no reason why the plaintiff should suffer the structure made upon his land to stand and submit to be compensated with damages.

On the whole, I think that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Mortgage—Sale under decree of prior mortgagee—Puisne mortgagee not impleaded—Property purchased of, by prior mortgagee—Suit for sale by puisne mortgagee—Prior mortgagee, whether necessary party.

A puisne mortgagee cannot sue successfully for a decree for sale of the mortgaged property without impleading a prior mortgagee who has already purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a decree for sale on his mortgage without impleading the puisne mortgagee.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge Benares, dated the 8th August 1921.

Mr. K. Verma, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Harnandan Prasad and G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this appeal is a very short one, namely, whether the puisne mortgagee can sue successfully for a decree for sale of the mortgaged property without impleading a prior mortgagee who has already purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a decree for sale on his mortgage without impleading the puisne mortgagee.

The Courts below have answered this question in the negative and have dismissed the plaintiff's puisne mortgagee's suit for sale.

He comes here in second appeal and contends that, under the new Code of Civil Procedure, the puisne mortgagee can bring the mortgaged property into sale without impleading a prior mortgagee. That rule would, of course, apply in an ordinary case in which the property belongs to the mortgagor, but here the relief claimed by the puisne mortgagee is against the mortgaged property which has been sold in satisfaction of a decree on a prior mortgage to which he was not a party. The ordinary rule of a property being sold in execution of a prior mortgage is that the property is sold free of all puisne incumbrances and the only right which a puisne mortgagee has, is the right to redeem the prior mortgage and bring the property to sale, but because of his not being so impleaded he cannot get rid of his liability to redeem the prior mortgage. In the present case, as I have already stated above, the proprietary rights in the property have vested in the prior mortgagee and the puisne mortgagee cannot have those rights sold without paying up the prior mortgage. What the plaintiff wants really is to have the property purchased by the prior mortgagee sold to satisfy the later debt without redeeming the prior mortgage. This cannot be allowed. He could only redeem the prior mortgage by making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit. He did not intend to do so, and he must suffer the consequences. He cannot sell the property in the absence of the owner thereof. In my opinion the Courts below were right. I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

The rule that there can be no right of contributions inter se between two wrong-doers applies where the wrong-doers knew or ought to have known that they were doing an illegal or wrongful act; but if they acted under a bona fide claim of right and had reason to suppose that they had a right to do what they did, then the right of contribution inter se exists. Appeal against an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated the 30th June 1922, in Civil Suit No. 2441 of 1921.

Mr. V. D. Kale, for the Applicants.

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The first plaintiff is a brother of one Kashinath Kunbi, deceased; the defendant is the son of another brother and the remaining five plaintiffs are the sons and grandsons of two other brothers of theirs. One Bhagwan obtained a decree against the parties to this suit for possession of certain land on the strength of a lease of it given to him by Kashinath's widow, and subsequently sued them for the mesne profits derived from it during the period of their wrong possession. He obtained a decree for an amount which was paid in full by the plaintiffs, and they have now sued the defendant for contribution of his share. In the Small Cause Court where it was tried the suit was dismissed without examination of its merits on the ground that a suit for contribution between joint tort-feasors is not maintainable. In Vayangara Vadaka Vittil Manja v. Pariyangot Padingara Kuruppath (1) and Fakire v.

Tasaddug Husain (2) the two cases cited by the learned Judge as supporting this view, it is distinctly explained that that statement of the rule in respect of contribution between joint wrong-doers is much too wide.

2. Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari (3) contains a full statement of the rule that has always been accepted as correct. In that case a decree had been passed against both parties for damages for felling a number of palm trees, and Garth, C. J., and Mitter, J., said: "The first and main question is, whether, as between the persons against whom jointly the decree in the former suit was pronounced, there is any right of contribution at all, and this depends [according to the rule laid down in the Full Bench case, to which we have been referred, Sreeputty Roy v. Loharam Roy (4)] upon the question, whether the defendants in the former suit were wrong-doers in the sense that they knew or ought to have known that they were doing an illegal or wrongful act. In that case no suit for contribution would lie [see also Merryweather v. Nixan (5) and Farebrother v. Ansley (6)]. But, on the other hand, if the defendants in the former suit were not guilty of a wrong in that sense, but acted under a bona fide claim of right, and had reason to suppose that they had a right to do what they did, then, no doubt, they might have a right of contribution inter se; and in such case the Judge in the Court below was bound to enquire what share they each took in the transaction, because, according to circumstances, one or more of them might be excused altogether or in part from contributing; as, for instance, (to use an illustration put by Sir Barnes Peacock), one of them might have acted as servant and by the command of the others, or the others might have been the only persons benefited by the wrongful act; in which case those who were alone benefited, or who ordered the servant to do the act, would not be entitled to contribution."

3. This was followed in Vayangara Vadaka Vittil Manja v. Pariyangot Padingara Kuruppath (1), one of the two rulings mentioned in the judgment of the lower Court, and the plaintiff was held not to be entitled to a contribution of a share of the costs which both parties had been ordered to pay as defendants in a previous suit, but only for the reason that he was solely responsible for putting forward the defence in that suit. The learned Judges said: "Acting on the principles laid down in Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari (3) we think that the plaintiff is not entitled to contribution against the defendant. The Judge laid down, rather too widely a rule that there cannot be contribution for costs between two parties ordered to pay them. Whether there is to be contribution, depends on the nature of the defence by each party, and whether the defence was made on reasonable grounds. We dismiss the petition."

4. Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari (3) was again followed in Kishna Ram v. Rakmini Sewak Singh (7) in which Straight and Brodhurst, J.J., said: "It is, no doubt, a well-known legal truism that 'no action for contribution is maintainable by one wrong-doer against another, although the one who claims contribution may have been compelled to satisfy the whole damages arising from the tort committed by them both' Merryweather v. Nixan (5). But this rule has this limitation, that it is confined to cases where the person seeking redress must be presumed to have known that he was doing an unlawful act' Best, C. J., in Adamson v. Jarvis (8)."

(5). In Lakshmina Ayyan v. Rangasami Ayyan (9) the tort in question was an act that both parties knew to be illegal and wrongful but it was pointed that the "clear proposition of law that one tort-feasor cannot recover contribution from another is subject to still another 'important qualification, viz., that where the loss arising from the illegal contract is adjusted so that the adjustment is equivalent to a payment, the adjustment cannot be disturbed.' The suit was held not to be one for contribution between tort-feasors at all but one for the enforcement of a contract subsequent to the tort, and it was by that that the rulings in Vayangara Vadaka Vittil Manja v. Pariyangot Padingara Kuruppath (1) and Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari (3) were distinguished. In Gobind Ghunder Nundy v. Srigobind Chowdhry (10) what the learned Judges called the "wholesome rule" which is set out above in the extract from the judgment in Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari (3) was again enforced.

6. The second of the two cases mentioned in the judgment of the lower Court is Fakire v. Tasaduq Husain (2). There again Suput Singh's case (3) was cited with approval and the principle laid down in it was followed, the suit being dismissed in accordance with that principle. The learned Judges said: "That there may in some events be contribution between wrong-doers is shown from the judgment in Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari (3). That decision can, therefore, hardly be called authority for the view that there can never be such contribution, as has been done in the lower Court."

7. Mention has also been made of the judgments of the Privy Council in Jotindra Mohun Lahiri v. Guru Prosunno Lahiri (11) and Guru Prosunna Lahiri v. Jotindra Mohan Lahiri (12), which are two stages of the same case. The question with which we are now concerned was not raised before their Lordships, but it appears from the report of the earlier case (at page 600*) that the Calcutta High Court dealt with the appeal "after deciding in the plaintiff's favour an objection to the suit that, the plaintiff being a joint wrong-doer with the defendants, could not sue them for contribution." This decision was doubtless in accordance with that in Sarbat Singh's case (3) and if there had been any possible doubt of its correctness, it would almost certainly have been called in question before their Lordships.

8. Now, it cannot be suggested that the conduct of any of the parties to the present suit in holding possession against Bhagwan of the property of which mesne profits were decreed was to their knowledge illegal or wrongful or that any of them acted in the matter otherwise than in good faith under a claim of right which there was reason to suppose was valid. The dismissal of the suit will accordingly be set aside and the case will be remanded to the lower Court for a decision on its merits, that is to say, mainly a decision of the relative amounts of benefits derived by each party from possession of the land. The costs of these proceedings, in which Rs. 15 will be allowed as Pleader's fee, will be costs in the suit.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 8, O. XXII, rr. 3, 9. O. XLIII, r. 1 (k). Suit dismissed in default in ignorance of death of plaintiff—Refusal to set aside dismissal—Procedure.

An order under O. IX, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code dismissing a suit for default of prosecution on a date when the plaintiff was dead, in ignorance of such death, is a nullity.

An order under r. 3, O. XXII of the Civil Procedure Code dismissing an application to set aside an order such as the above is not appealable; the proper remedy of the party affected is an application to the Court under r. 9 of O. XXII to set aside the abatement, and if this application is also dismissed, the order of dismissal is appealable under r. 1 (k) of O. XLIII of the Code.

Revision against an order, dated the 27th May, 1921, of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, confirming an order of the Munsif, Kunda, dated the 18th December 1920.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for Opposite Party No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision in connection with a suit which has been held to have abated. The case was dismissed in default of appearance of the plaintiff on 20th April 1920, the date fixed for hearing. The order purported to be passed under O. IX, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, but in fact the plaintiff was dead on that date though neither the Court nor any of the parties was aware of it. In accordance with the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (1) the order passed was a nullity. Under the Law of Limitation then in force the legal representatives of the deceased had six months from the date of his death within which to apply to be brought on the record. On 31st August 1920, which was admittedly within six months of his death, an application was presented under O. XXII, r. 3 by the second son of the deceased, a minor, and certain trustees said to have been appointed under the Will of the deceased to manage his estate during the minority of the eldest son. On 18th December 1920 the learned Munsif dismissed the application on the ground that both the Will and the trust were denied by the contesting respondents and neither had been proved. Against that order the applicants appealed. The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal dismissed it on the ground that no appeal lay from the order complained of, the appellants' remedy being an application under the second clause of r. 9 of O. XXII i.e. by application to set aside the abatement. Against this order dismissing the appeal the present revision is filed.

PEERAKHA LALKHA V. BAPU KASHIBA MALI.

It is common ground that an order under O. XXII, r. 3 is not open to appeal. O. XLIII, r. 1 (h), Civil Procedure Code, allows an appeal from an order under r. 9, O. XXII, but no appeal is allowed against an order under r. 3. The contention of the applicants' Counsel in this Court is, that the application of 31st August 1920, though it purported to be under r. 3 of O. XXII, was really under r. 9. His contention is that the original order of dismissal for default on 20th April 1920 was really an order of abatement and that this subsequent application of 31st August should be treated as having been made under r. 9. This contention is untenable. The order of dismissal for default could not possibly be an order passed under O. XXII for two reasons. In the first place, no order of abatement could be passed when all the parties concerned were unaware of the fact of the plaintiff's death. In the second place, no such order could be passed till the period of limitation had expired. The Privy Council case of Debi Bahksh Singh v. Habib Shah (1), already referred to, has been relied on by both sides. In that case an order of dismissal for default was passed under similar circumstances, the plaintiff being dead at the time. On an application under O. XXII, r. 3, the Deputy Commissioner brought on the record the legal representative and directed the case to proceed. This Court set aside that order on the ground that O. XXII was only applicable while the suit was pending and that, in consequence of the previous dismissal for default, the suit was no longer pending when the application was made. The Privy Council set aside this contention and held that the Deputy Commissioner's order was manifestly correct and should be restored. The applicants rely on the fact that in the body of the judgment as reported the application of the plaintiff's son to have his name substituted is described in one place as an application under O. XXII, r. 9. This appears to be clearly a misprint or slip for r. 3, since in the very next sentence their Lordships go on to say that the application was well within the period of six months limitation. Now six months limitation was applicable only to an order under r. 3; the period of limitation for an application under r. 9 was sixty days only under Art. 171 of the Limitation Act. The order of the Court is, therefore, correct.

It was also attempted to build an argument on the use of the word "dismissed" in r. 9 of the Order. It was urged that the word "dismissed" was not used in the previous rules and, therefore, the words "abates or is dismissed under this order" might include an order of dismissal passed not under this Order but under r. 9. Applicants' learned Advocate had omitted to notice that the word "dismissal" is used in the second clause of r. 8.

I have been asked to treat this application in the alternative as an application for revision of the Munsif's order of 18th December 1922. I am not prepared to do this for two reasons. In the first place, without expressing any opinion on the merits of the application, it is not shown that the matter comes within the provisions of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. In the second place, there was a remedy open to the applicants in the form of an application under O. XXII, r. 9. It does not necessarily follow that the effect of the present order is to deprive them of all further remedy. An application under r. 9 would, no doubt, now be out of time unless good ground for extending the time can be pleaded, but if such application is made the Court below will, no doubt, give full consideration to any plea which may be urged on the basis of section 14 of the Limitation Act.

I dismiss the application for revision with costs.

Mr. B. G. Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—One Nazukbi, the owner of the suit property, passed an agreement in plaintiff's favour on April 2, 1907, to sell the land to the plaintiff. On September 4, 1907, Nazukbi agreed to sell the land to one Chimaji. Chimaji obtained a sale-deed on October 18, 1907. The plaintiff obtained his sale-deed on November 1907. All those documents were registered. The defendants purchased the land from Chimaji on July 28, 1914. On August 2, 1919, the plaintiff filed this suit to recover from the defendants the suit property alleging that the defendants dispossessed him on July 28, 1914. That is the date of the defendants' sale-deed from Chimaji. The plaintiff failed to prove that he had been in possession in 1914 and had been dispossessed.

The question is whether Chimaji took his sale-deed in October 1907 with notice of the previous agreement by Nazukbi to sell the same property to the plaintiff. It has been urged that registration of the agreement of April 2, 1907, was notice to Chimaji. But it has now been settled by a decision of the Privy Council that registration by itself is no notice. There must be other circumstances in the case from which the Court could come to the conclusion that Chimaji had notice of that agreement. It has been urged that the onus lay upon Chimaji, or the defendants claiming through him, to prove that they had no notice of the prior agreement, and the case of Himatlal Motilal v. Vasudeo Ganesh (1) was relied upon. That case must depend upon its own facts, and from the judgment it appears that the lower Court had come to the conclusion that the appellants-defendants had knowledge of the plaintiff's contract prior to the date of the conveyance; but if that case is to be considered as an authority for the proposition that a person in the position of the defendants in this case has to prove the negative, that he took without notice of the prior agreement to sell, then, with the greatest respect, I cannot agree. The defendants had a title, and any body seeking to dispossess them must prove his prior right to possession. If the plaintiff had simply proved his prior agreement and nothing more it cannot possibly be said that he would be entitled to a decree. But if that proposition were correct it would follow that the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree merely on proving his prior agreement of sale, unless the defendants proved that, although they had title and possession, they had no notice of the agreement. In my opinion the decision of the Court below was correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

A finding of fact should not be disturbed in second appeal. Where a Single Judge of the High Court interferes in second appeal with a finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court, his judgment is liable to be set aside in a Letters Patent Appeal.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the order of Mr. Justice Brasher, passed in Civil Appeal No. 1282 of 1921, on the 25th May 1922, reversing that of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 3rd March 1921.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. D. Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must succeed on the short ground that the finding of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge could not be disturbed on second appeal. The vital question for determination was whether the land in dispute was the property of the plaintiff at the time of the institution of the suit, and the Trial Court, after discussing all the relevant evidence, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff, on whom the onus rested, had failed to discharge it. The learned District Judge on appeal after disposing of the only contention urged before him confirmed the judgment of the Trial Court and dismissed the appeal. He evidently endorsed the finding of the original Court on the question of ownership, and we consider that the matter could not be re-agitated in the Court of second appeal.

It is unnecessary to discuss the antiquarian question whether the plaintiff's ancestors were or were not the owners of the property 60 or 70 years ago, and how they lost their title. One thing, however, is beyond dispute that in 1902 the defendants or their ancestors got possession of this very land in execution of a decree obtained by them against certain persons, and it appears that the plaintiff or his ancestors had no concern at that time with the land. It is useless to pursue the subject any further because, as stated above, the finding of fact reached by the learned District Judge was against the plaintiff, and that finding was no longer open to challenge.

We accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of remand, restore the decree of the District Judge. The plaintiff must pay the costs incurred by the defendants in all the Courts.

Execution of decree—Decree for possession and mesne profits—Stay of execution on production of sureties—Application for determination of future mesne profits—Step-in-aid of execution—Sureties not made parties—Limitation against sureties, saving of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in 1907 for possession, and mesne profits, past and future. In March 1908 he filed a darkhast for the recovery of possession and past mesne profits. In the meanwhile, the judgment-debtor got the execution stayed under the order of the High Court after sureties had passed security bonds for the due fulfilment of the decree. The High Court confirmed the decree in September 1915 and the execution proceedings that had been stayed were continued and the decree-holder recovered possession and past mesne profits in 1916. In April 1918, the plaintiff made an application for the determination of the future mesne profits from the date of the decree, making the judgment-debtor only the party. On ascertaining the mesne profits the plaintiff put in the present darkhast in January 1920 for recovering from the judgment-debtor or the sureties the amount of future mesne profits so determined:

Held, that the darkhast of 1920 was time-barred as against the sureties, inasmuch as limitation as against them ran from 1915, the date of the High Court decree, and though the application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits was made to keep the decree alive as against the judgment-debtor it would not keep the decree alive as against the sureties. [p. 235, col. 1.]

An application for the ascertainment of the mesne profits awarded by a decree, prior as well as subsequent to its date is not a proceeding in the suit but a proceeding in execution and comes within Art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. [p. 236, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Assistant Judge with A. P. at Sholapur, in Appeal No. 56 of 1921.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaonkar, for Respondent
No. 5.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff obtained a decree in Suit No. 871 of 1906 in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur on the 10th December 1907 by which he was awarded possession with past and future mesne profits of the property in suit. In March, 1908, he filed a darkhast for executing the decree for recovering possession and the past mesne profits. Meanwhile, the defendant preferred an appeal but the appeal was dismissed. The defendant preferred a second appeal and in the second appeal further execution of the decree was stayed under the orders of the High Court after three sureties passed security bonds for the due fulfilment of the decree that might be eventually passed against the defendant. The High Court confirmed the decree of the First Court on the 14th September 1915, and the execution proceedings that had been stayed were continued. The plaintiff recovered possession and the past mesne profits in July 1916, and the proceedings terminated. Since then the question of future mesne profits had not been agitated.

The decree was passed in 1907 under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 according to the provisions of which mesne profits would have to be ascertained in execution. The Appellate Court might have passed a decree under the Code of 1908 directing an enquiry as to mesne profits under O. XX, r. 12, but it refrained from doing so. In April 1918 the plaintiff made an application for determination of the future mesne profits from the date of the decree. This application was treated as an application in the suit and the decree was made final in February 1919 determining the amount of mesne profits from 1906 to 1916. It was wrong to consider that application as an application in the suit and it must be, for the purpose of this appeal, treated as a proceeding in execution. The sureties were not made parties in this proceeding. But when the mesne profits had been ascertained the present darkhast was taken out by the plaintiff on the 3rd January of 1920 for recovering the amount of future mesne profits, so determined, from the judgment-debtor or from the three sureties. Both the lower Courts have held that the darkhast was time-barred as against the sureties.

It may be that the sureties were not necessary parties in the plaintiff's application for ascertaining the mesne profits; see Raj Raghbar Singh v. Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (1). But it does not follow that, although the sureties were not necessary parties to the application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits, the decree had been kept alive against them by reason of that application. In Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen (2) it was held that neither Art. 178, nor Art. 179 of the Indian Limitation Act applied to an application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits awarded by a decree in accordance with the provisions of section 211 or 212 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Judges there seemed to have thought that, although the proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits were proceedings in execution, still they were of an interlocutory nature and that there was nothing that could be executed under section 255 of the Code until the actual amount of mesne profits had been found and determined. All the authorities on that question were referred to by this Court in Gangadhar v. Balkrishna (3) in which it was held that an application for the ascertainment of the mesne profits awarded by a decree, prior as well as subsequent to its date, was not a proceeding in the suit but a proceeding in execution and came within Art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. The decision in Rebala Ramana Reddi v. Rebala Babu Reddi (4) was followed in preference to the decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad. Then, in Narayan v. Timmaya (5) it was held that the application to execute the decree against the surety was barred by time since the decree could not be treated as passed jointly as against the judgment-debtor and the surety, within the meaning of Art. 179 Explanation 1, paragraph 2, of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act.

GOPAL CHANDRA V. KADAMBINI DAS.

In this case, therefore, the Limitation as against the sureties ran from the date of the High Court order of 14th September of 1915. Though the application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits was made to keep the decree alive against the judgment-debtor, it would not keep the decree alive as against the sureties, as this application was made more than 3 years after 14th September of 1915. Therefore, the application against the sureties was time-barred. If the contention of the appellant is right, it would follow that the decree-holder might keep the decree alive against the sureties by making applications for the ascertainment of mesne profits, which might extend to the full time allowed for the execution of the decree. It seems to us that under the provisions of the Code of 1882 the period for executing the decree would not be extended unless proper steps were taken for ascertaining the mesne profits within the period prescribed for taking steps in execution.

The appeal therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Widowed daughter-in-law—Maintenance, right to—Cause of action when arises—Limitation Act (I X of 1908), s. 28, whether extinguishes right to maintenance.

Under the Hindu Law a widowed daughter-in-law has no legal right to maintenance as against the self-acquired property of her father-in-law, if her husband died during the lifetime of her father-in-law. But although the obligation of the father-in-law to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law is only moral and not legal when he has no ancestral assets in his hands, the position of the heir who takes his estate by inheritance is different. What was a moral obligation in respect of the father ripens into a legal obligation when the estate passes into the hands of his heirs who are not entitled to evade liability merely because they do not receive the estate by inheritance but by way of gift or testamentary disposition. Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, dated the 12th May 1920, modifying that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 28th January 1919.

Babu Atul Chandra Dutt, for the Appellant: The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for partition. The plaintiff and defendant No. 1 are brothers. The defendant No. 3 is the widow of another brother who predeceased the plaintiff's father. Her plea is that she is entitled to maintenance. The First Court decreed the suit. On appeal the Court below has held that defendant No. 3 is entitled to maintenance. I submit she is not entitled to any maintenance inasmuch as the estate never vested in her husband, who died while the father was living. See Bai Parvati v. Tarwadi Dolatram (1). Under the circumstances the father-in-law was not legally bound to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law. The father being the sole owner could have either willed or gifted away the properties to any one he liked. In that case the daughter-in-law could not have legally objected to such act as she had no legal right to maintenance against the father-in-law. It follows, therefore, that the estate vesting in the heirs of the father-in-law is also not liable for maintenance of the daughter-in-law who had no vested right in the estate during the lifetime of the father-in-law. In the present case we hold the properties under a gift from the father. Therefore, she cannot follow the estate in our hands. My next point is, that her claim is barred by limitation under Art. 129 of the Indian Limitation Act. Therefore inasmuch as she is incompetent to sue for maintenance, she is also incompetent to claim it in the present suit. It is admitted that she was refused maintenance when she asked for it from us more than 12 years ago. My last submission is, that she is not entitled to claim maintenance in the present suit. The present suit is for partition. She has other remedies open by a regular suit for maintenance. I submit in view of these facts the learned Judge was wrong in decreeing maintenance to defendant No. 3.

Babu Asita Ranjan Chatterji, for the Respondents.—It may be that a father-in-law has only moral obligations to maintain a widowed daughter-in-law. But it is an elementary principle that the moral obligation ripens into a legal obligation when the estate comes into the hands of his heir whether by way of gift, Will or inheritance. That makes no difference at all. See Siddessury Dassee v. Janardan Sarkar (2). The decision in Bai Parvati v. Tarwadi Dolatram (1) is not applicable. See Indubala Dasee v. Panchumani Dasee (3). As regards limitation, I submit plaintiff's refusal did not extinguish my right to maintenance. The right to maintenance accrues from time to time and in this respect it is distinguishable from other rights. See Narayanarao Ramchandra Pant v. Ramabai (4), Kedar Nath Coondoo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dassi (5). There is also the further fact that I have been maintained all along by defendant No. 1. As regards the last point I submit it is quite competent for a Court to decree maintenance in a partition suit.

Babu Atul Chandra Dutt, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for partition of joint property. The plaintiff and the first defendant are two brothers and this litigation was commenced by the plaintiff for division of the properties jointly held by them. Subsequently, the third defendant, the widow of another brother of the plaintiff and the first defendant, who is now dead, was joined as a defendant. The husband of this lady died during the lifetime of the father of the plaintiff and consequently never became entitled to the properties of his father. The lady claimed that provision might be made in the decree for her maintenance. The District Judge has given effect to this contention: and the only point in controversy in this appeal is, whether provision should be made for her maintenance in the decree for partition. Three points have been raised before us; namely, first, that the added defendant has no right of maintenance as against the estate received by her brother-in-law from their father; secondly, that if she had any such right, that has been extinguished by lapse of time; and thirdly, that if she has a subsisting right, it cannot be enforced in a suit for partition.

As regards the first question, reliance has been placed by the plaintiff-appellant upon the decision in Bai Parvati v. Tarwadi Dolatram (1). We are of opinion that the decision mentioned cannot be defended on principle. It is now well settled that a widowed daughter-in-law has no legal right to maintenance as against the self-acquired property of her father-in-law, if her husband died during the lifetime of her father-in-law. This was enunciated by a Full Bench of this Court in Khettur Monee Dossee v. Kasheenath Doss (6), and the position has since then been accepted without question, as will appear from the judgment of the Madras High Court in Meenakshi Ammal v. Rama Aiyar (7). But although the obligation of the father-in-law to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law is only moral and not legal, when he has no ancestral assets in his hands, the position of the heir who takes his estate by inheritance is different. What was a moral obligation in respect of the father ripens into a legal obligation when the estate passes into the hands of his heirs. In support of this proposition it is sufficient to refer to the cases of Janki v. Nand Ram (8) and Siddesury Dassee v. Janardan Sarkar (2). But it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that this principle is not applicable when the father-in-law has made a testamentary disposition of his property or has during his lifetime made a gift of his property. This is supported by the decision in Bai Parvati v. Tarwadi. Dolatram (1). But we are unable to accept the contention that the daughter-in-law is not entitled to maintenance out of the property in the hands of a donee or devisee. If the contention of the appellant were to prevail, it would be possible for the father-in-law to evade his moral obligation and to protect his estate after his death from the claim of the daughter-in-law, which, according to well-established rules, at this stage ripens into a legal claim. It is on this principle that a contrary view has been maintained in the cases of Yamunabai v. Manubai (9), Ringammal v. Echimmal (10). These decisions were mentioned with approval in the cases of In the goods of Gobinda Chandra (11) and Indubala Dasee v. Panchumani Dasee (3). We hold accordingly that the plaintiff is not entitled to evade liability merely because he received the estate of his father not by inheritance but by way of gift during his lifetime. That this view is well-founded on principle is clear from the long line of cases which establish the right of the widow to maintenance out of the estate of her husband when it was passed into the hands of his heirs. It is not suggested that the position of the widowed daughter-in-law is for all purposes so identical with that of the widow, who in certain events, is entitled to succeed to the estate of her husband. But we do not see why a distinction should be made between the position of the widow and the widowed daughter-in-law in respect of the particular question now raised before us.

As regards the second point, it is argued that the claim for maintenance is barred by limitation. Reliance has been placed upon Art. 129 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act which ordains that a suit to enforce a right of maintenance must be instituted within 12 years from the date when the right is denied. In the case before us it is found that many years ago the added defendant asked for maintenance from the plaintiff and she met with a prompt refusal. This, in our opinion, does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that her right has been extinguished. It may be conceded that if she were to institute a suit against the plaintiff she might find herself in a position of considerable embarrassment. Section 28 of the Limitation Act does not extinguish this right. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Narayanarao Ramchandra Pant v. Ramabai (4), followed in Siddesury Dassee v. Janardan Sarkar (2), the cause of action for maintenance accrues from time to time according to the want and exigencies of the person entitled; and the same view was taken in the cases of Kedar Nath Coondoo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dasi (5) and (11) 23 Ind. Cas. 539; 17 C. W. N. 1141.

GAYA DIN SINGH v. CHAUHARJA PANDE.

Siddessury Dassee v. Janardan Sarkar (2). In the present case the added defendant has been maintained for many years past by the first defendant, and it has consequently been not necessary for her to take recourse to proceedings in law. That is not a reason why provision should not be made for her maintenance in the present litigation.

As regards the third point, it has been contended that a provision for maintenance should not be made in a suit for partition, like the present but that the added defendant should be left to her remedy, if any, by a separate suit. It has been maintained, however, in this Court for a long series of years, as is indicated by the decisions in Comulmoney Dossee v. Ramnath Bysack (12) and Kedar Nath Coondoo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dass (5), that when joint property is partitioned, provisions may be made for the maintenance of such female members of the family as are entitled to maintenance from the estate. This course is manifestly convenient. As a result of this litigation, properties jointly held by the plaintiff and the first defendant will cease to be joint properties and thereafter each party will be at liberty to alienate what may be allotted to him. It is precisely at this point of time that the right of the added defendant to maintenance out of the estate originally belonging to her father-in-law should be safeguarded by the decree which effects a dissolution of the joint estate.

We hold accordingly that the decree made by the District Judge is in this respect substantially correct and should be affirmed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

MR. RUDHA KRISHNA SRIVASTAVA, for the Appellant.

MR. K. P. MISRA, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order returning a plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court. The order was passed by the Officiating District Judge on appeal from the decree of the Munsif. The plaintiff-appellant asks that the order be set aside and the appeal restored to the file of the lower Appellate Court and heard on the merits. The respondent has filed cross-objections. While not abandoning the plea of jurisdiction they urged that, instead of returning the plaint, the Courts below should have dismissed the suit as not maintainable.

The facts of the case are these. One Bhagwat was tenant of the plots in suit. He died in March 1920. On his death the zemindars granted a lease of the plots to the plaintiff Gaya Din Singh. This lease is alleged in the plaint as a part of the plaintiff's cause of action. It is common ground, however, that Gaya Din Singh was never put in possession of the plots. On 1st October 1920 the defendant, Chauharja Pande, claiming to be the heir and successor of Bhagwat filed a suit against the zemindars for recovery of possession under section 108, clause (10) of the Oudh Rent Act. He was successful in that suit and a decree was given in his favour. While the suit was pending Chauharja and Gaya Din Singh entered into an agreement on 30th December 1920 that in case Chauharja succeeded in the suit he would divide the land with Gaya Din Singh. It is now common ground between the parties that this agreement was invalid. In the plaint in the present suit it was, however, alleged as part of the plaintiff's cause of action, and on the basis of it and of his previous lease from the zemindars he sued the defendants for possession of half the plots in suit. His suit was decreed by the Munsif. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the suit was not maintainable in a Civil Court and returned the plaint as already stated.

The only question which it is necessary to determine at this stage is the question of jurisdiction, which is the only question decided by the Court below. The question is whether a dispute between two parties both claiming to be tenants of the same land under the same zemindar, where the claimant has never held possession of the land, is within the jurisdiction of the Civil or of the Revenue Court. On this question I have come reluctantly to the conclusion that the appeal must succeed. I say reluctantly because I believe the intention of the Legislature should have been that a question of this kind should be decided by a Revenue Court. There is the authority of Kalap Nath v. Mata Dan (1), a Single Judge case of this Court, for the view that the Civil Court is the proper Tribunal. If this were a case in which the plaintiff might by impleading the zemindar have filed a suit in the Revenue Court under section 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent Act, I might have been inclined to think in spite of that decision that such a suit was his true remedy. In this case, however, the plaintiff has never been ejected for he has never held possession. It was held in Raghubar Dayal v. Chandan (2) that the words "illegally ejected" implied that the plaintiff must have been in possession and were not applicable to a case in which he had never been in possession. The same view was taken in Chandrika Bakhsh Singh v. Raghunath Kunwar (3). It is not suggested that there is any other provision of the Oudh Rent Act under which the suit might have been brought.

I, therefore, allow the appeal and remand the case to the Court below with instructions to restore to its file the appeal which was instituted before it and to proceed to decide that appeal on the merits. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—Mahesha, a Khatri, holding land as an occupancy tenant, died leaving him surviving Musammam Gurjo and five sons by her. Hukman Singh and Harnam Singh, proprietors in the village instituted a suit for a declaration that Mahesha had died without lawful issue and that they (the plaintiffs) were entitled to resume the occupancy tenancy. set up was that Musammat Gurjo had been married to Mahesha and that this marriage was valid according to custom, (in spite of the fact that she was a Brahmani woman) and that, therefore, the issue of the marriage was legitimate. The Trial Court found that Mahesha, a Khatri, had gone through some sort of ceremony with Musammat Gurjo, a Brahmani, and had lived with her as man and wife ever since, but that such a marriage was illegal under Hindu Law and no custom had been proved which would render it legitimate. The plaintiffs were accordingly granted a decree as prayed.

Pars Ram and the other sons of Mahesha appealed to the District Judge, who after discussing the points raised, came to the conclusion that the factum of marriage itself was doubtful, but that whether an actual marriage had taken place or not it was invalid according to Hindu Law and there was not sufficient proof of any custom validating such a connection.

Pars Ram and his brothers have come up to this Court in second appeal having obtained a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act, III of 1914. I have heard Mr. Bishan Narain on their behalf. The certificate granted relates to a question regarding the validity of a custom, viz., whether a union between a Khatri and a Brahmani woman does or does not constitute a valid marriage. Mr. Bishan Narain quite frankly and properly admitted that such a marriage was not sanctioned by Hindu Law. He also frankly admitted that the evidence on the record did not establish the custom set up. He contended, however, that inasmuch as it has been held that a Hindu Jat may by custom marry a Brahmani woman, a presumption should be raised in favour of a Khatri being able to do the same. He drew my attention to Sahib Ditta v. Bela (1) which relates to Hindu Jats alone. As pointed out in Bhambul Devi v. Narain Singh (2), it would be dangerous to seek to extend custom by such logical processes as analogy. According to Ellis' Notes on Punjab Custom, pages 17-19, the initial presumption in the case of high caste Hindus is in favour of such Hindus following their personal law, and the onus of proving any special or general agricultural custom lies on the person asserting the existence of such. In these circumstances, I am unable to hold that the appellants have made out any case on which it can be held that by custom, general or special, a marriage between a Khatri male and a Brahmani woman is valid.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal but, in the circumstances of the case, allow the parties to bear their own costs.

The mere fact that the Official Assignee, in whom the estate of an insolvent has vested objects before the Revenue Authorities to the entry of plaintiff's name in the Record of Rights in respect of property purchased by the latter from the insolvent prior to his adjudication, does not entitle the Official Assignee to notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code prior to a suit for declaration of right to obtain possession. lost possession owing to Govindji Jivabhai acting in collusion with the second defendant Balkrishna Jagannath Patil. Govindji had been adjudicated an insolvent, and the Official Assignee could have been made a party. It appears that plaintiff intended to make him a party, but in the title of the suit "Govindji Jivabhai insolvent and on behalf of him the Official Assignee" is absolutely wrong. The Official Assignee ought to have been sued personally, so that if the plaintiff wished to sue him, Govindji would have been the first defendant, the Official Assignee, as assignee of the estate and effects of the insolvent Govindji, the second defendant, and Balkrishna Jagannath the third defendant. The suit was decreed in the lower Court. In appeal, the Judge on the merits was in favour of that decision but considered that the plaintiff's suit was bad for want of notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. That provides that where a suit is instituted against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, notice should be given. It is not clear in respect of what act of the Official Assignee the suit was brought. It appears to me that the plaintiff suing on title was justified in filing the suit without giving notice. In the note to section 80 of Mr. Mulla's Civil Procedure Code it is said:

"The only class of suits in which it is necessary to give notice to a public officer is where the suit is founded upon tort, in other words, where the suit is for damages for some wrong inadvertently committed by him in the discharge of his official duties, and no notice is necessary if the suit is founded upon contract or any other cause of action."

What the plaintiff stated in his plaint was, "defendant Govindji has applied in the High Court of Bombay for being adjudged insolvent and all his property is vested in the Official Assignee, who has objected to the entry of the land in the name of the plaintiff in the Record of Rights. That is the act of which really the plaintiff is complaining. He is suing for a declaration of his title to get possession. In my opinion he can do so without having to give notice under section 80. The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the decree of the trial Court restored with costs throughout Crump, J.—I agree. I can find no act on the part of the Official Assignee in this case which comes within the scope of section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. All that is alleged in the plaint is that the Official Assignee objected to the entry of the land in the name of the plaintiff in the Record of Rights. The real cause of action is that the plaintiff being dispossessed is suing to recover possession, with which suit the Official Assignee had nothing whatever to do. If the Official Assignee has taken up a certain attitude with regard to the first defendant's property, it is not such an act as is contemplated by section 80 of the Code, and beyond this attitude on the part of the Official Assignee there is nothing to show that the Official Assignee has any connection with the present suit. It, therefore, appears idle to contend that any notice is required to be given before the suit is instituted.

JUDGMENT.—The issue of an attachment before the service of the notice issued under O. DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Will appointing heir—No provision for widow—Presumption—Residence and maintenance of widow.

Where a Hindu makes a Will in which he deliberately makes no express provision with reference to his wife, it cannot be assumed that his intention was that his wife should be in the same position as if he had died intestate the proper implication, if any, to be made is that he was satisfied that the maintenance and residence out of his estate to which she was entitled would be sufficient maintenance for her.

A Hindu (Jain) made a Will whereby he appointed a certain person as his heir and declared that he should act under the orders of his wife. The Will further provided that if no male issue were born to the appointed heir, and it were necessary to adopt a son, then during the lifetime of the testator's wife the selection should be made with her consent. After the death of the testator the widow brought a suit for declaration of her rights as a Hindu widow, alleging that under the terms of the Will the testator did not dispose of his estate during her lifetime.

Held, that the testator had disposed of the estate to the appointed heir and that the widow was only entitled to rights of maintenance and residence.

Appeal from the High Court Bombay.
Messrs. Chapman and Raikes, for the Appellant.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and Brown, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was brought by the plaintiff, the widow of one Chandmulji, for the determination and declaration of her rights in Chandmulji's estate. Chandmulji was a rich Jain who lived at Rutlam and carried on business there, at Bombay and other places. The property to which he was entitled at his death he held as the last survivor of a joint family. His Will, dated the 16th June 1907, is in the following terms:—

"I alone [and] the owner of the immoveable [and] moveable properties acquired by revered, the most illustrious Magniramji and Bhutsingji Punamchandji Dipchandji Sobhagmulji Chandmul. If a male issue be born to me, then he shall remain [shall be] the owner. Should perchance a son be not born to me, then [in that case] my heir is Chiranjiv Keshrising. Should a heir [i.e.] a son be born to Chiranjiv Keshrisingji, then he shall be the heir in the future. Should perchance no son be born to Chiranjiv Keshrising and should it be necessary to bring [a son] from [some] other place; then during the lifetime of my wife [a son] from our Gotra shall be brought [adopted] with the consent of my wife. Hereafter, in connection with the adoption of a son Chiranjiv Keshrising's wife shall have no authority. I appoint Chiranjiv Keshrising [to be] my heir. He shall act under the orders of my wife. At present I have been carrying on the management of the shops belonging to me in the Rutlam Taluka. Chiranjiv Keshrising shall carry on [the management] in that manner. And he shall live at both places [i.e.] at Kota and Rutlam for half of the period [at one place and for the other half at the other place]. I have, during my lifetime, authority to make alterations in this testamentary writing. [This is] all. The 16th of June in the Christian year 1907.

FOOLCOOVERBAI v. KESHRSINGH.

"The 5th of Jeth Sud of [Samvat] 1964, the day of the week Sunday. The handwriting of Chandmul Bafna himself written at Rutlam."

The defendant and respondent Keshringsh named in the Will is an agnate and claims to be a great-grandson of the brother of Chandmulji's great-grandfather. On the same date that the Will was executed the respondent signed a writing addressed to the deceased to the following effect:—

"Further, if you appoint me your heir, I will conduct myself towards you and the worshipful and respected Kakiji just as a child [conducts] himself towards [and] obey the orders of his parents. I will not ever change in [such my] conduct [towards you]. You may rest assured as to [such conduct on] my part. The most worshipful Hamirmalji Saheb has entrusted [or made over] the ownership of the shop [or shops] under him at Kota to you. So you are the owner [thereof]. I will do [all] work relating to the shop [or shops] under you at Kota according to your orders. I will stay for half the time [i.e., half the year] at Kota and for the [other] half at Rutlam. You have made [your] testamentary writing. I will act agreeably to the same in all respects. If, by the Grace of God, any progeny [son] be born to you, he will be owner of the Rutlam [shop]. There will not be any manner of objection [to the same] on my part. If a son be not born to you, and if you appoint me heir, I will, according to your orders, attend on you and on the respected Kakiji. The son who may be born to me will be heir after me. If perchance a son be not born to me and if it be necessary to take [a boy] in adoption, I will take one in adoption during the lifetime of the worshipful and the respected Kakiji Saheb, according to the directions of the worshipful and respected Kakiji Saheb."

The said Chandmulji died on the 21st June 1907 leaving no issue. The contention on behalf of the plaintiff is that under the terms of the Will the testator did not dispose of his estate during her lifetime; that there was, therefore, an intestacy under which the plaintiff is entitled to a Hindu widow's estate. It was also alleged that having regard to the document executed by the respondent, the property was held in trust for the testator's widow, the plaintiff. This latter contention, however, although raised in the first two reasons set forth in the appellant's case, was not pressed.

The only question to be decided is as to whether on the true construction of the Will there was such an intestacy as aforesaid so as to create a widow's estate. Both the Courts before whom the suit has been held decided that the contention of the plaintiff could not prevail and that she took no interest under the Will. They, however, determined that she was entitled to the right of maintenance and residence, and ordered that it should be referred to the Commissioner of the Court for taking account to ascertain what provision should be made for the maintenance and residence of the plaintiff. The right of the plaintiff to such maintenance and residence was admitted by the respondent. Their Lordships are of opinion, that the contention of the plaintiff fails and that there is no reason for holding that there was any intestacy during the lifetime of the plaintiff.

The words of the Will, "Should perchance a son be not born to me, then in that case my heir is Chiranjiv Keshringsh," and the subsequent words, "I appoint Chiranjiv Keshringsh [to be] my heir," are sufficient words to pass the property from the date of the death of the testator, and although the subsequent terms of the Will as to the adoption of a son with the consent of the testator's wife in the event of no son being born to the respondent, and other expressions used, may appear to give an unusual authority to the wife, there is nothing in them to cut down the express terms of the Will appointing defendant to be the testator's heir. It was urged that the authority given to the wife in the letter procured from the respondent by the testator shows an intention on the part of the testator to leave his wife in a position of a Hindu widow, and that having regard to this provision in the Will, their Lordships ought to assume the testator's intention of desiring his wife to be in the same position as if he had died intestate. Their Lordships are of opinion, that such an intention cannot be implied in a case where the testator has made a Will in which he has deliberately made no express provision with reference to the plaintiff. As before stated, the testator was a rich man, and the proper implication, if any, to be made is that he was satisfied that the maintenance and residence out of his estate to which his wife is admittedly entitled would be sufficient provision for her. Their Lordships think it unnecessary in this suit to make any declaration as to the extent of the rights of the defendant under the said Will, and that it is sufficient to confirm the reference in the order of the 13th January 1919 for taking accounts to ascertain what provision should be made for the maintenance and residence of the plaintiff herein and the rest of the order following upon this declaration. Subject to this alteration, their Lordships think that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v) (d)—Suit for possession by usufructuary mortgagee—Court-fee payable—"Market-value", meaning of.

In a suit for possession as usufructuary mortgagee, the Court-fee payable is on the market-value of the mortgagee interest in the property, i.e., the mortgage-money, on payment of which the property can, at any time, be redeemed.

The expression "market-value," in section 7 (v) (d) of the Court-Fees Act, means the market-value of the subject-matter of the suit.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff

BISWA NATH SINGH V. JUGAL KISHORE.

sued for possession as usufructuary mortgagee. The case is one to which section 7 (v) (d) of the Court-Fees Act applies and the property has to be valued on the market-value. The appellant has valued the property on the amount of the mortgage-money. The office has objected that the valuation is insufficient, having regard to the price which the land would fetch on a sale. On this basis there would be a deficiency in the Court-fee paid by the defendant-appellant in this Court and by the plaintiff in the Court below. The parties contend that the word "market-value" in section 7 of the Court-Fees Act must mean the market-value of the subject-matter of the suit, which in this case is not a proprietary interest but a mere mortgagee interest in the property. The value of this interest cannot be greater than Rs. 200 because it can be redeemed at any time on payment of this amount. This reasoning appears to be sound and there is some authority in favour of it. In Ram Raj Tewari v. Girmandan Bhagat (1) and Radha Prasad Singh v. Pathan Ojah (2) it was held that in a suit for ejectment of a tenant the subject-matter is the value of the tenant's interest which was in dispute. This particular case is now provided for in clause (xi) (cc) of section 7. I, therefore, decide that the Court-fee paid is correct. A date will now be fixed for the hearing of the appeal.

Appeal from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh, dated the 4th January 1919, reversing a judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 10th April 1917.

Messrs. Dunne, K.C., and Dube, instructed by Messrs. Barrow, Rogers & Nevill, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—This is an appeal by Bishwanath Singh, the surviving plaintiff, against a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur and dismissed the suit. The suit is for the possession of a two-thirds share of the village Pakauri in the District of Sitapur.

The other plaintiff in the suit was Musammal Gulab Kuar, who is now dead. She was the widow of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh, who died sonless in or about 1891. He was a Hindu and by caste a Raghubansi, and lived in the village of Bamhnawan in the District of Sitapur and owned the village of Pakauri. The widow adopted on the 17th October 1915 the appellant as a son to her deceased husband, who had given her no authority to adopt a son to him. The question which their Lordships have had to consider in this appeal is whether that adoption was valid; and apparently that was the only question as to which there was a contention in the Appellate Court. The learned Judges of the Appellate Court, in their judgment, said:—

"There are thus two points for decision in this appeal, namely, whether Musammal Gulab Kuar had authority from her husband to adopt, and, secondly, whether failing such authority she had a right of (by) custom to adopt without authority from her husband."

The fact of the adoption is not now disputed and is beyond dispute. The family to which Baldeo Bakhsh Singh belonged was subject to the Law of the Mitakshara as interpreted by the School of Benares, according to which an adoption by a widow of a son to her deceased husband would be invalid if made without an authority to adopt given to her by her husband, unless such an adoption was authorised by a custom of the family.

The evidence that there was such a custom in this family consisted of statements as to the right of widows to adopt sons to their deceased husbands contained in the wajib-ul-araiz of eight villages which had been recorded in the Settlement of 1871, that is about forty-four years before the adoption in question here. One of those villages was the village of Bamhnawan, in which Baldeo Bakhsh Singh had lived; at least two other of the villages were villages in which he or members of his family were interested as proprietors; and the remaining four villages were villages in which members of his caste had been interested, although their relationship to his family was not proved. There was also some oral evidence of witnesses in support of the custom.

In the wajib-ul-araiz of Bamhnawan and in some of the other wajib-ul-araiz it was stated that widows could adopt sons to their deceased husband without having had the authority of their husbands to adopt. In the other wajib-ul-araiz it was simply stated that widows could adopt. In their Lordships' opinion these statements meant the same thing, that is that widows could adopt sons to their husbands although they had had no authority from their husbands to adopt; it was so that the Subordinate Judge construed the wajib-ul-araiz, and he found that the custom was proved. The Appellate Court was of opinion that the mere statement in a wajib-ul-araiz that a widow could adopt meant that a widow, who had the authority of her husband to adopt, could make an adoption to him, and consequently held that the statements as to the custom were not consistent and that the custom was not proved. It did not occur to the learned Judges of the Appellate Court that if the statement that a widow could adopt meant that she could adopt if she had had the authority of her husband to adopt, the statement was not a statement of a special family custom, and was unnecessary, as it would be merely a statement of a right which a Hindu widow of a sonless Hindu enjoys everywhere in India, except possibly in families governed by the Law of the Mithila School.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the custom was proved and that the adoption of the appellant was valid. It may be mentioned that the learned Judges of the Appellate Court did not doubt the credibility of the witnesses as to the custom, whose evidence the Subordinate Judge has accepted as true, but they thought that it had not been proved that these witnesses belonged to the family to which Baldeo Bakhsh Singh had belonged.

This appeal has been heard ex parte, no respondent having appeared. As the appeal has been heard ex parte the Counsel for the appellant has drawn their Lordships' attention to the fact that the learned Judicial Commissioners have not in their judgment expressed a finding on the seventh ground of the appeal to their Court, which was as follows:—"7. That the lower Court should have held that the deed, dated the 10th September 1894, was executed for legal necessity." The deed of the 10th September 1894 was a mortgage of the village Pakauri granted by the widow while she was in possession of a Hindu widow's interest in the estate. On that mortgage a decree for sale was made and at the sale the two-thirds share in the village now claimed by this appellant was purchased by some of the defendants to this suit. The Subordinate Judge had found in this suit that the mortgage was not made for necessity. The learned Judicial Commissioners said in their judgment that: "They (the defendants) denied the adoption and they denied the widow's power to adopt. They also pleaded that even if the adoption was proved, it could not affect the interest acquired by the purchasers before the adoption. On this last pleading no issue was framed and nothing has been said in argument in appeal. It must, therefore, be taken to have dropped." The question as to whether the mortgage was or was not granted for necessity was involved in the question as to whether the purchasers at the sale under the decree had acquired title by their purchase... In their Lordships' opinion the learned Judicial Commissioners were, under the circumstances, justified in holding, as they did, that the only question which remained for them to decide in the appeal was the question as to the validity of the adoption.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed with costs, that the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner should be set aside with costs and the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored and affirmed.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued to recover possession by redemption of the property described in clause (c) of paragraph 2 of the plaint. The properties originally belonged to Bhauddin who left a widow Hemida Bili, a son Daud, and two daughters who are plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. After Bhauddin's death, a suit was filed by a creditor of his and only Daud was made a party, but as he was a minor Hamida Bibi, his mother, was impleaded as his guardian and filed a written statement on his behalf. In execution of the decree which was passed in favour of that creditor, certain property belonging to the estate of Bhauddin was put up for sale. That property had already been mortgaged to one Abas in 1878, so that the heirs of Bhauddin were only entitled to the equity of redemption which was purchased by Ali, father of Abas. The present defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the sons of Abas. A decree for redemption was passed in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 by the Trial Court, and that has been confirmed in appeal.

The main question is whether the daughters of Bhauddin were deprived of their right to the property by the decree passed against Daud and the subsequent sale. Ordinarily speaking, they would not be bound by the decree in a suit to which they were not parties, nor would their interest in their father's estate pass by the sale in execution of that decree. That was decided by a Bench of this Court in Mirkha Imamkha v. Bhagirathi Mahadeo Abhyankar (1). The learned Judges in that case considered the decisions in Khurshetbibi v. Keso Vinayek (2) and Davalara v. Bhimaji Dhondo (3). Mr. Justice Heaton said: "My learned brother and myself have considered the matter most carefully and have come to the conclusion that it would not be incumbent on us to follow the case of Khurshetbibi v. Keso Vinayek (2), if that case be held to affirm that the theory of substantial representation derived from the Hindu Law applies to Muhammadans. For, to follow that case, if it so decides, would be to accept without any stated reason for doing so, the application to Muhammadans of a rule evolved out of Hindu Law; and to do this would, we think, be to set aside the principles underlying the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Isa Ahmed Mograria v. Abhramji Ahmadji (4)."

We think it is advisable to follow the latest decision on the point, which is also supported by the opinion of Sir Roland Wilson in his Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 3rd Edition. See also paragraphs 566, 567 of F. B. Tyabji's Principles of Muhammadan Law. The plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 will, therefore, be entitled to redeem, but the decree as drawn up by the Trial Court is too wide as these plaintiffs would only be entitled to redeem to the extent of their shares in the estate of Bhauddin, which would be 7/32 each. The case must go back to the Trial Court to ascertain the exact amount which they must pay, and what properties should be redeemed by such payments, as there are five properties in suit, and we are told that only four of these properties were purchased by the defendants at the sale in execution of the decree in Suit No. 691 of 1880. If that is the case, the fifth property is only subject to the mortgage; Exhibit 84. We do not know whether it really makes very much difference because plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are entitled to consider that the sale does not in any way affect their interests. Therefore, all five properties may be taken as subject to the mortgage and liable to be redeemed. On the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 paying the redemption money they will be entitled to be placed in joint possession with the defendants. The plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 will be entitled to their costs in this Court and in the Court below. Liberty to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 to apply when they pay the money in execution for partition.

115—Order staying suit—Revision.

RAM CHAND-DIWAN CHAND v. PRITHVI CHAND & CO.

An order staying a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code is not a decision of a case within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and is not open to revision. [p. 250, col. 2.]

(Case-Law discussed.)

In order to come to a finding as to whether the requirements of section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code have or have not been fulfilled, the Court is bound to determine certain matters mentioned in the section, and if it does, it cannot be said that it has acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction or that it has failed to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in it by law. [p. 250, col. 2; p. 251, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44, Act IX of 1919, for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 4th December 1922, staying the trial of the suit under sections 10 and 151, Civil Procedure Code, pending the decision of the Karachi case.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act for revision of an order passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Rawalpindi staying the trial of a suit under sections 10 and 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. The petitioners brought a suit for a declaration that a certain award was invalid, and that an injunction be issued against the defendants restraining them from enforcing that award. The defendants contended that a suit between the same parties in which the matter in issue was directly and substantially the same was pending in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner at Karachi and that, therefore, the suit at Rawalpindi, which was subsequently instituted, should be stayed in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Senior Subordinate Judge has given effect to this plea, and has ordered stay of the suit. The plaintiffs have applied for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge.

A preliminary objection is raised before me by the respondents that this is not a case in which this Court can interfere in revision with reference to the terms of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. In order to bring the matter within this section, the first thing to be determined is whether there is a "case", which has been decided by a Court. It is contended for the respondents that, there is no such case, inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge has not decided anything at all but that all what he has done is to stay the further progress of the suit till such time as the other suit at Karachi is decided. It is urged that this is merely an interlocutory order, and that this does not decide any of the matters in controversy between the parties. Pandit Sheo Narain, on the other hand, contends that section 10 is wholly inapplicable; and that in ordering stay of the suit the Court has either acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction or failed to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in it by law. In either case he contends that the decision is one which involves a question of jurisdiction and that, therefore, all the requirements of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act are fulfilled. A large number of authorities has been cited on both sides, and I must confess that the question is not free from difficulty. I have carefully read all the authorities cited, and have taken time to pronounce my orders. The conclusion at which I have arrived is that the preliminary objection is well-founded, and that it must be held that the Subordinate Judge's order does not amount to a decision of a case.

It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court in Pandit Rama Kant v. Pandit Rajdeo (1) that the word "case" in section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (1882) does not necessarily, in every case, mean the whole case but may mean a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy, or a different procedure, is provided by the Code. This definition of the word "case" was unhesitatingly accepted in a later case reported as Mahtab Rai v. Kaman Lal (2) and it was held in that case that the meaning of the word could not be extended any further. In Sawan Mal v. Kanhaya Lal-Gopal Das (3) Mr. Justice Martineau held that the decision of a Court on the point of jurisdiction, with regard to which no special procedure is laid down in the Code, is not a decision of a "case." In the case of Buddhoo Lal v. Mewia Ram (4) a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court have adopted the same view, and have held that the decision of a Subordinate Court that it had jurisdiction and that a suit was cognisable by that Court is not open to revision, inasmuch as no case has been decided by the Court below within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. In Ishar Das-Dharm Chand of Amritsar v. Buta Mal-Durga Das of Amritsar (5) an order refusing to stay a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code was held not open to revision on the same grounds. The learned Judge in that case followed a recent decision of Mr. Justice Banerji in Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sundar Lal (6) in which it was laid down that an application under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code for the stay of a suit is not a "case" and that an order for stay passed on that application is not a decision of a case within the meaning of that word in section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. In Mela Ram v. Rikhi Kesh (7) Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof held in similar circumstances that a revision from an order staying a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code was not competent, inasmuch as it was not the decision of a case within the meaning of section 115.

Pandit Sheo Narain, however, relies upon Ramachandram Pillai v. Neelambal Achi (8), Bishen Devi v. Bishen Chand (9), Paira Mal v. Raj Narain (10), Ratan Lal v. Bala Parshad (11), Sivaprosad Ram v. Tricomdas Coverje Bhoja (12), Sital Singh v. Silla Bakhsh Singh (13) and Bibhuti Bhusan Pal v. Lalit Mohun Pal (14), in which it is urged that a contrary view has been taken. In my opinion, almost all of these authorities are distinguishable and are not of any material assistance to the plaintiffs. The case reported as Ramachandram Pillai v. Neelambal Achi (8) is a decision of the Madras High Court by Mr. Justice Phillips and relates to a case where a Subordinate Court had refused to stay the suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. A revision was preferred against this order to the High Court and it was held by the learned Judge that cases in which a Subordinate Court had refused to stay proceedings under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code were to be distinguished from those in which proceedings had been ordered to be stayed. The case of Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sundar Lal (6) was distinguished on this ground alone. The learned Judge observed that that was a case in which the order sought to be revised was an order of stay and not of a refusal to stay and that the Court had thus not assumed jurisdiction which it did not possess. In my opinion, this authority is wholly inapplicable and, if it helps at all, it helps the respondents and not the petitioners.

The case reported as Bishen Devi v. Bishen Chand (9) is certainly in point. It was held in this case by Mr. Justice Martineau that an order staying proceedings under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, is an order deciding a case within the meaning of section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act and is, therefore, open to revision. The weight of this authority, however, has been considerably shaken by a later judgment of the same Judge reported as Ishar Das-Dharm Chand of Amritsar v. Buta Mal-Durga Das of Amritsar (5) in which an order refusing to stay a suit under section 10 was held not open to revision on the ground that it was not the decision of a case within the meaning of section 115. I wholly fail to understand why an order staying a suit should stand on a different footing from an order refusing to stay a suit. Both are cases for which no independent remedy, or a different procedure, is provided by the Civil Procedure Code, and it appears to me that there is no difference in essence in the two orders.

In Paira Mal v. Raj Narain (10) it was held that before an order, under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, can be made, it must be shown that the Courts in which the two suits are pending are of concurrent jurisdiction in the sense that the suit to be stayed could be tried by the Court in which the first suit was instituted. The correctness of this authority is not disputed. In the present case there can be no question that the Court of the Judicial Commissioner at Karachi would be fully competent to try the case which has now been stayed by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Rawalpindi. This authority, therefore, is not at all in point.

The next case relied on is Ratan Lal v. Bala Parshad (11). In this case there was no question as to the competency of a High Court to entertain a revision from an order staying a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. The case related to an entirely different state of things, and it was held that, where a lower Court has passed an entirely illegal order, the Chief Court will set it aside in the exercise of its inherent powers of revision.

Next, reliance was placed on Sivaprosad Ram v. Tricomdas Coverje Bhoja (12). This case is certainly not in point. In this case two suits were instituted one after the other. An application was made under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code for stopping the second suit. The Judge passed an order staying the suit holding that the decision in the previous suit would operate as res judicata between the two defendants in that case and would, therefore, bar the second suit. The High Court on revision held that the matter in issue in the two suits was not the same, that the parties were not litigating under the same title and that section 10 was wholly inapplicable. It further held that the Court had no jurisdiction to decide the question of res judicata in a proceeding under section 10, and that its only jurisdiction was to stop the second suit if the requirements of section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code had been fulfilled. In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has given no finding on the question of res judicata. On the contrary, after an examination of both the suits, it has come to the conclusion that the matter in issue in the two suits is identical, that the parties are litigating under the same title, and that the case is fully covered by section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. I am unable to understand how the authority relied on is of any assistance to the plaintiffs.

It may further be observed that this case was relied on by the Counsel for the petitioner in the case reported as Mela Ram v. Rikhi Kesh (7) in support of his contention that a revision was competent. Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, however, followed Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sundar Lal (6) in preference to this authority.

The case reported as Bibhuti Bhusan Pal v. Lalit Mohun Pal (14) is not in point either. In that case a Subordinate Court had acted under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. The High Court held that where a Court acts under that section in a case where it should not have done, it is competent to the High Court to interfere and set matters right. In the present case the Court has acted mainly under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, and section 151 has been relied on only in a subsidiary manner.

The last case on which reliance is placed by Pandit Sheo Narain is Sital Singh v. Sital Bakhsh Singh (13). It was held in that case that an order under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code staying a suit amounts to a decision that the Court has, under existing circumstances, no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the suit and that, if wrongly passed, it refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court and is, therefore, open to revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is a decision of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court and follows Sivaprosad Ram v. Tricomdas Coverje Bhoja (12), which, in my opinion, is wholly inapplicable to the facts of the present case. Moreover, this judgment entirely loses sight of the definition of the word "case" as given in the Full Bench authority of this Court reported as Pandit Rama Kant v. Pandit Rajdeo (1). It is impossible to hold that an order staying a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code is "a decision of a case" within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code any more than a decision by a Subordinate Court in a case in which the only question is whether it has or has not jurisdiction to go on with a suit. In order to come to a finding as to whether the requirements of section 10 have or have not been fulfilled, the Court is bound to determine certain matters mentioned in the section, and if it does; I am wholly unable to understand how it can be said that the Court has acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction or that it has failed to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in it by law. In my opinion, therefore, the preliminary objection must prevail, and it must be held that the order of the Subordinate Judge does not amount to a decision of a case.

Accordingly, I dismiss the application for revision with costs.

The power-of-attorney was on a printed form, bearing the name in print of A., another Pleader who had nothing to do with the case. A.'s name was not scored out nor was that of J. entered, although the power was signed by J.:

Held, that in view of the fact that no one but J. was intended to be employed and that he accepted the employment, the omission of his name from the power-of-attorney was due to an oversight and amounted to a mere irregularity which did not vitiate his employment or the power-of-attorney.

Mr. D. T. Mangahnurli, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and J. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is not disputed that on the merits as found by the lower Appellate Court there must be a decree in favour of the plaintiff against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to the extent of the assets of the deceased Krishnarao in their possession. The question to be decided here is whether the dismissal of the suit by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the plaint was not properly presented is correct.

The plaint is signed by the plaintiff and Mr. Jatkar who described himself as "Pleader for plaintiff." It was presented by Mr. Jatkar on the 25th April 1919 and was returned apparently to Mr. Jatkar to be re-presented with the plaintiff's account-books. It was represented by Mr. Jatkar with the books on the 12th May 1919. Mr. Jatkar filed a power of attorney which is signed by the plaintiff and is accepted by him. The power of attorney is on a printed form in the name of "Mr. M. S. Aane, B.A., B.L., Vakil, Yeotmal." This name is also in print. Mr. Jatkar's name is not entered in the power anywhere. The names of the parties in the power of attorney appear to be written in the same hand as the contents of the plaint.

It seems to me that the omission to enter Mr. Jatkar's name is only due to an oversight and is accidental. I feel unable to accept the suggestion that the power of attorney was really given to Mr. Aane whose name appears in it. If in the power of attorney the space for the Pleader's name had been left blank and Mr. Aane's name had been entered in manuscript that might have been a ground for inferring that Mr. Aane was meant to be appointed. As it is, no importance can be attached to the entry of Mr. Aane's name. Mr. Aane has had nothing to do with the presentation of the plaint or the conduct of the suit. He has not accepted the power of attorney nor does it appear that it was ever delivered to him. It is not unlikely that a copy of the printed form of power of attorney was borrowed from Mr. Aane or his clerk and by oversight Mr. Aane's name was not scored out and that of Mr. Jatkar entered. The fact that Aane's name is in print must have helped the oversight. If a blank space had been left for the Pleader's name the oversight might not have so easily occurred. It is clear from the circumstances of the case that none but Mr. Jatkar was intended to be employed and that he accepted the employment. The omission, I think, is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate his employment or the power of attorney, vide Shambu Nath v. Badri Das (1). I hold that the plaint was properly presented. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and order that a decree be passed in the favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed in the plaint with costs in all Courts against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to the extent of the assets of the deceased Krishnarao in their possession. Respondent No. 2 tried to support the other respondents' case. I award her no costs.

Messrs. Lowndes and Dube, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne and C. Bagram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case have been carefully investigated both by the Subordinate Judge and by the High Court, with the result that many of the points originally in dispute are now determined, and the two that remain depend upon the true inference to be drawn from ascertained circumstances and not from the consideration of what those circumstances may be. Upon these two questions there is a difference of opinion between the Subordinate Judge who decided in favour of the appellants and the High Court, by whom his judgment in this respect was reversed. The nature of the points involved will be best understood after a statement of the relevant facts.

Lal Mohan Pal, who died on the 23rd February 1891, originally carried on business with one Paju Lal in the sale of yarns and cloths. This business ended in 1882 and therefrom Lal Mohan Pal started a similar business, the Head Office being at Dacca, with branch places of business at Calcutta and elsewhere. He was, in this business, assisted by his three sons, Madan Mohan Pal, Jaga Mohan Pal and Radha Gobinda Pal. After the death of Lal Mohan Pal, this business was carried on by the three sons jointly as a joint family business, and Madan Mohan Pal asserted that the original capital of the business was largely composed of monies, amounting to Rs. 16,000 and upwards, due to him for services rendered to the original firm. The third son, Radha Gobinda Pal, died on the 1st November 1902, having made a Will, of which he appointed his brother, Jaga Mohan Pal, as the executor. He had no sons living at the date of his Will or of his death, and only one wife, Kusum Kumari, who survived him. He conferred upon his wife the power to adopt a son, and provided that if a son was adopted and died within fifteen years unmarried or childless, his wife should adopt another son, and if he died in similar conditions she should adopt a third. He gave his wife the yearly profits of all his immoveable property, except certain monthly allowances in favour of his daughter, such profits to be received by her till the adopted son should attain twenty-one years, and thereafter one-half of the profits was to be received by his wife and one-half by the son. After the death of the wife all the immoveable property was to go to the adopted son, with the provision that until such son had attained twenty-one, the estate should remain in the hands of his executor. He gave all his movable property or karbar to Jaga Mohan Pal, and directed that after realising the debts of the karbar he should pay out of the balance Rs. 2,000 to his wife for performing meritorious acts, Rs. 500 to his spiritual preceptor, Rs. 2,000 to the idol Iswar Radha Syamsurder Jiu, and Rs. 600 to his three sisters, and such sum as would accrue as profit on the investment of Rs. 2,500 for chaitable purposes. He died in 1902 and Probate of the Will was granted to the executor. A dispute subsequently arose between Jaga Mohan Pal, the executor, and Madan Mohan Pal, the eldest son of Lal Mohan Pal. This dispute was due to the assertion by Madan Mohan Pal that he had originally contributed to the business Rs. 16,942 in his father's lifetime, and this he claimed as his share in the original joint capital of the business. This was finally settled by the defendant abandoning his claim, and both he and Jaga Mohan gave up their intention of opening separate businesses and the joint business was continued.

Following upon this, Madan Mohan Pal gave his third son, Jadu Nath Pal, in adoption to his brother Jaga Mohan Pal; and the fourth son, Preonath Pal, as adopted son to the wife of Radha Gobinda Pal. Jadu Nath Pal died in December 1906, and following upon his death a breach occurred in the family so that Madan Mohan Pal took his meals separately, gave notice to the defendants dissolving the joint family business, and finally instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen claiming that he was entitled on partition to a two-thirds share of the joint properties, the moveables and the business.

The property in respect of which this claim was made was separated under a variety of heads, but all that need now be considered were those that were contained in schedule 3 and schedule 5 (kha). The first included immoveable property that had been acquired after Radha Gobinda's death, and the second, investments, Government paper, and houses. In respect of these the Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff only one-third and the High Court two-thirds, the present appeal being brought by the widow and Preonath, claiming that a one-third was all that he was entitled to obtain.

The real question for determination, therefore, is whether these properties were acquired under circumstances which made them part of the joint family estate in which the widow and the adopted son were entitled to a one-third, or whether they belonged to the business which, after the death of Radha Gobinda, was owned as to two-thirds by the plaintiff, and one-third by Radha Mohan. It is important to remember that the parties are governed by the Daya-baga Law by virtue of which it was possible for the deceased brother to make a valid bequest of his share, but except to the extent to which that Will affected the joint family it remained joint, with the result that, apart from the business, the immoveables and all the property not actually included in the gift to Jaga Mohan Pal was joint family property. The business was, of course, under the control of the two elder brothers, and it appears that from the date of the death of the third brother no alteration whatever was made in the way in which the accounts were kept. The payments in respect of obtaining the Probate of the Will, which though not great in extent are several in number, were all made out of the business accounts. The payment of the monies for the Probate itself was made in the same manner; but the legacy of Rs. 2,000 to the widow, and the like legacy to her as shebait of the idols, remained unpaid. The income received from the real estate was all through shown under separate heads and nowhere distinguished as between the business and the joint estate, and although it is said that the income from the latter was only Rs. 1,100 a year, yet none the less it was all treated in the same way.

It is quite true, as has been pointed out; that having regard to the nature of the items being carefully specified, both in respect of receipt and payment, it would have been possible to have prepared from the books a further account showing how the respective estates stood in relation to each other, and it is also said that the actual monies paid to the widow and the adopted son exceeded the amount of their interest in the joint estate of which they were members; while, finally, and this is perhaps the strongest point of all, the method of blending the two sets of items was continued by Rajanikanta, even after the dispute had begun. These circumstances all deserve consideration, but their Lordships do not think that they have sufficient weight to displace the general presumption that arises when members of a joint family, who have control over the joint estate, blend that estate with property in which they have separate interests.

In a case before this Board, Sura Narain v. Ratan Lal (1) it was pointed out that the effect in such transactions was to cause the whole property to become joint and the only real distinction that can be drawn between that case and the present is that there separate estate was brought into a joint family account instead of as in this case the joint family property being brought into the separate accounts. Their Lordships are unable to see that this distinction is sufficient to defeat the appellant's claim. The real question for determination is what is the true conclusion to be drawn when people united, as the present parties were, by bonds of close relationship and living as a joint family, drawn for the joint family expenses out of a fund enriched by other contributions. They think that the result is accurately stated by the Subordinate Judge, in the following words:—

"If the members of a joint Hindu family confuse the incomes of their joint properties with their separate properties, their intention presumably is that the properties acquired with such mixed up funds are for the benefit of the joint family. It should be noticed that not only these acquisitions and improvements made in this case with the amalgamated and confused funds, but the incomes arising from such acquisition and improvements were again partly spent also for joint family expenses and purposes, and the balances were again mixed up and confused from year to year to acquire properties and make improvements."

Indeed, the fact urged on behalf of the respondents that the joint family expenses exceeded all the property which, according to their contentions, was properly joint in their Lordships' opinion tells against the respondents instead of in their favour. They think, therefore, that the decree of the High Court should be varied by providing that of the Items Nos. 1—3 in schedule 5 (kha) the plaintiff gets only one-third as also in schedule 3, and that the provision in said decree for payment of interest on the sum Rs. 4,000 be omitted. The cross-appeal will be dismissed. The appellants are entitled to their costs of these appeals, but their Lordships will not vary the order as to costs in the High Court, and they will humbly advise His Majesty to this effect.

Bombay High Court Rules, 1922, r. 215, applicability of—Partnership, denial of—Originating summons.

Rule 215 of the Rules of the Bombay High Court, 1922, Original Side, as amended, has no application where a partnership is denied, the question, therefore, as to the existence of the partnership itself cannot be determined by originating summons.

Sir Thomas Strangman, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Selvad, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an originating summons for reliefs usual in a partnership action. The defendant denies the partnership, and it is contended on his behalf that the question as to the existence of the partnership is not one that can be disposed of on an originating summons. The correspondence annexed to the written statement shows that the plaintiff was aware at the date of the institution of the suit that the defendant had denied the partnership. For the plaintiff it is contended that the amendment of the rule as to the originating summons in partnership cases indicates an intention that such a question can now be determined by originating summons.

The old rule 213 was as follows:—

"When the existence of the partnership or the right to, or the fact of the dissolution thereof, is not in dispute, any partner in a firm or his representatives may take out an originating summons returnable before the Judge sitting in Chambers against his partners, or former partners, or their representatives (if any) for the purpose of having the partnership dissolved (if it be still subsisting) and for the purpose of taking the accounts of, and winding up, such partnership."

This rule was amended in January 1919, and it now appears among the High Court Rules as rule 215. It is as follows:—

"Any partner in a firm or his representatives may take out an originating summons returnable before the Judge sitting in Chambers against his partners, or former partners, or their representatives (if any) for the purpose of having the partnership dissolved (if it be still subsisting) and for the purpose of taking the accounts of, and winding-up, such partnership and for the determination of any question arising in such partnership whether to be dissolved or wound-up or not."

On comparing the two rules it will be observed that the words "when the existence of the partnership or the right to, or the fact of the dissolution thereof, is not in dispute," which occurred in the old rule, are omitted, and the words "and for the determination of any question arising in such partnership whether to be dissolved or wound-up or not" are added.

It is argued for the plaintiff that the omission of the words "when the existence of a partnership is not in dispute" has the effect of bringing within the scope of the rule questions as to the existence of a partnership. I am unable to accede to this contention. Rule 212 begins with the words "A vendor or purchaser"; rule 214 begins with the words:—"Any mortgagee or mortgagor"; the present rule begins with the words: "Any partner." As to rule 212 it was held by Pratt, J., in an unreported case (Ebrahim Haji Mahomed v. Haji Tar Mahomed Abba Shariff [(1921) O. C. J. Suit No. 221 of 1921 decided by Scott, J.] that it did not apply where either party denied the agreement for sale. That rule does not contain the words "where the fact of the agreement for sale is not in dispute." As to rule 214 it has never been suggested that it applies where the factum of a mortgage is in dispute. Rule 209, clause (g), provides for the determination by originating summons of "any question arising in the administration of the estate or trust." As to this rule it has never been held that it applies where a trust is denied. On the other hand, it was held under the corresponding English rule (Order IV, r. 3 (g)), where an action was brought by writ to determine whether the defendant was a trustee of a settlement and for his discharge and for the appointment of a new trustee, that the action was rightly brought by writ, and not by originating summons: Elworthy v. Harvey (1).

I think that rule 215 does not apply where the existence of a partnership is in dispute. Almost all the rules as to originating summons are a reproduction of the corresponding English rules. There is no rule corresponding with the old rule 213 or the new rule 215 among the Rules of the Supreme Court. The words "when the existence of the partnership is not in dispute" seem to have been used in the old rule ex majore cautela. In omitting these words from rule 215, the rule has been brought into line with rule 212 as to vendor and purchaser and rule 214 as to mortgagor and mortgagee. The summons is, therefore, discharged with costs Counsel certified.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 7,

ISLAMAM V. MAQBULAN.

8—Appointment of guardian—Notice to interested party not given; effect of—Person other than applicant appointed—Separate application, whether necessary.

It is open to a person who should have been, but who has not been, served with notice of an application for appointment as guardian, to object in revision to an order granting such application.

Sections 7 and 8 of the Guardians and Wards Act do not necessarily require that, when once proceedings for the appointment of a guardian of a minor have been properly instituted, a separate application should be taken from the person whom the Court appoints, though in practice it may be usual to take one.

Mr. J. K. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Ayub, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order appointing Musammam Maqbulan guardian of the property of Musammam Saghir-un-nissa, the four year old daughter of Mubarak Ali, deceased. Musammam Maqbulan is the sister of Mubarak Ali and the aunt of the child.

One Ikram Hussain originally applied for guardianship and notices were issued. At the hearing it was found that he was an unsuitable person. The present appellant, Musammam Islamam, is the child's mother. She was represented at the hearing but she was found to be unsuitable, having married a second husband and having on the death of Mubarak Ali taken possession of his entire property and mortgaged it. From among the persons available the learned District Judge selected the respondent as the person best fitted to act as guardian and appointed her, taking security from her for the due administration of the property. Against this order Musammam Islamam appeals.

It is admitted on her behalf that she is disqualified from being appointed guardian herself. At the hearing it was suggested that either her own mother, the child's maternal grandmother, Musammam Ghariban, should be appointed or an Officer of the Court. She now asks for the order to be set aside and either a fresh enquiry be made or Musammam Ghariban appointed as guardian. The grounds on which she attacks the order are:—

(1) That no notice of the proceedings was sent to Musammam Ghariban.

(2) That no evidence was taken as to Musammam Maqbulan's fitness,

(3) That Musammam Maqbulan has an interest adverse to the minor, and

(4) That no formal application was taken from Musammam Maqbulan.

I very much doubt the bona fides of the appellant. The appellant's efforts are mainly directed to securing the appointment of her mother Musammam Ghariban, but Musammam Ghariban herself has not so far shown any interest in the proceedings. She has not objected to the appointment of Musammam Maqbulan nor has she made any application to be appointed herself. It is true that she was not served with notice of Ikram Hussain's application as she should have been, but it has been held by this Court in Jhandeshur v. Baij Nath (1) that it is open to a person on whom notice should have been served, to come forward and object in revision to the order passed. The guardianship of the property usually vests in the father's relations and if Musammam Islamam is unsuitable it is prima facie probable that her mother would be so. The latter is, moreover, said to be sixty years of age.

As regards the alleged hostile interest, it consists of the fact that the respondent and another sister of Mubarak Ali filed a suit against the appellant and her transferees to recover their share of Mubarak Ali's estate. In their plaint they wrongfully stated the share to which they were entitled as seven annas. In fact, however, they entered into a compromise by which they accepted less than their legal share. This does not show that the respondent is in any way an unfit person to be guardian. Sections 7 and 8 of the Guardians and Wards Act do not necessarily require that when once proceedings have been instituted at a proper application a separate application should be taken from the person whom the Court appoints, though certainly in practice it is more usual to take one. In my opinion the irregularity which occurred in not serving notice on Musammam Ghariban would not justify me in the circumstances of this case in setting aside the order which has been passed.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal. I make no order as to costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Confession—Certificate by Magistrate, whether conclusive.

A certificate recorded by a Magistrate under section 35 of the Evidence Act as to the voluntariness of a confession made to him is good prima facie evidence of the fact which it records. The certificate, however, is not conclusive and the facts may be proved which may lead the Court to think that the confession was not really voluntary. [p. 258, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated the 12th October 1921.

Mr. St. G. Jackson, for the Accused.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Nar Singh has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Hardoi and the Assessors under section 302, Indian Penal Code, of the murder on 3rd August last of Chiranjit Singh, a boy of four, the son of Mathura Singh, a Sub-Inspector of Police at Hardoi. The accused was employed as a servant by Mathura Singh. Three days before this occurrence Mathura Singh had beaten the accused in connection with a loss of a bunch of keys of which the Sub-Inspector had made a formal report at the Police Station. On the day of the occurrence Mathura Singh was absent on an enquiry. About 7 o'clock in the morning the accused was sent out with a perambulator to take the deceased child for an airing and also, it is said, to buy some pan in the bazar. Accused was seen by two witnesses somewhere about 11 A. M. wheeling the child on the road named the Circular Road. Shortly afterwards, another witness, Thakuri Singh, whose field is near the Sandi Road, saw the accused making off through the fields alone. The witness asked him where he was going and accused said, he was going on business. The Sub-Inspector returned from his enquiry between 10 and 11 A. M. and found that neither the accused nor the boy had returned. He instituted a search and not having found any trace of the boy by 2 o'clock he made a formal report at the Police Station. In the course of the afternoon a Constable named Imdad Ali and a student named Nazim Hussain, who were among the persons who had been sent in search of the child, found the boy's dead body in the ditch at the side of the Circular Road in about a foot of water. The perambulator was standing at the edge of the road. A gold tawiz which the boy had been wearing was still round the child's neck. This excludes the hypothesis of a murder for the sake of the child's ornaments. The body was sent for post mortem examination, which was carried out by the Civil Surgeon on the following morning.

The accused was arrested at Bareilly Railway Station on the morning of August 5th. He was about to leave Bareilly by the narrow gauge train when he was discovered. The Constable who arrested him took him to the Railway Police Station. From there he was sent to the Prosecuting Inspector for the purposes of being brought before a Magistrate, and on the same day was placed before Mr. R. O. Douglas, a Magistrate of the First Class, at Bareilly. He then made a confession in which he admitted throttling the boy and then thrusting him into the water in the drain at the side of the road. He says that the boy was not quite dead and that he ducked him under the water once or twice and then left him and took to his heels. The reason he gave for killing the boy was that Mathura Singh owed him a year's wages and when he demanded it Mathura Singh had beaten him and broken two canes over him. This confession, as will be seen, the accused afterwards retracted.

The learned Counsel for the accused has argued, and it has been his main argument in the case, that the confession is not admissible in evidence. This argument is not based on there being anything whatever in the evidence to suggest that the confession was not voluntarily made, but solely on the fact that the only question and answer recorded by the Magistrate before he commenced to record the confession was—

NAR SINGH V. EMPEROR.

Q.—Do you wish to make your statement voluntarily? Has any one threatened or induced you?

A.—I wish to make my statement voluntarily. No one has threatened or induced me.

Q.—What do you wish to say?

Counsel has argued that, in order to render the confession admissible, the record must show that the accused was told that he would not be remanded to Police custody and warned that whatever he said would be used in evidence against him. We do not say that these things may not usefully be done, but we decline to add anything to the plain provisions of the law. The sole ground on which, under section 24 of the Evidence Act, a confession may be rejected as irrelevant, is that it appears to the Court to have been caused by an inducement, threat or promise proceeding from a person in authority. Section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure forbids a Magistrate to record a confession under that section unless "upon questioning the person making it he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily" and requires him to append to the confession, if made, a certificate that he has satisfied himself that it was made voluntarily. The Magistrate in this case has recorded that certificate, and the certificate is, under section 35 of the Evidence Act, good prima facie evidence of the fact which it records. Formal questions and answers appearing on the record are not the only means by which a Magistrate can judge whether the accused before him is speaking of his own free will. It is true that the certificate is not conclusive. Facts may be proved which may lead the Court to think that the confession was not really voluntary and in such a case the Court will reject it. The case of Kandhai v. Emperor (1) relied on by the appellant's Counsel is of this nature. Here there are no such facts. The accused was altogether outside the jurisdiction of the Hardoi Police when he was arrested. He was taken before a Railway Sub-Inspector who was in no way concerned in the investigation, and from there sent to the Bareilly Prosecuting Inspector who placed him before the Magistrate. The man who took him to the Court was the Constable who had traced and arrested him but the Magistrate in recording the confession drew the accused's attention to the fact that no policeman was present in the Court while it was recorded. Even when the accused retracted his confession before the Committing Magistrate he did not say that it had been induced by any threat or promise. He admitted making half the statement and suggested that the other half was recorded by the Magistrate without his ever having made it. He denied that he had said anything before Mr. Douglas about the killing of the boy. It was only when the case reached the Sessions Court that he concocted a story about the Constable having given him julebis to eat and told him that nothing would happen to him and thereby induced him to say before the Joint Magistrate anything which the Constable wished him to say.

The story told by the accused before the Committing Magistrate was that, as he had been out with the boy for a long time and it was getting late he wheeled the perambulator at a rapid pace in order to get home quickly as a result of which the perambulator collided with a piece of kankar and the boy fell out. The kankar pierced the boy below the ear. The child began to move his hands and feet but did not speak. The accused got frightened, left the perambulator and the child, and ran away. In the Sessions Court he said that he could not remember what statement he had made to the Committing Magistrate. When asked by the Judge to show how the boy fell out of the perambulator he said that he, the accused, had sat down at the side of the road to make water. Meanwhile, the boy leaned out of the perambulator and fell on the ground on his nose which bled profusely. Accused put him back into the perambulator and left him sleeping there. As the boy had been injured he ran away through fear of Mathura Singh. These stories are inconsistent with each other and neither of them is at all probable. If it was the accused's case that the child had been killed by the fall from the perambulator one could understand his getting frightened and running away, but in each case, though the versions are different, he says that the boy was injured but alive. If the child was alive even if it had hurt itself seriously it would be most unnatural conduct for accused to run off and take the train to Bareilly leaving the child unattended on the road.

The Medical evidence is consistent with the accused's confession and inconsistent with the stories which he afterwards put forward. The Civil Surgeon found the brain and both lungs slightly congested and both chambers of the heart empty. He says that the post mortem signs did not warrant any positive expression of opinion as to the cause of death. He found no signs of violence on the deceased's throat but he says that any redness caused by the pressure of fingers or anything soft on the throat might have disappeared after death, and that from the history of the case he considered suffocation to be the most probable cause of death. He also says that if the child was suffocated by closing the mouth and nostrils with cloth or with the hand this might have occurred without leaving any sign of injury noticeable on a post mortem examination. Death was not due to drowning. He found a tiny abrasion in front of the right ear which, in his opinion, might have been caused by a finger nail. He considers that it was too tiny to be likely to have been caused by the child falling from the perambulator and knocking against a stone, though it is possible that it might have been caused by coming in contact with a small bit of kankar. He is of opinion that a fall from a perambulator sufficient to cause the death of the child would probably have left distinct signs of injuries which would have been detected at the post mortem. Accused's Counsel has asked us to reject the Medical evidence on the ground that Medical Text Books speak of the possibility of death occurring from shock without external injuries. Such cases no doubt have occurred but that is no reason for discrediting the Civil Surgeon's evidence as to the particular case which came under his own observation. We note, moreover, that the Civil Surgeon's opinion as to the possibility of a child being strangled or suffocated without there being any marks visible after death is confirmed by Lyon's Medical Jurisprudence.

As regards motive, the Sub-Inspector does not admit that he owed the accused any pay or that he had broken two canes over him. He does admit that he punished him in connection with the loss of the bunch of keys, though his version is that he only gave him two or three slaps. In view, however, of his admission that, after the beating, Nar Singh declared that he would not serve the Sub-Inspector any longer and asked the latter to settle his account, we think that the beating was in all probability much more severe than the Sub-Inspector is willing to admit.

We are satisfied that the accused's confession was a genuine confession and, reading it along with the circumstantial evidence and the Medical evidence, we have no doubt left on our minds that the accused committed the murder of which he has been convicted. The only possible reason for reducing the sentence is the accused's age which is stated by the Civil Surgeon to be eighteen years. On the other hand, to murder an innocent child for the purpose of satisfying a grudge against the child's father is a peculiarly atrocious act and sitting as a Court of Justice we do not feel that we should be justified in interfering with the sentence of death passed by the learned Sessions Judge.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal and, affirming the conviction and sentence, direct that the latter be carried into effect in accordance with law.

If a minor girl leaves her husband's home without any persuasion, inducement or blandishment held out to her, so that she gets fairly away from home and then goes to a man, the latter cannot be deemed to have infringed the law even if he does not restore her to her lawful guardian.

The failure of a Magistrate, before recording a confession, to question the person making the confession as to whether he is making it voluntarily, is a fatal defect which renders the confession inadmissible in evidence.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kulu, District Kangra, dated the 14th of October 1922.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Moti Lal Kayastha, for the Appellants.

Sheikh Niaz Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Two boys, namely, Lachhi and Datt, who lived at Manikaran in the sub-division of Kulu, have been convicted under section 363, Indian Penal Code, of having, on the 27th April 1922, kidnapped a minor girl named Musammât Nardu from her lawful guardianship. There can be no doubt that Musammât Nardu was living with her husband, Dhani Ram, at Bhuntar, and that, on the 27th April 1922, she disappeared from his house during his temporary absence and has not since been found in spite of the husband having searched for her in the whole of the valley. The question for determination, however, is whether the girl was kidnapped by the prisoners.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate who tried the case, has written a long judgment which does not discriminate between the evidence which is legally admissible against the prisoners and that which either is inadmissible or has not been proved in accordance with the rules contained in the Indian Evidence Act. For instance, he relies upon two letters (Exhibits P. A. and P. B.) which were found by the husband on the 6th May 1922, in an old waist-coat of his wife lying in the house. Now, it is true that both these documents are amorous epistles, but there is not a scintilla of evidence to show that they were written or sent by either of the prisoners. The learned Magistrate also relies upon a confession of the accused, Lachhi, made by him during the Police investigation. This confession was recorded by the Tahsildar on the 12th May but neither the memorandum written by him before recording the confession nor his evidence before the Court shows that before recording the confession he questioned Lachhi as to whether he was making the confession voluntarily, and as pointed out in Farid v. Emperor (1) this defect is a fatal one and renders the confession inadmissible in evidence. Nor do I think the oral confession said to have been made on that very day by Lachhi to Dhani Ram in the presence of the Police can be taken into consideration against him.

Excluding, therefore, the documentary evidence discussed above and also some irrelevant evidence relating to the subsequent conduct of Lachhi's father and the discovery of the girl's garments on the night of the 30th April outside the house of her relative Kohan at Manikaran, neither of which circumstance can be used against Lachhi or his associate, we are reduced to the oral evidence of a few witnesses, which is neither convincing nor conclusive. Two of these witnesses, Bahadur and Mani Ram, simply state that on the evening of the 27th April they saw both the prisoners at Bhuntar, but their presence near the house of the girl's husband does not necessarily lead to the inference that they took or enticed her out of the keeping of the lawful guardian. The remaining three witnesses, Beli Ram, Jethu and Hatu, depose to the fact that the prisoners and the girl were seen on that night travelling together on the road leading from Bhuntar to Manikaran. Now, apart from the fact that the witnesses are men of low status and give evidence which is not easily reconcilable as to the time when the prisoners and the girl were seen going together at different places on the road, I am not prepared to hold that their testimony even if taken at its face value, brings the case within the purview of the definition of kidnapping as contained in section 361, Indian Penal Code. It appears from the evidence of the husband that he had wholly failed in the discharge of his conjugal duty towards his wife and there, is, therefore, nothing improbable in the theory that the girl dissatisfied as she was, took advantage of his absence from the house and left it of her own accord in order to go to her parental home at Manikaran. Now, it is an established principle of law that if a minor girl leaves her husband's house without any persuasion, inducement or blandishment held out to her by a man, so that she has got fairly away from home, and then goes to him, he cannot be deemed to have infringed the law, even if he does not restore her to her lawful guardian. On the evidence before me I cannot even go so far as to hold that the girl went to the two prisoners, and the only fact which has been established, is that she was a fellow traveller with them, all of whom were going to the same place.

I have bestowed my careful consideration upon the entire material upon the record and reached the conclusion that no "taking" or "enticing," such as is contemplated by law, has been established. Before concluding I must point out that the sentences imposed by the Magistrate are much too severe and would not have been confirmed if the prisoners had been found guilty of the offence. I must, however, hold that their guilt has not been established, and accepting the appeal I set aside the conviction and the sentences and direct that the appellants be released forthwith.

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110, proceedings under, resulting in discharge of accused—Fresh proceedings started after short interval—Court, duty of—Definite offence alleged—Procedure.

Where proceedings against an accused person under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code result in his discharge, and within a very short time thereafter fresh proceedings are started against him, it is the duty of the Court to see that there is sufficient evidence of his conduct after the conclusion of the previous proceedings to justify the fresh proceedings. If the allegation against him is of a definite offence, he ought to be prosecuted for that offence, without having resort to second-hand evidence of that offence to prejudice the case against him under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code.

Application against an order of the District Magistrate, Bara Banki, dated the 27th July 1922, confirming an order, dated the 27th May 1922, of the Magistrate, First Class, Bara Banki.

Mr. Bahadurji, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision on behalf of one Shakur who has been bound over under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The accused was run in under the same section last year and was discharged on a finding that the prosecution had entirely broken down, on 5th September 1921. The present proceedings were started against him only seven months afterwards. Under these circumstances, it was obviously the duty of the Courts to be very careful to see that there was sufficient evidence of accused's conduct after the conclusion of the previous proceedings to justify fresh proceedings being started against him after so short an interval. On looking at the evidence and the orders of the Courts below I am not satisfied that this is the case. The order of the Trying Magistrate shows that he was influenced to a very considerable extent by inadmissible evidence, such as allegations of definite crimes which could not be proved against the accused and he admitted a great deal of evidence as to events which happened

prior to the previous proceedings. The learned District Magistrate was alive to the necessity of excluding these previous events but in dealing with witnesses it is very difficult to decide how far their evidence is based on the alleged previous events and how far it is based on the accused's conduct and reputation during the past six months. The learned District Magistrate has accepted, as a principal event which has happened since the accused's discharge, the evidence of P. W. No. 5, Sant Bakshi Singh, who says that a message was sent to him by Shakur demanding, under threats, a sum of Rs. 1,000. It is obvious that if this evidence is true and the fact could be proved against the accused, he was guilty of a very serious criminal offence, and he ought to have been prosecuted for that offence instead of second-hand evidence being brought in to prejudice the case against him under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The accused appears to be a substantial cultivator and the only witness of his own neighbourhood who deposes against him has admitted enmity with him. In view of the previous proceedings against the accused which resulted in his discharge, and the short interval which elapsed between that order and the institution of the present proceedings, I find on the record that the order now passed was not justified.

I accordingly allow the revision and direct that the accused be discharged.

If under section 328 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Sessions Judge himself tenders pardon to an accused who accepts it, he can at once examine him as a witness and it is not necessary that such accused should be sent to the Committing Magistrate for his statement to be recorded on oath. [p. 247, col. 1.]

Under sections 337, 338 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is not necessary that the person to whom a pardon is tendered should himself be charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, all that is required is that the person to whom pardon is tendered, who need not even be an accused, should be supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session with which another person is charged. [p. 247, col. 1.]

Before the evidence of an accomplice can be accepted it is necessary to be satisfied that the accomplice himself took part in the crime to the extent that he says and that he is in a position to give true evidence as to what occurred. It is also necessary that the accomplice's evidence should be corroborated to prove that it was the accused person and no one else who committed the crime. [p. 248, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgment and finding of the Sessions Judge, Nimar, dated the 26th June 1922, in Sessions Trial No. 2 of 1921.

Mr. N. G. Sarkar, R. B., for the Appellant.
Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Kashiram Kalar has been sentenced to death for the murder of Motia Gaoli, a boy about 15 years old. The age of the appellant Kashiram is given by the Sessions Judge as 25, but the Police estimated it to be 28, while the Committing Magistrate recorded his age as 23.

Mullu Kalar was a co-accused with the appellant, and the Committing Magistrate charged Kashiram with murder and robbery under sections 302 and 392, and Mullu with robbery under section 392, Indian Penal Code. When examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, Kashiram denied all knowledge of the crime, but Mullu stated that he was present when Kashiram robbed Motia of his silver kadas and murdered him. The learned Sessions Judge added a charge of murder against Mullu, tendered him a pardon, and examined him as a prosecution witness (P.W.No.21). The procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge was unnecessarily complicated. After Mullu had accepted the pardon and had stated that he would tell the whole truth, the Sessions Judge sent him to the Committing Magistrate for his statement to be recorded. Mullu's statement was recorded by the District Magistrate (owing to the absence of the Committing Magistrate) and he was then sent back to the Sessions Court and his evidence taken. Under section 328, Criminal Procedure Code, the Sessions Judge, having himself tendered a pardon to one of the accused and the pardon having been accepted, could at once have examined him as a witness.

We will deal first with the contention raised by the learned Pleader who appears for the appellant in this Court, namely, that Mullu was illegally made a witness. The argument is that Mullu was charged under section 392, Indian Penal Code, with an offence not exclusively triable by the Court of Session that, therefore, sections 337 and 338, Criminal Procedure Code, did not apply and that the charge of murder was illegally added as there was no evidence to show that Mullu had been a party to the murder. We are of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge had good grounds for charging Mullu with murder, and he has recorded his reasons, in the order-sheet. Apart from this, the argument that Mullu could not be tendered a pardon because he had not been charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session is fallacious, being based upon a misapprehension of the law. Under sections 337 and 338, Criminal Procedure Code, it is not necessary that the person to whom a pardon is tendered should himself be charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session; all that is requisite is that the person to whom pardon is tendered, who need not even be an accused in the case, should be supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to an offence, triable exclusively by the Court of Session, with which another person is charged. There were ample grounds for supposing that Mullu was privy to the offence with which Kashiram was charged, and the tender of pardon to Mullu and his examination as a witness were perfectly legal.

The learned Sessions Judge has given a most careful and detailed account of the circumstances in which the boy Motia was missed, of the discovery of the body with the kadas gone, of the progress of the investigation and of the nature of the evidence against the appellant, and he has most carefully weighed and analysed the evidence. Some supplementary information may be noted, namely, that the village of Bir where Mullu lived and where the appellant Kashiram was, staying adjoining, the village of Mohad where the murdered boy lived, and that the appellant who comes from the Nasik District in the Bombay Presidency had been living next door to Mullu for about two months before the murder and is a relative by marriage of Mullu. The learned Sessions Judge has also indicated, rather than described, what is the evidence of Mullu. Mullu says that he used to accompany Kashiram, and they frequented the grazing grounds together; on the Sunday of the murder Kashiram, he says, came running to him and took him to the place, where the body was afterwards discovered, where Mullu found Motia in a senseless condition with his legs tied together; Kashiram then removed the kadas from the boy's wrists in the manner described by the Sessions Judge in the course of which operation the boy's wrists were wounded; Kashiram then placed his bare foot on the boy's neck and throttled him to death and went off with the kadas. In his evidence Mullu professes to have no knowledge of the administration of the dhatura or the possession of dhatura by himself or Kashiram.

The learned Sessions Judge has taken into consideration the evidence of Mullu, and of certain boys that Kashiram had previously offered sweets to boys and that one of the boys was afterwards robbed of his jewellery when affected with the symptom of dhatura poisoning. This evidence has been admitted for the purpose of proving the probability of Kashiram having administered dhatura to the deceased Motia. The learned Pleader for the appellant complains that this evidence should not have been admitted and with this contention we must agree. Section 14 of the Evidence Act, as explained in Illustration (c), shows that the fact that the accused offered sweetmeats to other boys and poisoned one of them with dhatura is not evidence that he administered poisoned sweetmeats to Motia. Under section 15 of the Evidence Act, if it was otherwise proved that Kashiram had administered sweetmeats poisoned with dhatura to Motia, the evidence above referred might be admitted to show that the administration was intentional and not accidental. But in this case as there is no possibility of accidental administration it is unnecessary to prove intention, and we must hold that the evidence referred to above is inadmissible and it must be left out of consideration. The evidence of the boys Dewa (P. W. No. 13) and Pannalal (P. W. No. 14) is, however, relevant to prove another point, namely, that Kashiram and Mullu were in the habit of frequenting the grazing grounds in company, which corroborates Mullu's story to the same effect.

Apart from the evidence of Mullu the most important circumstance proved against the appellant is that the murdered boy's kadas were found on the search of his person in the circumstances described by the Sessions Judge. The learned Pleader for the appellant strongly contends that the kadas were "planted" on the appellant by the Police or others and that the identification of the kadas is unsatisfactory. As regards the discovery of the kadas from the person of Kashiram we agree with the Sessions Judge in holding that there is no possible doubt of the truth of the prosecution evidence in spite of the petty discrepancies in the evidence, which are unimportant. It is impossible to suppose that the Police should have procured another pair of kadas and have prepared them by cutting them in halves so as to fit in with the story of Mullu which had not yet been obtained. We have seen the kadas and are quite satisfied with the evidence proving them to be the ones habitually worn by Motia which he was wearing when he was last seen alive. There is only one discrepancy as to the description of Motia's kadas, namely, that one of his relatives says that they used to overlap at the ends while another says they did not. We do not consider that this point to be of any importance. They probably did overlap as they are large sized kadas, too big for a boy, and could have been removed from his wrists without being cut if they had not been bent so as to overlap at the ends.

The Medical evidence shows that the boy's death was due to strangulation and the report of the Chemical Analysis proves that dhatura was detected in his viscera. We agree with the Sessions Judge's reasons for holding that the death was probably due to strangulation and not immediately to the effect of the dhatura poisoning. The Medical evidence corroborates Mullu's story that before he was strangled Motia was unconscious and showing the usual symptoms of dhatura poisoning.

Even without the evidence of Mullu there is a very strong case against the appellant, Kashiram. The murdered boy's ornaments were found in his possession and there is evidence mentioned by the Sessions Judge to show that on the morning of the murder he was leading a boy who corresponded to the description of Motia in the direction of the spot where the boy's corpse was found. But the evidence of Mullu makes the case against the appellant conclusive. Before the evidence of an accomplice can be accepted, it is necessary to be satisfied that the accomplice himself took part in the crime to the extent that he says and that he is in a position to give true evidence as to what occurred. In this case there is ample corroboration of Mullu's story that he was present at the crime and saw exactly what happened. His story does not read like a concoction but like a description of something that really happened. Stones bearing traces of silver were found on the spot, which corroborates his account of how the kadas were removed. Rope was also found on the spot, which corroborates his story that the boy's legs had been tied together and that a rope was used in pulling apart the kadas that had been partially cut through with the head of an axe. There is also evidence in corroboration of his story that he went with Kashiram to the scene of the offence. It is also, of course necessary that the accomplice's evidence should be corroborated to prove that it was the accused person and no one else who committed the crime. As to this there is the very vital piece of evidence that the murdered boy's kadas were found in the possession of the appellant which is not only direct evidence against Kashiram but strong corroboration of Mulla's evidence. We may mention that the findings of the dhatara seeds on the roof of the Mulla's house cannot be taken into consideration as any evidence against Kashiram.

The learned Counsel for the appellants lays stress on the improbability of Kashiram having kept the ornaments on his person when he might have hidden them. There is evidence that after the discovery of the boy Kashiram was closely watched and would have been unable to find an opportunity for disposing of the ornaments. It is true that he might have concealed them before the body was discovered, and he alone knows why he did not do so. It may be that his intention was to go off to Nasik and he wanted to keep the ornaments on his person for that purpose. However that may be, we are satisfied that he kept them on his person, where they were found.

In this petition of appeal to this Court Kashiram states that the whole of the evidence has been concocted by the mal-guzar of the Bir, Mukhtyar Ahmad (P. W. No. 24). We agree with the Sessions Judge that no personal animosity on the part of the Mukhtyar Ahmad has been proved and we consider that all he did was in the interests of justice. The appellant also says that he had no need to rob any one as he was capable of earning his own livelihood, but the evidence is to the effect that while at Bir he did nothing to earn his living.

After careful consideration of the evidence we are of opinion that the Sessions Judge was fully justified by the evidence in convicting the appellant of the murder of Motia, and we must say that, in our opinion, it is a perfectly clear case, the evidence against the appellant is overwhelming. For a murder of this type death is the only suitable penalty. We, therefore, maintain the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 350—Proceeding under s. 145—Change of Magistrates—Accused, right of, to re-summon witnesses.

In a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code where the Magistrate is succeeded by another, the succeeding Magistrate is not compelled under the proviso to section 350 of the Code to start the enquiry de novo, if an application to that effect is made on behalf of the accused. [p. 266, col. 1.]

The intention of the Legislature was to limit the application of proviso (a) to section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code to criminal trials and not to extend that proviso to enquiries which are also covered by the first portion of the section. [p. 266, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Newbould, J.—This Rule is directed against an order passed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, declaring the first party to be in possession of certain land. The petitioner in this case is a member of the second party. It is strongly contested on his behalf that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to go behind the orders passed in his favour both under the Survey Act and under the Bengal Tenancy Act. We are unable to hold that in deciding as he has done the Magistrate acted either without jurisdiction or with such irregularity as would justify our setting aside his order in the exercise of our powers under the Government of India Act.

MANJOO V. EMPEROR.

The main contention is that these orders in the petitioner's favour were binding on the Magistrate and he was bound to hold that after the decision in the proceeding under the Survey Act the second party were in possession. It is said that there was no finding that there has been any change of relationship at that time. But the finding that the first party are now in possession is in itself a finding of change of relationship since the decision under the Survey Act. As regards the entry in the Record of Rights on which great reliance is placed it appears that this entry was based entirely on the Survey proceedings. The Magistrate's order cannot be said to have been made without jurisdiction because he has not expressly stated that the presumption arising from this entry has been rebutted. His finding is in fact a finding that the presumption has been rebutted. It is not for us to say whether the Magistrate's decision on the evidence before him was right or wrong. There can be no doubt that such evidence as there was before him was fully considered and he has come to a definite finding and he had jurisdiction to come to that finding.

One other point was taken with regard to the Magistrate's jurisdiction and this is based on section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate who passed the order did not himself record the whole of the evidence. He based his decision partly on the evidence recorded by another Magistrate before whom the proceedings were commenced. We hold that, though the main portion of section 350 is sufficient to give the Second Magistrate jurisdiction to proceed with the case, the proviso to that section did not compel him to start the enquiry de novo when an application to that effect was made on behalf of the second party. The wording of the principal clause of section 350 is very different from that in proviso (a). In the main body reference is made to an enquiry or trial: proviso (a) is limited to trial and also makes reference to an accused, a word which does not appear in the preceding part of the section. We have no doubt that the intention of the Legislature was to limit the application of proviso (a) to criminal trials and not to extend that proviso to enquiries which are also covered by the first portion of the section.

I hold, therefore, that the contentions raised on behalf of the petitioner fail and I accordingly discharge this Rule.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree. I desire to rest my judgment on the observation made by the Trying Magistrate in his explanation submitted to this Court which finds some support from his judgment, viz., "that according to the map prepared by the Pleader Commissioner the Revenue Survey line which is shown in full red passes by the west of the eastern boundary line of the disputed land; so the claim by the second party in the disputed land on the decision of the case under section 41 of the Survey and Settlement Act has not been established." Were it otherwise, I would have, in the circumstances of this case, had considerable hesitation in upholding the Magistrate's order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

MANJOO L. EMPEROR.

Appeal from the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, Saugor, in Sessions Trial No. 9 of 1922, dated the 3rd July 1922.

Mr. S. R. Mangruikar, for the Appellant.
Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Manjoo, aged about 30, has been sentenced to death for the murder of Musammāt Phundo on the 15th April last at Chartoria in the Saugor Tahsil. Manjoo is by caste a Lodhi, and Phundo was a Barethan or Dhobin, and, therefore, of a lower caste, aged something between 20 and 25. The appellant has been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge on his own plea of guilty.

The learned Pleader who appeared for the appellant in this Court, urges that the conviction is illegal, since the appellant did not in the Sessions Court intend to plead and did not plead guilty to the charge of murder, and that his statement in the Sessions Court as a whole amounted to a plea that he killed Musammāt Phundo on grave and sudden provocation.

The charge drawn up was that the appellant at Chartoria on or about the 15th April did commit murder by intentionally causing the death of Musammāt Phundo Barethan. The order sheet of the Additional Sessions Judge, under date 3rd July 1922, runs as follows:—

"The accused brought from Jail. The Public Prosecutor for the Crown and Mr. S. C. Mukherjee appears for him. The charge is read over and explained to the accused. He pleads guilty. His statement is recorded in extenso. In view of that statement, I do not think there is any necessity of recording any evidence. I find him guilty and deliver the judgment. Finding recorded. The witnesses and the assessors summoned are discharged.

"The First Information Report, the statement of the accused, the Medical evidence and the report of the Imperial Serologist have been transferred from the record of the Committing Magistrate to the record of this Court. The accused is explained that he should appeal within 7 days.

The statement of the prisoner recorded in extenso in the form of question and answer may be translated as follows:—

1. Q. Did you kill Musammāt Phundo Barethan of Chartoria?

A. Yes Sir, I killed her with an axe because she had said before the Panchayat that she was pregnant by me and I was dishonoured and I felt this very much.

2. Q. Was Kasia present there?

A. Yes Sir. She was present when I killed Musammāt Phundo.

3. Q. Did you go to the Thana after her death taking the axe with you?

A. Yes Sir. When she was dead, I went to the Thana to make a report; I made over my axe to the Police.

4. Q. Did Musammāt Phundo belong to a caste lower than yours?

A. Yes Sir. I belong to a higher caste than hers, the Panchayat said that if the accusation proved true I would be out-casted and shut off from 'drink and smoke.'

5. Q. Where did you meet Musammāt Phundo?

A. I was taking bullocks to my field for grazing and the two sisters were going back home after bathing.

6. Q. Did you take this axe with you?

A. I always take my axe with me to the fields.

7. Q. What did you say to Musammāt Phundo when you met her?

A. I just happened to meet Musammāt Phundo. I said to her 'why did you mention my name?' and she replied: 'it was what the Panchas told me to do.'

8. Q. What did you do then?

A. I became enraged and struck her. The axe (Art. A) is mine.

9. Q. Did you get this axe sharpened and did you wash it?

A. I did not get an edge put on it. I washed my axe in the river on my way to the Jaisinagar Thana.

10. Q. Why did you go to make a report?

A. I thought 'why should I suffer at the hands of the Panchas? With the Sarkar what is to happen, let it happen.' Therefore, I went and made a report.

Musammāt Kasia, mentioned in the examination and admitted by the appellant to have been present when he killed Phundo, is Phundo's sister who had been examined as a witness by the Committing Magistrate. We interpret Musammāt Phundo's words as given in the latter part of the answer to the seventh question as meaning that the Panchas had insisted on her naming the father of her unborn child, not that they suggested or insisted that she should name the appellant as the father. The words recorded in the vernacular are : "Une-kahi thi ke Panchon ne aisi kahi thi" and the equivocal translation given above is certainly more correct than that given by the learned Judge, which is : "She replied that the Panchas wanted her to accuse me." We observe that, according to the order sheet, the learned Additional Sessions Judge transferred to his record the Medical evidence, the First Information Report made by the accused and the record of his examination before the Committing Magistrate, after he had delivered the judgment, though he has alluded to these records, as well as to the Inquest Report in his judgment. The First Information Report was not admissible in evidence at all, being a confession to the Police. We are satisfied however, that the Additional Sessions Judge did not use these papers in any way adversely to the accused, but rather in his favour, as far as possible, when considering the question of sentence. For instance, the fact that the appellant's wife had complained to him that his aunt treated her as an outcast, by refusing to let her draw water first, appears to be derived from the First Information Report. This allegation is repeated in the appellant's grounds of appeal, which, rendered into English, are as follows :—

"The deceased put a false accusation on me, on which the caste people put me and my wife out of caste without any enquiry. My aunt did not allow my wife to draw water from the well nor to touch the water. On this great pain came to my heart and anger, so that I could not bear it, and in that state of anger I killed the deceased. This crime came about from my having a great shock and pain in my heart and from the caste people putting me out of the caste. The matter may be considered."

As the Additional Sessions Judge acted only on the plea of guilty and the accompanying statement, he was bound to confine himself, as against the accused, to the terms of that statement, and to accept the assertion that when Manjoo killed Musammal

Phundu he had met her accidentally. Though he does mention a version less favourable to the accused, the learned Judge appears to have decided the case on the assumption that the meeting was accidental.

Our attention has been called to various reported cases in which it has been held that the plea of guilty in a case of murder should not have been accepted. For instance, in Netai Luskar v. Queen-Empress (1) it was held that the accused's statement read as a whole did not amount to a plea of guilty to a charge of murder since it was coupled with an explanatory statement that the accused had killed his wife under grave sudden provocation; a full trial was ordered. It has also been observed in more than one case that as a matter of practice in Sessions trials many Judges very properly prefer not to act on a plea of guilty but proceed to take the evidence as if the plea had been one of not guilty, in order to ascertain the accused's state of mind and whether or not he acted under provocation, whether sufficient to reduce the offence of one of culpable homicide or only sufficient to effect the sentence. In sub-section (2) of section 271 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is enacted: "If the accused pleads guilty, the plea shall be recorded, and he may be convicted thereon." It has certainly never been laid down that it is illegal to convict in a murder case on a plea of guilty, and in each case the circumstances must be examined to see whether the plea of guilty is one which should have been acted on. Sub-section (1) of section 271 insists that the charge shall be read out to the accused and explained to him and that he shall be asked whether he is guilty of the offence charged or claims to be tried. This procedure was adopted in this case. The accused was represented in the Sessions Court by a Pleader. In Criminal Appeal No. 169 of 1921 a Bench of this Court observed : "The appellant was, in the Sessions Court, represented by a senior member of the Bar, and he would have at once corrected the mistake and claimed a trial, had the plea not been one of guilty to the charge of murder." This observation applies to the present case, though we have no information as to whether the Pleader who appeared for the appellant in the Sessions Court was or was not a senior member of the Bar.

The only defence available, and the only one now put forward, is that the appellant killed Phundo under grave and sudden provocation. The appellant's answer to the seventh question shows that when he accosted Musammam Phundo and questioned her he was already aware that she had accused him at the Panchayat (at which he was not present) of being the father of her unborn child. This accusation would no doubt amount to grave provocation especially if it was untrue, and we must assume in favour of the accused that it was a baseless accusation since no evidence has been recorded to the contrary. But the accused knew the charge had already been made by Phundo, and what he did, according to his own statement, was to challenge her to repeat it; she did so, and he at once struck her down with his axe, intending to kill her. In our opinion, the repetition by Phundo of an accusation which the appellant knew she had already made, on a challenge by him to do so, cannot be called sudden provocation, and provocation must be sudden as well as grave to reduce the intentional killing of another from murder to mere culpable homicide. It follows, therefore, that the statement of the accused made in the Sessions Court in answer to the charge read out to him amounts to a valid plea of "guilty" of the offence of murder since the admitted facts constitute murder and show that there was no sudden provocation. For these reasons we are of opinion that the Additional Sessions Judge was justified in accepting the plea of guilty and that the appellant has rightly been convicted of murder on that plea.

There remains the question of sentence. It is strongly urged that the appellant's conduct in making a clean breast of his crime from the beginning and giving himself up to the Police shows that he is not depraved, that the murder was not premeditated and that he repented of it. At first sight, such conduct might appear in the light of some mitigation of guilt, but on examination we do not find this really to be the case. There is no particular merit in confessing a crime committed openly in broad day light, of which there was at least one eye witness; confession may indicate repentance, but that can only effect a reduction of that part of the sentence that is purely reformatory, and that factor has disappeared from the capital sentence, leaving only the exemplary factor. It is urged that the accusation made by Phundo against the appellant was particularly cruel and exasperating in that she had first named more than one other man as the father of her child, as appears from the evidence given before the Committing Magistrate by Ajudhia, the man who told the appellant what had happened at the Panchayat. Upon consideration, we are unable to see any reason why the normal sentence for the offence of murder should not be imposed. The appellant constituted himself a Tribunal which decided that the making of a charge of paternity against him was an offence punishable with death, he appointed himself the executioner and carried out the sentence. We are of opinion that the lesser penalty provided for the offence of murder would not be proper in the circumstances, and, therefore, maintain the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Gujrat, with his Memo, dated the 17th August 1922.

FACTS.—Fazal Dad, son of Allah Bakhsh, of Chakrian, was one of the accused in a case under sections 304/147, Indian Penal Code, of the year 1912. He was alleged to be absconding at that time and proceedings were taken against him under sections 87/88, Criminal Procedure Code. All his property was accordingly attached and sold. The auction of 216 kanals and a few marlas of land belonging to Fazal Dad was sanctioned in favour of Sardar Karam Singh, one of the vendees, for Rs. 2,000 by Sheikh Ali Muhammad, Magistrate First Class, Gujrat, vide his order dated 10th April 1919. Before the recovery of the sale-proceeds Sardar Karam Singh, however, died and his widow put in an application to the effect that she was too poor to pay up the sum. At the application of Sardar Deva Singh, Pleader, the sale was sanctioned in his name, vide order dated 25th July 1919, Sardar Deva Singh paid up the price in the Treasury on the 15th August 1919 and he was granted a regular sale certificate from the Court on the 27th October 1919. Fazal Dad was arrested subsequent to that and acquitted from the Sessions Court on the 7th February 1920. He then applied for the restoration of his property. His application was rejected by Sheikh Ali Muhammad, Magistrate First Class, but was accepted on appeal and the property was restored to him, vide Sessions Court's order dated 1st March 1922.

GROUND.—(1) The application given by Fazal Dad to the Sessions Judge of Gujranwala on 13th March 1920, praying for the restoration of his property attached and sold under section 89 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is clearly time-barred, having been made two years after the attachment.

(2) If the attachment was invalid, as is alleged by the applicant, no application under section 89 of the Code, for the restoration of the property, can be entertained by a Criminal Court. See Mala Singh v. Emperor (1).

(3) The order passed by the learned Sessions Judge dated 1st March 1922 is not according to law. An order directing the restoration of property to Fazal Dad could not legally have been passed.

(4) It is prayed that the order of the learned Sessions Judge be reversed and an order proper and according to law be passed.

Mr. Zafrullah Khan, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—It is not the practice of the High Courts in India to take action under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on a report by a District Magistrate which has for its object interference with a decision by a Court of Session, vide Queen-Empress v. Karamdi (2), Emperor v. Jamna Bai (3), Emperor v. John Francis Lobo (4) and In re Angamuthu Vanathrian (5). (Madras High Court). In the last named ruling it was stated that a District Magistrate, if he considers a Sessions Judge's order illegal, should move the Public Prosecutor to bring it before this Court. decline, therefore, on the present reference to examine the correctness of the learned Sessions Judge's decision that Fazal Dad is entitled to restitution.

Since, however, the case has been brought to my notice, I take the opportunity of correcting an error which is evidently due to an oversight and which, if allowed to stand, may give further trouble in the future. The learned Sessions Judge has purported to act under section 89 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that section provides that if the property has been sold, the person from whom it has been taken under section 88 shall be entitled to recover not the property but only the nett proceeds of the sale. Fazal Dad in his original application prayed that he might be given either the property or the sale proceeds. The detailed order in the case by which it was referred to this Court for action on the revision side was written by one Sessions Judge, and the final order after return by this Court with a direction that the Sessions Judge should himself dispose of the appeal preferred to him, was written by another Sessions Judge. The latter appears to have overlooked the precise terms of section 89.

Accordingly, I alter the learned Sessions Judge's order of the 1st of March 1922 to the extent of substituting for the words "the property in question" the words "the nett proceeds of the sale of the property in question."

s. 146—Order as to possession—Brevity—Revision.

It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule when a High Court should interfere on the ground of the brevity of an order passed in a proceeding under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Where a Magistrate passes an order under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code but omits to write at length the reasons for such order, it may be good ground for remand. But a High Court will not interfere if the Magistrate passed the order after giving full consideration to the evidence in the case.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Magistrate has passed an order under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure after recording a very short order in which he states that he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties is in possession of the land. Several rulings have been brought to our notice in which it has been held by this Court that the omission to write at length the reasons for coming to such a conclusion may be a ground for remanding a case. It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule when this Court should interfere on the ground of the brevity of the order passed in a proceeding of this kind. In the present case it is sufficient for us to say that we see no reason to think that the learned Magistrate did not give full judicial consideration to the evidence before he came to the conclusion at which he arrived. This being so, there is no reason for our interference. The Rule is discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 331—Causing grievous hurt to extort confession—Promise to restore abducted woman—"Demand," meaning of.

The accused compelled the complainant by causing grievous hurt to him to execute an agreement to restore a woman whom he was alleged to have abducted;

Held, that the accused could not be said to have committed an offence under section 331 of the Penal Code, inasmuch as the extortion of the promise for the restoration of the woman did not amount to the extortion of a confession or information which might lead to the detection of an offence within the meaning of the section.

The "demand" referred to in section 331 of the Penal Code must be with respect to property.

Queen-Empress v. Ella Boyan, 11 M. 257; 1 Weir 336; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 179, relied on.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Sialkot, dated the 2nd December 1922, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Sialkot, dated the 31st October, 1922.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Zafarullah Khan, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The four petitioners have been convicted under section 331, Indian Penal Code, of voluntarily causing grievous hurt to the complainant to extort a promise from him to restore the woman that he was alleged to have abducted. The prosecution theory was that the petitioners compelled him by beating him to execute an agreement to restore the woman. It was contended in the Courts below, and is again urged in this Court, that, even if the petitioners did all that was attributed to them, their act does not fall within the purview of section 331, Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge dealt with this objection in the following way:—

hurt to the complainant for the purpose of extorting from him a statement that the woman, Musammal Resham Bibi, who was said to have been abducted was in his possession and also extorting from him a promise that he would return her. The fact, moreover, that a number of persons were asked to stand surety for the return of the woman would show that the object of the appellants was to create evidence in the case under section 494, Indian Penal Code, and the promise to return the woman was clearly a promise to satisfy a demand."

But in Queen-Empress v. Ella Boyan (1) it was held, that under this section, the demand must be with respect to property. The learned Counsel who appeared for the Crown conceded this, but argued that the extortion of the said promise amounted to an extortion of confession. But a promise is quite different from a confession especially when it was not extorted with the object of proving an offence. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the petitioner's offence does not fall under section 331, Indian Penal Code, and accordingly I alter the conviction to that under section 325, Indian Penal Code. The evidence relied upon by the Courts below proves that all the four accused beat the complainant and caused severe injuries to him including a fracture of a rib. All four are, therefore, responsible for the grievous hurt, but, as there was only one grievous hurt, I reduce the sentence of each to rigorous imprisonment for two years. The sentences of fine shall stand as well as the sentence under section 342, Indian Penal Code.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 5th December 1921, modifying that of the Munsif, First Class, Kasur, District Lahore, dated the 20th June 1921.

Mr. Tara Singh Narula and Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Amar Nath Monga, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These are two connected appeals which have arisen under the following circumstances. From the pedigree-table given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it appears that Jawala Singh and Kharak Singh were two brothers. The latter died leaving a widow Musammat Jindi. Jowala Singh had two sons Wasawa Singh who died leaving Musammat Malan, plaintiff No. 3 in this suit, as his widow and Wadhawa Singh whose sons are plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. The two brothers Jowala Singh and Kharak Singh owned and possessed jointly certain landed property and a house. On the death of Kharak Singh Musammat Jindi succeeded to a half share in the properties. The land appertaining to the half share of Musammat Jindi was 151 kanals and 9 marlas. Out of this she gifted 80 kanals in favour of Kishen Singh, her daughter's son, by a deed dated the 1st of May 1914. Wadhawa Singh gave his consent to the gift and attested the deed. On the same day, that is, on the 1st of May 1914, Musammat Jindi and Wadhawa Singh made a gift of the house in favour of Kishen Singh the reason probably being as found by the Appellate Court that the donee Kishen Singh from the time of his infancy had been brought up by Wadhawa Singh and Musammat Jindi. The other half of the property belonged to Wasawa Singh and Wadhawa Singh, the two sons of Jawala Singh, out of which 14th had come by succession to Musammat Malan, plaintiff No. 3. The present suit was instituted by the sons of Wadhawa Singh and Musammat Malan for possession of the gifted land and of the house on the allegation that Musammat Jindi had no power under the custom to make the gift. The suit was resisted on the ground that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, being the sons of Wadhawa Singh, with whose consent the gift in respect of the land had been made, were not entitled to question the alienation, and that Musammat Malan, plaintiff No. 3, being a widow had no right to challenge an alienation made by Musammat Jindi with the consent of the male reversioner Wadhawa Singh.

The Trial Court, relying on Lahori v. Radho (1), held that Musammat Malan having succeeded collaterally had a right to challenge the alienations and that plaintiff's Nos. 1 and 2 were also entitled to question the alienation as the consent given by their father, Wadhawa Singh, was not proved to be bona fide. The suit was accordingly decreed by that Court.

On appeal, the learned Judge of the Court below agreed with the Trial Court in respect of the finding that Musammat Malan had a right to challenge the alienation. As regards the suit of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 the lower Appellate Court has taken a different view, and has found that the consent given by Wadhawa Singh is proved to have been bona fide and that it was not established that it was collusive. Relying on Habib Khan v. Muhammad (2) the learned Judge has set aside the decree in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. The result is that the claim of Musammat Malan has been decreed and that of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 has been dismissed.

MAKHAN SINGH v. KISHEN SINGH.

Two second appeals have been preferred to this Court: one by Makhan Singh and Ujagar Singh, sons of Wadhawa Singh, against the dismissal of their claim and the other by the donee, Kishen Singh, challenging the decree in favour of Musammāt Malan. The appeal on behalf of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 has been argued on their behalf by Dewan Mehr Chand and it has been very strongly contended by him that, having regard to the custom stated in Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, paragraphs 64 and 68, the gift made in favour of Kishen Singh cannot stand. The question to be decided, however, is whether, having regard to the ruling in Habib Khan v. Muhammad (2), the plaintiffs in spite of the consent given by their father can challenge the gift. The rule is stated in the head-note attached to the ruling in the following words:—

"That the assent of the plaintiff's father to the alienation by a female in possession, if made bona fide, without collusion or intention to injure the reversioners, is binding upon the plaintiff in a suit for a declaration that the alienation shall not affect his reversionary rights."

Now, in this case the learned Judge of the Court below has found upon the evidence that the consent was given bona fide the reason being that the donee had been brought up by Wadhawa Singh and Musammāt Jindi from his infancy. The reversioners in the present case were the sons of Wadhawa Singh himself and it is difficult to believe that Wadhawa Singh should have colluded with Musammāt Jindi and should have given his consent with the intention of injuring his own sons. Over and above this, there is the circumstance that out of 151 kanals and 9 marlas only 80 kanals have been gifted and the rest of the land has been left intact for the reversioners. In my opinion the view taken by the learned Judge of the Court below is fully supported by the authority relied upon by him and the gift in respect of the land cannot be challenged by the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. It was, however, contended by Mr. Mehr Chand that, as regards the gifted house, the alienation by Wadhawa Singh in respect of his share was challenged by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 as the reversioners of their father and that by an oversight the lower Appellate Court had not taken this phase of the claim of the plaintiffs into consideration. It was open to the plaintiffs to have supported in appeal the decree of the Trial Court upon this ground. From the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it does not appear that this question was ever raised before it. It is too late now for the appellants to urge this question in second appeal. The appeal of the plaintiffs-appellants, therefore, must fail.

As regards the appeal of Kishen Singh, it has been contended by Mr. Amar Nath Monga that it has not been established by custom that Musammāt Malan had a right to succeed collaterally and that, in any case, even if she had a right of collateral succession she had no right to challenge the alienation as a widow. As found by the learned Judge of the Court below, in the District of Lahore the widows among all tribes do possess the right of succeeding collaterally. It is quite manifest from the answer to question No. 53 in Bolster's Customary Law of the Lahore District that it is so. It is admitted that, when Musammāt Jindi died the balance of the landed property in her possession was mutated half and half in the names of Wadhawa Singh's sons and Musammāt Malan respectively. This fact strongly corroborates the custom as stated in Bolster's Customary Law. The evidence produced to prove a contrary custom is wholly inadequate and has rightly been disregarded by the lower Appellate Court. As regards the widow's right to challenge the alienation, it was rightly held by the learned Munsif that the rule laid down in Lahori v. Radho (1) should apply. Some authorities were quoted before me by the learned Vakīl showing that a widow's right to challenge an alienation by a male was not recognised.

Those cases are altogether irrelevant in the present case, as in this case the alienation challenged has been made by a widow. This appeal also must fail.

The result is that both the appeals are dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, North Malabar, in Appeal No. 519 of 1919, preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Payyoli, in Original Suit No. 403 of 1918.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 24th of March 1922 the Court (Ayling and Odgers, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The District Judge has held that the Marupat, Exhibit A, executed by the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 6 on the strength of which the present suit is brought is not binding on the Tavazhi of the executant because it purports to supersede a saswatham demise, Exhibit I, executed in favour of first to sixth defendants' father by the jenmi. It is clearly in the interests of the Tavazhi to hold the property on a saswatham demise rather than on an ordinary kancm for a term of years and if the saswatham demise, Exhibit I, is genuine and binding on the successors of the stani who granted it, the District Judge is, in our opinion, right in holding that the action of the defendants' father in executing Exhibit A was contrary to the interests of the Tavazhi and does not bind the Tavazhi. The learned Vakil for the appellant points out, however, that the District Judge, while holding, contrary to the decision of the District Munsif that Exhibit I is a genuine document, has not considered whether it is binding on the successor of the stani who granted it. This is so. In the plaint, the plaintiff (the present appellant) distinctly took the ground that the stani had no right to grant irredeemable demises. The same position was taken up by the seventh defendant, the present stani in office, in paragraph 3 of his written statement; but in the course of the hearing of the litigation, the parties appear to have gone off on another question as to whether Exhibit I was genuine or not and the question of its validity after the lifetime of its grantor appears to have been overlooked.

Issue No. 1, which was the main issue framed in the original suit, is clothed in such general terms that it is impossible to say by whose fault this point came to be overlooked. Whether the saswatham lease is binding or not is a mixed question of law and fact. It is thus put by Innes and Muthuswami Aiyar, JJ., in a passage quoted with approval in Kaithal Kuttiyan v. Kuzhatte Puthen Veetil Thirumangalath Kunharatan Ummama (1): "But he (the Stanomdar) is also manager of the family for the time being; if he grants a lease or makes an alienation to enure beyond his lifetime which is for the benefit of the family, it will be upheld, as, on the other hand, any such transaction, if prejudicial to the family will be set aside." In other words, the validity of the saswatham demise, Exhibit I, after the lifetime of the grantor will depend on whether it was for the benefit of the stanom or not. We feel considerable doubt as to whether we should allow this point to be raised in second appeal especially as it will necessitate a finding being called for from the lower Appellate Court, but, in view of the definite objection taken in the plaint, we think on the whole that it is better in the interests of justice to have the point cleared up. The District Judge has held that Exhibit A is invalid solely by reason of the existence of Exhibit I and we think it right that the validity as well as the genuineness of the latter should be determined before Exhibit A is declared to have no effect.

We must, therefore, call for a finding from the lower Appellate Court on the following issue:—

"Was the saswatham demise, Exhibit I, binding on the stanom after the death of its grantor?"

Evidence may be adduced by either side. The finding to be returned within a month after the re-opening of the Court. Seven days for objections.

The remaining arguments advanced on behalf of the appellant do not commend themselves to us. The question whether any allowance should be made in respect of costs owing to the late stage at which this point is pressed on the Court will be considered if necessary when the second appeal is finally disposed of.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of North Malabar submitted the following FINDING.—The High Court has called a finding from me on the following issue, "was the saswatham demise, Exhibit I, binding on the stanom after the death of its grantor? and allowed both parties to adduce evidence.

* * * * *

I am convinced that the saswatham demise was granted as a return for important services rendered to the stanom by the grantee as stated in the demise itself and that it was, therefore, for the undoubted benefit of the stanom. I would even say that I am of opinion that the grant of the saswatham demise was necessary for the purposes of protesting and safeguarding the estate, for otherwise several items of stanom property would have been irretrievably lost to the stanom. My finding on the issue remitted by the High Court is, therefore, in the affirmative, viz., that the saswatham demise, Exhibit I, was binding on the stanom after the death of its grantor.

This second appeal came on for final hearing on the 1st November 1922 after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial.

Mr. P. S. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This suit was brought by a melchartidar, holding under a melchart granted by the 7th defendant, who is the stani of a stanom in Malabar, to redeem a kanom, Exhibit A of 1882. The defence to the suit raised by the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 at the trial was that the properties in suit were not held under the kanom, Exhibit A, but under a saswatham grant, Exhibit I, of 1852. The District Munsif held that this saswatham document was a forgery and he gave the plaintiff a decree for the redemption of the kanom. On appeal, the District Judge held that the saswatham deed, Exhibit I, was genuine, and that the kanom, Exhibit A, was void, as it was not for the benefit of the Tavazhi on behalf of whom Chiruthayi, the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 6, executed it.

In second appeal the question was raised whether the saswatham demise, assuming it to be a genuine document, was binding on the stanom after the lifetime of the donor. This question has been raised in the pleadings but has been lost sight of in the course of the trial. A finding was, therefore, called for from the District Judge on the issue, "was the saswatham demise, Exhibit I, binding on the stanom after the death of its grantor?" The District Judge has now found this issue in the affirmative. But for his finding he has been obliged to rely entirely on the recital in the saswatham deed to the effect that the grantee had saved 18 items of property from lapsing to the tenants of the stanom which held the jenmi right. Ordinarily, the recitals in a document upon which the grant depends would not be sufficient evidence that the grant was made for the benefit of the religious institution represented by the donor. In Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Parshad Singh (2) the Privy Council observe that alienations to be valid against reversioners, required to be supported by proof aliunde that they were made for valid and legal necessity. The same rule applies in the case of *shebait*s and other persons who have no authority to alienate property except for the benefit or preservation of the estate which they represent. Unavoidable necessity must be established in order to justify absolute alienations or grants of perpetual leases of endowed property [vide Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (3)]. The District Judge after referring to the recitals in Exhibit I, has applied the test of time for assuming that the grant was lawfully made. He says that the recitals in the kanom deed, Exhibit A, indicate that the saswatham right was regarded as valid, because the then stani took a surrender of it from Chiruthayi.

I am of opinion that the District Judge was not justified in assuming the correctness of the recitals in Exhibit I from the mere fact that that document is more than 70 years old without considering other circumstances. He quotes in his finding the decision of the Privy Council in Magniram

Sitaram v. Kasturbhai Manibhai (4). That was a case where a permanent lease had been left unchallenge for a period of nearly a hundred years and it was held that the Court might assume that the grant was made for necessity so as to be valid beyond the life of the grantor. Their Lordships refer in their judgment with approval to Chockalingam Pallai v. Mayandi Chettiar (5), the appeal from which is reported as Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chockalingam Pillay (6). That was a case in which certain lessees had remained in possession under a grant made by the manager of a temple for 79 years. They claimed, to have had 200 years of possession but it was found that the lease was granted in 1813 which was 79 years before the suit of 1892. Now, we must see how far the facts of the present case support an inference that the saswatham grant remained undisputed for a long period after the death of the donor. We know that the donor died in 1862. This appears from the statement of the witness examined after the remand. He was succeeded by a bad manager who relinquished his office in 1875 under Exhibit C. From 1875 to 1882 the stanomdar was the same person who granted the kanom demise, Exhibit A. He died about 1904 and was succeeded by the 7th defendant.

Exhibit I itself refers to the existence of a prior kanom demise. The grantee, Kunkan Nair, in 1876 by Exhibit II, sold this property Kandiyl Parambar to Chiruthayi, thus converting it into putravakasam property. Exhibit II speaks of this item as being held under kanom and saswatham right. Then, in 1882, under Exhibit A, Chiruthayi purports to surrender the saswatham right given previously and to take a renewal of the kanom right for 24 years, the surrender being made a consideration for the fresh grant.

As observed by the District Munsif the recital in Exhibit II that the property was held on kanom and saswatham rights indicated that the members of the defendants' family regarded the kanom as requiring to be renewed from time to time upon reasonable terms.

The defendants who claim to derive rights from Kunkan Nair, in whose favour Exhibit I was executed, cannot now question Chiruthayi's power to deal with the property which Kunkan Nair had conveyed to her to be held as putravakasam property under Exhibit II in 1876. The District Munsif has treated Chiruthayi's act in taking a renewal of the kanom grant under Exhibit A as a settlement of a doubtful title to hold under the permanent grant. If the conduct of the parties is any indication of the binding and permanent character of the saswatham demise, we find that it remained unchallenged only for 20 years from 1862, when the donor died, to 1882, when the right was surrendered. The defendants made no attempt to put forward the right of the Tavazhi to hold the property under a permanent grant until the present suit for redemption was brought; in other words, although the saswatham grant was allowed to remain unchallenged for 20 years after the death of the donor, it has been treated as no longer in existence for the last 36 years preceding this suit. I am, therefore, unable to accept the District Judge's conclusion as maintainable on the facts found by him.

We allow the appeal and, setting aside the lower Appellate Court's decree, we restore the decree of the District Munsif. Each side will bear their own costs here and in the lower Appellate Court as the point on which the appeal succeeds was not taken earlier. Time for redemption, six months from this date.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I entirely agree.

As my learned brother has set out the facts, I shall not recapitulate them. The District Judge, in coming to the conclusion that the saswatham demise was binding on the successors of the stanom who granted it, purported to rely upon the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Magniram Sitaram v. Kasturbhai Manibhai (4). But it seems to me that the learned District Judge has wrongly applied the rule of evidence laid down by their Lordships to the facts of the present case. If the saswatham demise had remained unchallenged from 1852 to 1918, it would, no doubt, have been proper to presume that the grant was made in exercise of a power possessed by the donee and that the demise was lawfully, and not unlawfully, made.

Let us look at the facts proved in the case. The saswatham demise was made in 1852. The donor died in 1862. The successor could then have challenged the alienation, but it conceded that he was a bad manager and did positive harm to the stanom, and it could not, therefore, be expected from such a man that he would do anything to protect the interests of the stanom. The learned District Judge very properly observes that no inference could be drawn from the omission of this stanom to impugn the grant. The latter relinquished the stanom in 1875 after the institution of a suit for his removal. His successor obtained from the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 6 the kanom deed sued on.

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, in the case quoted above, observed that a long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity is a circumstance which enables the Court to assume that the original grant was made in exercise of a valid power. The lapse of time in the present case is not as, the District Judge remarks, seventy years "which almost coincides with the allotted span of human life, three score years and ten" but just thirty years, the interval of time between the saswatham grant of 1852 and the kanom demise of 1882.

The learned Judges by whom the finding was called for, held in effect that if the saswatham grant was binding on the successors of the donor, the defendants' mother was incompetent to surrender it and accept a kanom demise in lieu of it; if, on the contrary, the saswatham was not binding, then the action of the defendants' mother in executing the kanom was in the interests of, and binds the Tavazhi. They further held that the validity of the saswatham after the lifetime of the grantor would depend upon whether it was for the benefit of the stanom or not.

Having regard to the judgment delivered on the previous occasion, we are concerned merely with the question of the validity of the saswatham demise, and I may state that no other question has been argued before us. No evidence was forthcoming to show that the grant was made for the benefit of the stanom. The defendants rely solely upon the recitals in the deed. I may refer to a passage in the judgment in Magniram Sitaram v. Kasturbhai Manibhai (4):—

“At the lapse of 100 years, when every party to the original transaction has passed away, and it becomes completely impossible to ascertain what were the circumstances which caused the original grant to be made, it is only following the policy which the Courts always adopt, of securing as far as possible quiet possession to people who are in apparent lawful holding of an estate to assume that the grant was lawfully and not unlawfully made.”

When the kanom demise of 1882 was executed, the donee, that is, the father of the defendants Nos. 1 to 6, was alive. He had knowledge of the circumstances in which the original grant was made. Why then, if the saswatham was valid and unimpeachable, did he permit it to be surrendered? Then, again, the first defendant was forty-eight years old at the time of the trial of the suit and it is stated that several other members of his family had also long ago become majors. The kanom was not impeached from 1882 to 1918. If they believed that their mother had needlessly sacrificed their interests, there was nothing to prevent them from having questioned her act earlier. The legitimate inference to be drawn from these facts is that they acquiesced in the kanom, because they were aware that the saswatham demise was of doubtful validity and that the act of their mother in executing the kanom was in the interests of the Tavažhi.

The position of affairs is, therefore, this. On the one hand, there is the saswatham demise which was made in 1852 and which, in any event, was good during the lifetime of the grantor and was attacked after his death, within seven years of a prudent manager succeeding to the office. On the other hand, we have the kanom demise made in 1882 when an apparently valuable right was surrendered by the senior-most member of the family, that is, the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 6, without demur on the part of their father who was the original donee and was aware of the circumstances in which the saswatham grant was made. We have the further fact that the kanom demise was not impugned by defendants Nos. 1 to 6 till a very recent date. In these circumstances, no presumption can arise in favour of the truth of the recitals in the saswatham grant. There has not been the lapse of time sufficient to raise a presumption that the saswatham grant was made under circumstances which justified the grant. There is no evidence to show that the original grant of 1852 was for the benefit of the stanom and that it is binding on the successors of the stant who made the grant. It follows that if the saswatham demise is not valid the mother of defendants Nos. 1 to 6 was acting in the interests of the Tavažhi in giving up the invalid saswatham right for a valuable kanom demise.

In the result, I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

B. PUJI NARSO V. DATTO ANTAJI.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession as owner of the suit lands from the defendants. The lands originally belonged to one Bhimaji, who was the only brother of the first defendant Dattu. He was adopted into the other branch of the family, whose pedigree appears at page 4 of the print, by Appaji. He died in 1905 leaving a son Baburao, who admittedly at that time was a lunatic. Bhimaji before his death, executed a malkipatra in favour of the first defendant and I gather from the record that Bhimaji, who must have been aware of his son's lunacy, executed the document in favour of the first defendant on the understanding that he should undertake to look after Baburao.

In 1906, plaintiff filed a suit in the Athni Court against Dattu, claiming as the person entitled to succeed to the property of Bhimaji after the death of Baburao, who he alleged had recently become a lunatic, to obtain a declaration that the malkipatra alleged to have been executed by Bhimaji in favour of defendant No. 1 on July 10, 1905, was a forgery. The defendant contended that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit as he was not the heir of Bhimaji. The first issue was—Is the plaintiff entitled to maintain the suit? Now, as in the plaint it was alleged that Baburao was the son of Bhimaji, he would be the only heir under Hindu law, and it was not alleged by the plaintiff that Baburao was incapable of succeeding on account of insanity. It is obvious, therefore, on the face of the plaint, that the plaintiff could not possibly succeed, as he had no interest whatever in the property except as a possible reversioner after Baburao died without leaving an heir. The defendant in his written statement pleaded that, according to law, the plaintiff could never become the nearest heir of the deceased Bhimaji under Hindu religion and Sastras. He could not become the nearer heir than the defendant himself. In paragraph 7 he pleaded that the plaintiff's suit could not go on unless plaintiff's brother Ramkishna Narso, and deceased Bhimaji's son Baburao and daughter's son Bhimaji alias Sarjerao and Balaji Datto Kulkarni were made parties. That was perfectly correct as an answer to the plaintiff's suit, because, according to the plaintiff himself, Baburao would certainly be concerned in disputing the document set up by the defendant.

Baburao died in 1917, and plaintiff brought this suit on April 10, 1918. His main point was that Baburao, unless he was a congenital idiot, was not debarred from succession on the death of Bhimaji, and, therefore, Baburao succeeded to Bhimaji's property, and succession opened only on Baburao's death.

On the question whether insanity to be a cause for exclusion from inheritance must be congenital, in the 9th Edition of Mayne's Hindu Law, page 872, it is stated:—

"There is a difference of opinion as to whether insanity also need be congenital. The texts and cases are all collected and discussed in a judgment of the High Court of Bombay. The question for decision was only as to blindness, but the Court expressed a strong opinion that madness, as well as blindness, must be shown to have existed from birth. It may, however, be doubted whether the texts which go to this extent do not refer to the case of idiocy, which is always congenital, while madness, as distinguished from idiocy, is rather a disease than an incapacity of the mind. Cases of disability from lunacy have come at least twice before the Privy Council. In one, Baboo Bodhnarain Singh v. Baboo Omrao Singh (1), it was admitted that the lunacy was not congenital, and it was assumed that the only question was whether the insanity had existed at the time the succession opened. In the second Kooer Goolab Sing v. Rao Kurun Sing (2), no question was raised as to the date of the lunacy. From the fact that the lunatic was a married man and a father, it is most probable that he had not been born so. On the other hand, in Bengal, Allahabad and Madras, it has been expressly held that insanity at the time the inheritance falls in is sufficient to exclude; and, in the second of the cases cited below, it was further held that the insanity itself need not be incurable. If it was sufficient to prevent the claimant from offering the proper funeral oblations he was an unfit person to succeed."

The question was first considered in Brāja Bhukan Lal Ahusti v. Bichan Dobe (3) reported in a note to the case of Dwarkanath Bysak v. Mohendranath Bysak (4). It was decided in those cases that in order to exclude a person on the ground of insanity it was sufficient to show that when the succession opened he was mad and not in a position to perform funeral oblations.

In Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash (5) and in Ram Singh v. Musammal Bhani (6) the same view was taken.

The latest decision is in Muthusami Gurukkal v. Meenammal (7). Mr. Justice Sheshagiri Ayyar considered all the texts on the subject and the authorities, and came to the conclusion that insanity, as a ground of exclusion from inheritance under Hindu Law, need not be congenital. One apparent error appears in the judgment at page 467* where the case of Murari Gokuldas v. Parvatibai (8) is cited as an authority for the same conclusion. But it would appear from the judgment of Sir Michael Westropp in that case, that although the learned Judge was only considering the question whether blindness to cause exclusion from inheritance must be congenital, after examination of the text he expressed the opinion that madness as well as blindness, to disqualify a person from inheritance must be congenital. That opinion, although entitled to the very greatest respect, still cannot be regarded as anything else but obiter. When we find that from 1870 up to the present time the High Courts of Bengal, Allahabad and Madras have consistently been of opinion, that insanity to cause exclusion from inheritance need not be congenital, I am not prepared to express a contrary opinion. I think, therefore, that the Judge of the Court below was right in holding that Baburao was incapable of inheriting to Bhimaji.

*Page of 43 M.—[Ed.],

The only other question is, whether the defendant is estopped from pleading that Baburao was incapable of inheriting to Bhimaji by virtue of the decision in Suit No. 8 of 1906. If it could be shown that he represented to the plaintiff at that time that Baburao was the heir, and that there was no ground for his exclusion from the inheritance, that on account of that representation the plaintiff refrained from filing the suit until the death of Baburao, then, possibly, it might be said that the defendant is now estopped from raising his present contention. But all the proceedings in Suit No. 8 of 1906 clearly show that the plaintiff was out of Court on the representation made by him in his plaint; therefore, the plaintiff cannot be said to have refrained from taking proceedings to establish his right to succeed after Baburao on account of any representation made by the defendant. The appeal, in my opinion, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to this petition for revision are few and simple. In order to understand the nature of the question to be decided, the following pedigree-table may be looked at:—

The family was a joint Hindu family. The branch of Kalu Ram separated in Sambat 1971, corresponding to the year 1914. After the separation of Kalu Ram's branch, Janki Das, his son Murari Lal and Lakhmi Chand's son Hari Bakhsh alias Bakhshi Ram were adjudicated insolvents. An application for the adjudication of Murli Dhar as an insolvent was made, but he died before any adjudication could be made. The creditors' application to have Ganga Ram, minor, declared insolvent was dismissed on the 1st of December 1917. The property of the insolvents vested in the Receiver who proceeded to deal with the property of Ganga Ram, minor, also. The minor admittedly is the owner of one-fourth share in the property. The Receiver claimed that, as the manager and the other adult members of the family had been adjudicated insolvents, the property of the minor Ganga Ram, who was a member of the joint family, also vested in him (the Receiver). Mr. Topan Ram, Judge, Insolvency Court, allowed the objection of the minor and held that his property, according to the ruling in Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Asutosh Ghosh (1), did not vest in the Receiver. His decision was upheld in appeal by Major E. Knollys, District Judge. Against the decision of the Appellate Court no appeal lay under the Insolvency Act. Hence this petition for revision was presented to this Court.

In Civil Appeal No. 2134 of 1915 [Bihari Lal v. Sat Narain (2)] the correctness of the decision in Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Asutosh Ghosh (1) was questioned. Consequently, at the request of Mr. Moti Sagar, the Counsel for the petitioner, this petition for revision was referred to a Division Bench to be decided along with the Division Bench case above referred to. The question to be decided in the above mentioned Division Bench case was whether on the adjudication of the father, the property of his son also had vested in the Receiver. This question was referred to a Full Bench and was decided in the affirmative. The Full Bench decision is reported as Bihari Lal v. Sat Narain (2). This petition for revision came up for decision before a Division Bench constituted by Scott-Smith and Zafar Ali, JJ., on the 5th of December 1922. The learned Judges recorded the following order:—

"This revision was referred to a Division Bench and the Judge in Chambers directed that it should be heard with Civil Appeal No. 2134 of 1915 [Bihari Lal v. Sat Narayan (2) but by a mistake of the office it was not put up along with the latter. There is no reason why this case should be heard by a Division Bench and we direct that it be heard by a Single Judge."

In consequence of this order the petition came up for decision before me. I had considerable doubt as to whether, under the rules, the Division Bench could have referred the case back to a Single Judge, but, after consulting the learned Chief Justice, I proceeded to hear the arguments in the case.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat on behalf of the petitioners contended, in the first place, that the point raised in this case was covered by the decision of the Full Bench referred to above and that the property of the minor must be held to have vested in the Receiver.

In the second place, he argued that as on the findings of the Courts below after the separation of Kalu Ram's grandsons the rest of the family had continued to remain joint, the minor being a member of it at the date of the adjudication of the manager and the other members as insolvents his property also must vest in the Receiver.

As regards the first contention, it may be observed that the Full Bench has distinguished the case of Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Asutosh Ghosh (1) for the reasons set forth at page 341* of the report.

After quoting a passage from the judgment in the Calcutta case the learned Chief Justice made the following observations:—

"The passage quoted above enunciates only the general proposition that the insolvency of one partner does not directly affect the shares of the other partners in the assets of the firm, but the question how far that general rule is modified in the case of the insolvency of a Hindu father was neither raised before the learned Judges nor determined by them. It will be observed that they made no reference to the Bombay and Madras cases cited above, and I do not think that, if they had intended to dissent from those decisions, they would not have even mentioned them in their judgment. There can be no doubt that they were not called upon to define the peculiar position occupied by an Official Receiver appointed in the insolvency of a Hindu father, and their judgment is, therefore, distinguishable from the present case."

It is clear from the above observations of the learned Chief Justice that in the Full Bench case the question to be decided was a much narrower one and that, therefore, the Full Bench decision cannot be said to cover the precise question raised in this petition for revision.

Mr. Manohar Lal, Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, has contended that the ruling in Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Asutosh Ghosh (1) fully applies to this case and the decision of the Courts below is right. In the alternative he has contended that the property of the minor is said to have vested in the Receiver on the hypothesis that the family continued to be joint even after the separation of Kalu Ram's branch; but that having regard to the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balabux v. Rukhmabai (3), there can be no presumption when one co-parcener separates from the others that the latter remain united and that unless it is shown that the rest of the members of the family agreed to remain joint it cannot be held that the minor was a member of the joint family to which the insolvents belonged. The following passage in the judgment of their Lordships is relied upon by the learned Counsel:—

"It appears to their Lordships that there is no presumption when one co-parcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares which the other co-parceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all."

The finding of the Courts below on this point seems to be based on an erroneous legal inference drawn from the fact that after the separation of Kalu Ram's branch the rest of the members of the family had continued to live jointly as before. It must be decided upon evidence whether the rest of the members had agreed to continue to remain united. To be able to decide this question I shall have to allow the parties to give further evidence in the case. It is, however, not necessary to do this, for I am clearly of opinion, that this case is fully covered by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Asutosh Ghoseh (1). The case of a son of an insolvent father stands altogether upon a different footing and the rule laid down in the Full Bench decision of this Court cannot be applied to the case of other co-parceners. As laid down in the Calcutta case, it is not open to the Court to direct the Receiver in Insolvency to deal with assets other than those belonging to the persons who have been adjudicated insolvents.

A similar view was expressed in the case of Rangayya Chetti v. Thanikachalla Mudali (4) by the Madras High Court. This case was cited in the Full Bench case and the learned Chief Justice at page 339* made the following observation in respect of it:—

"In Rangayya Chetti v. Thanikachalla Mudali (4) the family consisted of the insolvent, who was the manager there, and his brother and sons. In pursuance of a vesting order made against the manager, the Official Assignee conveyed a house forming part of the family property to the plaintiff who then sued for possession. The suit was resisted by the brother and the sons. The learned Judge, following the judgment in Fakirchand Motichand v. Motichand Hurruckchand (5) held that the Official Assignee could convey only the shares of those persons upon whom the debts of the insolvent were binding and consequently the Court maintained the sale with respect to the sons' interests, but set it aside so far as the brother's share was concerned."

In this decision a clear distinction is made between the case of a son and that of other co-parceners. Following the Calcutta and Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Decree against limited heir—Reversioners, when bound.

A decree obtained against a limited female heir will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by the reversioners after her lifetime, if it is shown that the claim in the prior suit against the limited heir was not against her personally but against the inheritance she represented and that the trial was fairly and honestly conducted.

To ascertain whether a claim was against a limited heir personally or against the estate, the averments, the issues and the findings in the previous suit must be examined and if the contentions raised are those connected with the inheritance and the trial was with reference to them, the limited heir must be deemed to be representing the estate; if not, the litigation must be deemed personal to her and not binding on the reversioners. Certain disputes between the daughters and nephew of a deceased Hindu were settled by a compromise by which the nephew was given certain lands. In a suit by the nephew for possession of those lands the daughters pleaded that their father was divided and that there was no consideration for the compromise which had been obtained by fraud. The Court, finding against fraud and divided status, held that the plaintiff's claim was prima facie bona fide and that the settlement amounted to a compromise of a doubtful claim and decreed the suit. In a later suit by the reversioners against the heirs of the nephew, after the death of the daughters, for possession on the ground that the properties belonged absolutely to the last male holder:

Held, that the suit was barred by res judicata by virtue of the decision in the prior suit in which the daughters represented the estate of their father.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Kistna, at Mausulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 135 of 1920, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna, at Ellore, in Original Suit No. 50 of 1918.

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question to be decided in this appeal is, whether a decree obtained against the daughter of the last male holder operates as a bar to the present suit filed by the plaintiffs after the death of the surviving daughter, as reversioners to the estate. The following pedigree will elucidate the facts:—

After Venkatasubbanna's death Pullamma was in possession of the property. She died about the year 1866 and there were disputes in regard to the right to the estate of Venkatasubbanna between Rajagopalan on the one hand and Venkatasubbamma and Venkatanarasamma on the other. The disputes were settled by the intervention of mediators in 1872 and Exhibit A called Farrikkat bearing the date 5th June 1875 was executed embodying the terms of the settlement. According to Exhibit A each of the daughters was to take 14 acres of land and Rajagopalan 38 acres and odd. Notwithstanding this arrangement, Pullamma's daughters obtained an entry in their names in the Revenue Register. Rajah Gopalan instituted Original Suit No. 87 of 1885 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Ellore for possession of the 38 acres and odd. Venkatasubbamma was impleaded as the first defendant and Venkatanarasamma having died, her son, the present fifth plaintiff, was made the second defendant. As he was a minor his father was appointed his guardian ad litem. Venkatasubhamma contested the suit. The District Munsif dismissed it. Rajagopalan appealed. The Appellate Court allowed the appeal and passed a decree in his favour. Venkatasubhamma preferred a second appeal and the High Court confirmed the decree of the first Appellate Court.

In 1890 the father of plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 instituted Original Suit No. 107 of 1890 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Ellore against Rajagopalan's son Venkayya against Venkatasubhamma and the present plaintiff Nos. 1 and 5 for a declaration that the alienation of the aforesaid 38 acres and odd by the daughters of Venkatasubhamma in favour of Rajagopalan was invalid after the death of the daughters. The District Munsif found that the Farrikkat was supported by consideration, that it was a fair compromise, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation. The Appellate Court upheld the dismissal on the ground of limitation but gave no finding on the question whether the Farrikkat was binding upon the plaintiff in that suit and the other reversioners. A second appeal was preferred and the High Court also dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation.

The present suit was filed by the plaintiffs for the establishment of their right to the same property for a declaration that it belonged absolutely to Venkatasubhamma and that the alienation of the same in favour of Rajagopalan on 5th June 1875 by the daughters of Venkatasubhamma is illegal and not binding on the plaintiffs and for other reliefs. The defendants contended inter alia that the transaction evidenced by Exhibit A was a bona fide settlement of family disputes and that the suit was barred by res judicata by reason of the decisions in the previous suits. Several issues were framed, but the Subordinate Judge heard the case only with reference to the preliminary issue of res judicata and, holding that the previous suits operated as a bar, dismissed the action. The District Judge reversed the Sub-Judge's decision and remanded the suit for disposal on the other issues.

I may state at the outset that the whole of the argument before us was directed only in regard to the effect of the decision in the earlier of the two suits, namely, Original Suit No. 87 of 1885. It was argued for the appellant that the plaintiffs are bound by the result of that suit whereas for the latter (respondents) it was contended that the decision is not binding on them. I may also state that it has not been argued before us that the decree in that suit is binding in any event on the fifth plaintiff who was impleaded as the second defendant in Original Suit No. 87 of 1885. The only question that has, therefore, to be considered is whether all the plaintiffs as a body are bound by the result of Original Suit No. 87 of 1885.

To decide this question it will be necessary to examine with some care the contentions of the parties in that suit and the judgments of the Court of the first instance and the other Courts.

As already observed, the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 87 of 1885 sued Venkatasubhamma and the present fifth plaintiff for possession of the 38 acres and odd referred to above. The defence of the first defendant was that the Farrikkat was obtained by misrepresentation and fraud, and that it was unenforceable for want of consideration. The District Munsif in a long judgment found that no fraud was proved but that the document was not supported by consideration. In arriving at the latter conclusion he discussed the question as to whether Sambanna and Venkatasubhamma had or had not been divided. He apparently was of the opinion that in fact the brothers had been divided and there was no justification for the compromise and a large portion of his judgment was devoted to the consideration of the probabilities in favour of or against partition. There was no oral evidence on this point and his conclusion was based on the recitals in the Farrikkat and the inference drawn from them. He observed in his judgment that there was no distinct issue raised as to division but that the determination of the point was necessary for deciding whether the document was supported by consideration. I may observe, however, that the issue whether the partition was valid and binding on the parties was wide enough to cover the point whether the deed was supported or not by consideration and this in turn involved the consideration of the question whether the two branches of the family were or were not divided. The Munsif in the result dismissed the plaintiff's action.

Rajagopal filed an appeal. The Sub-Judge concurred with the District Munsif that the deed was not obtained by fraud, and he further held that there was consideration for the Farrikhat. On the question of division, he observed that the presumption was that the parties were undivided, and that the circumstances relied on by the District Munsif did not establish that there was a partition and that though he was inclined to the view that the two branches were joint, he considered it sufficient to hold that the claim put forward by Rajagopal was prima facie valid and the compromise entered into amounted to a settlement of a doubtful claim. On this footing he reversed the District Munsif's judgment and passed a decree in favour of Rajagopal.

Venkatasubbamma filed a second appeal and the High Court confirmed the judgment of the Sub-Judge on the ground that Venkatasubbamma failed to show that the compromise was invalid by reason of misrepresentation and fraud. From the judgment of the Munsif it is clear that the only misrepresentation in regard to which parties went to trial had reference to the state of the family, whether it was divided or undivided. If Rajagopal for the purpose of inducing consent to the arrangement had stated to the daughters that the family was undivided, while, in fact, it was divided, the statement would amount to a misrepresentation. The judgment of the High Court was very short and the effect of it is that the findings of the Sub-Judge were accepted.

I must add that the father of the second defendant (the present fifth plaintiff) supported the plaintiff's claim throughout.

On perusing the judgments to which I have referred, I have come to the conclusion that the defences raised by the daughter, while to a certain extent personal to her, were in a large measure inseparable from the estate which she represented. The claim that was put forward was a claim against the estate and if the claimant succeeded in making out that the family was undivided, the daughters would get nothing. It has been repeatedly held, that female heirs can validly compromise claims of this nature. I need only refer to Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1) and Ramsurran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari (2). In the litigation which followed the compromise the widow was quite competent to represent the estate and from the nature of the defence put forward and the question tried, it is abundantly clear that not only she represented the estate but the trial was fairly and honestly conducted.

I am of the opinion that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the result of this litigation was not binding on the present plaintiffs.

The decision of the Privy Council in Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (3) is directly applicable. After adopting a son to her deceased husband a Hindu widow in a suit by an alleged reversioner against her to set aside the adoption on the ground that she had no authority from her husband to make the adoption, alleged in her written statement and stated in Court through her Pleader, that she had authority to make this adoption and that it was valid. The suit was dismissed because the plaintiff was found not to be a reversioner. The widow then brought a suit against the adopted son to set the adoption aside pleading that she was not vested with authority from her husband to adopt and denied having made the adoption. The adopted son contested the suit and the Courts in India dismissed it, the ground of decision being that the widow was estopped from maintaining the suit. On appeal, however, the Privy Council raised an issue as to her authority to adopt and held on the evidence on the issue that the adoption was valid. In a suit, on the death of the widow, by an alleged reversioner to the estate of her husband, against the adopted son for a declaration that the adoption was invalid and for possession of the estate, it was held by the Privy Council that, notwithstanding the personal estoppel which bound her, the widow represented the estate on the question of fact as to whether the defendant (respondent) had or had not been validly adopted, and that she represented it within the meaning of the rule laid down in Katama Natchier v. Rajah of Shinagunga (4) and under the circumstances the decree against her would bind the reversioners. It seems to me that I may casually refer to one very important circumstance in connection with the case. It was contended before the Privy Council that the decision of the Board in the previous litigation did not operate as a bar to the maintenance of the later suit on the ground that the evidence to show that the widow had no authority to adopt had been excluded in her suit and that there were no materials before the Board which justified a finding that the adoption had been validly made.

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee dealt with the contention thus: "It is true that Rani Dharam Kunwar applied to the Subordinate Judge that evidence should be taken, but it does not appear that she ever applied to have witnesses summoned or tendered any evidence which was rejected. It is difficult to conceive what oral evidence Rani Dharam Kunwar could have produced, except her own personal evidence to prove that she had received from Raja Raghu Bir Singh no authority to adopt, and if she had given evidence that she had no authority to make the adoption such evidence, having regard to her own acts and documentary evidence on record, could not have been accepted as true."

Then their Lordships continue: "the Board in 1912 were satisfied, and rightly satisfied, that no further evidence as to the authority or absence of authority to adopt could be expected to be produced by anybody beyond the evidence then already taken."

I refer to the above, because it follows from this, that if the Court is satisfied that the former trial was fair and honest, the mere fact that the reversioner considers that the evidence adduced by the widow in the previous action is insufficient or that he would have in similar circumstances produced more or better evidence, does not in the least affect the question.

It was further contended before their Lordships that the widow laboured under a personal estoppel and, therefore, she could not have represented the estate on the question of fact as to whether the adoption was or was not valid. This argument is dealt with in the following passage: "In the absence of all authority their Lordships cannot decide that a Hindu lady otherwise qualified to represent an estate in litigation ceases to be so qualified merely owing to personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant, although the merits are tried and the trial is fair and honest."

The learned District Judge has relied upon Subbi Ganpatibhatta v. Ramkrishna-bhatta (5) in support of his view. The facts are entirely dissimilar and the case does not seem to have much bearing. A widow consented to a gift, and 24 years later filed a suit to recover the property gifted alleging that she had consented to and approved of the gift upon certain conditions which were not complied with by the donees. The defendants resisted the suit on the ground that they held the property adversely to any estate which she represented. The suit was dismissed as barred by limitation.

It was held that on her death a suit by her daughter as heir and reversioner of her father was not barred by the previous action. The learned Judges held that a special Article like 141 of the Limitation Act must be taken to override the more general Articles such as Arts. 142 and 144 and that the limitation could not begin to run against the reversioners during the widow's life.

The act of gift was an act personal in its nature and had no relation to the inheritance which the widow represented. The claim in the suit by the widow was based on the ground that certain conditions had not been complied with by the donees. It is difficult to imagine how the widow can be said to have represented the estate either in making the alienation or in instituting the suit. The ground alleged the suit was one personal to the female heir. Having regard to the facts stated, the decision cannot be said to be an authority for the wider proposition that the widow in the enjoyment of a life-estate can never fully represent the estate in any litigation arising out of acts of her own. There are no doubt some passages in this judgment which state the principle in wide and general terms. At page 79 * the learned Judges say: "nor will litigation by the widow in the enjoyment of such a life-estate, whether she be plaintiff or defendant, represent the estate fully so as to give rise to a bar of res judicata against the reversioners if such litigation is qualified and personal to the widow or has arisen out of acts of her own affecting the estate during her own life-estate therein." The latter part of the proposition that the widow cannot represent the estate in any case when the litigation has arisen out of her own acts seems to be directly opposed to the principle laid down in Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (3) already referred to. In this case the act of adoption was the act of the widow and she had challenged the adoption in the previous litigation. The reversioners were bound by the result of the suit to which the widow was a party.

I may also refer to another decision of the Judicial Committee Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (6) which relates to a case of a shebait of an idol. The principle laid down, however, is equally applicable to the case of a Hindu widow. The appellants as *shebait*s sued to set aside decrees obtained by the respondent against their immediate predecessor the shebait Rajah Baboo. The latter had borrowed monies from the respondent to defray the expenses of the idol and of repairing the temple. Suits were brought by the respondent and issues were raised and evidence gone into upon the question of fact whether the monies were bona fide borrowed and expended for the service of the idol. The issues were found in favour of the respondents and it was decided that the debt should be realised from the profits of davattar mahal. Were these decrees binding upon the succeeding *shebait*s, the appellants? It will be noticed that the litigation arose out of the acts of the Raja Baboo himself and that he as shebait had defended the suits brought upon bonds executed by him in favour of the respondent. Nevertheless, their Lordships held that the decrees were binding upon Raja Baboo's successors and they observe: "Judgments obtained against the former *shebait*s in respect of debts so incurred should be binding upon the succeeding *shebait*s who in fact form a continuing representation of the idol's property."

They lay down that, before applying the principle of res judicata to judgments of this character, the Court should take care to be satisfied that the decrees relied on are untainted by fraud or collusion and that necessary and proper issues were raised, tried, and decided in the suits which led to them.

The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court place reliance upon Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (7) and Braja Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy (8). In Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (7) a testator died in 1869 leaving two widows one of whom died in 1871 and the other in 1888 and devised the whole residue of his estate to trustees for a charity and, shortly after the death of the surviving widow, the heir-at-law sued to declare the devise to charity void and for administration. It was held that Art. 141 applied, that the suit was not barred, and that Art. 144 did not apply. There is no reference in the judgment to the principle in support of which this case was cited as an authority in the decision of the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court.

In Braja Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy (8) it was held that the dismissal of a previous suit filed by a female heir which was for recovery only of her limited estate would not be a bar to a subsequent suit by the reversioner which was for the recovery of the absolute estate which vested in him. In the course of the judgment at page 297, it was observed:—"But if a suit, though concerning the absolute estate, is determined upon a ground personal to the female heir, for instance, if a suit brought by a Hindu widow to recover possession of immoveable property appertaining to her husband's estate is dismissed on the ground of its having been alienated by her in favour of the defendant, in the absence of legal necessity being shown, the decree in such a case ought not to bind the reversioner." This passage, far from being an authority for the very wide rule enunciated in Subbi Ganpatibhai v. Ramkrishnabhatta (5), expressly states the qualification "in the absence of legal necessity being shown." The inference is that if the legal necessity had been shown the decree might be binding upon the reversioner.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that Subbi Ganpatibhai v. Ramkrishnabhatta (5) is distinguishable on the facts and that the present case falls within the principle given effect to in Risal Singh v. Batwant Singh (3). The learned Vakil for the respondent has relied upon Nalla Tirupatiragu v. Nandikolla Venkayya (9) in support of the proposition that where the transaction arises out of the act of the widow she can in no circumstances be said to represent the estate in any litigation connected with that act. In the first place, I must observe that the learned Judges were dealing with merely a question of onus and not with the binding character of the transaction. Secondly, the case arose with reference to a compromise of a suit and not to a decree passed after contest. A Hindu widow first mortgaged her husband's estate for a debt contracted by her, then she was sued by the mortgagee, and she compromised the suit by selling to him the mortgaged properties. The question to be decided was, on whom was the burden of proof that the compromise, in other words, the sale, was valid and binding upon the reversioners?

It was held that the onus was upon the mortgagee purchaser. It was conceded that the burden of proof would be upon the mortgagee if he sought to enforce his mortgage. Did the circumstance that, subsequent to the mortgage, she entered into a compromise and made an out and out alienation of the property, dispense with the necessity on the part of the alienee to prove in the first instance that the alienation was binding on the estate? The learned Judges held that it did not. I am unable to regard the decision as containing any pronouncement on the question at issue.

Whether the widow represented the inheritance may be gathered from the nature of the defence put forward and the issues raised, tried, and decided in the former suit. The mere allegation that she did or did not, would be of little value. Was the suit based upon a mere personal cause of action by or against the widow? Was it a ground personal to the female heir that was taken in a previous suit? Was it a claim by or against the widow personally or the inheritance which she represented? To decide these questions you must examine the averments, the issues and the findings in the previous suit. If the contentions raised are those connected with the inheritance and the trial was with reference to them, the widow must be held to be representing the estate, if not the litigation must be deemed personal to her and not binding upon the reversioners, I conceive this to be the effect of Katama Natchier v. Rajah of Shrivagunda (4), Risal Singh v. Batwant Singh (3). I pointed out already that in Original Suit No. 87 of 1885 the defence put forward by the daughter, that the Fayikkat was not supported by consideration, necessitated the determination of the question whether there had been a partition or not between the two branches of the family. I further pointed out that there was a fair and honest trial of this question. The contention referred to was not personal to the widow but was intimately connected with the estate which she represented.

Applying the principles of law which I have set forth above to the facts of the present case, I have no hesitation in holding that the decision in Original Suit No. 87 of 1885 does operate as a bar to the suit and I would, therefore, allow the appeal with costs.

Spencer, J.—I entirely agree that the decision in Original Suit No. 87 of 1985 binds the reversioners as there was a bona fide contest and a final decision by a competent Court. The appeal is allowed with costs and the decree of the Sub-Judge is restored.

Landlord and tenant—Agreement to settle land—Payment of salami—Failure to execute kabuliyat, effect of.

Plaintiff, who was in occupation of certain land belonging to the second defendant, obtained a settlement of the land from the latter subject to the payment of a certain sum as salami and the execution of a kabuliyat within fifteen days. He paid the salami and although he continued in possession of the land, did not execute the kabuliyat till several months after. In the meantime, the landlord cancelled the arrangement with the plaintiff and settled the land with first defendant;

Held, that the plaintiff had acquired the rights of a tenant on the date on which the land was settled with him, and that the delay in the execution of the kabuliyat could not affect the tenancy which had already been granted to the plaintiff, and the landlord was not competent to cancel the arrangement with the plaintiff so as to enable him to make a new settlement.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Midnapore, dated the 22nd of March 1920, affirming that of the Munsif Fourth Court at that place, dated the 16th of December 1918.

Babus Ram Chandra Mazumdar (with him Jyotimohan Bhattacharjee), for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title and possession. First Court decreed the suit. On appeal the decree was affirmed. The appellant is the transferee from the landlord. The decree was passed without consideration of the settlement with the defendant by the landlord. The defendant is the zamin-dar. The plaintiff applied for settlement which was accepted. The plaintiff paid Rs. 90 as salami. The kabuliyat was to have been executed within 15 days which was not done. Sometime after, he filed the registered kabuliyat which was rejected. I then got settlement after there had been a fresh notification for settlement. I submit my settlement under the circumstances ought to prevail.

Babu Santimoy Mazumdar, for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The second defendant is admittedly the landlord of the disputed property. A notification was issued by him inviting applications for acceptance of settlement of the land. The plaintiff, it is found, applied on the 6th May 1917; thereupon the following order was recorded: "Let the land be settled with the plaintiff at a rental of Rs. 1 per bigha on taking kabuliyat from him on his paying Rs. 90 as salami and that the kabuliyat be given within 15 days." The plaintiff paid the salami; but the kabuliyat was not executed within 15 days; the plaintiff who had been in possession from before, however, continued in occupation. On the 14th September 1917 the plaintiff executed a kabuliyat according to the draft supplied to him by the officers of the landlord. Meanwhile, on the 27th August 1917, the landlord had cancelled what he considered to be a void agreement and directed a fresh notification to issue. The consequence was that the first defendant applied for settlement and an order was made in his favour. This took place after the kabuliyat had been executed by the plaintiff. In these circumstances, the Courts below have held that the plaintiff acquired the status of a tenant and that he was entitled to succeed as against the subsequent grantee. We are of opinion that this view is manifestly correct.

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE OF MULTAN V. TAHLIA RAM.

It has been argued before us that the Courts below should not have made a decree in favour of the plaintiff without an investigation of the question whether the first defendant was or was not aware of the arrangement with the plaintiff. There is no force in this contention. The plaintiff, in our judgment, acquired the right of a tenant on the 6th May 1917, and no question arises as to competition between two persons. The delay in execution of the habuliyat could not affect the tenancy which had already been granted to the plaintiff and the landlord was not competent to cancel the arrangement with the plaintiff so as to enable him to make a new settlement.

The result is that the decree of the Sub-ordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Punjab Municipal Act (Punjab I I I of 1911), ss. 169, 170, 173—Public street—Lease of portion—Municipality, right of.

When a street has vested in a Municipal Committee, it only has the power to exercise rights over it in order to maintain it as a street and for purposes of public use as such. It has no right to interfere with the enjoyment of the right of way by the public by letting out a portion of it to a particular individual for a private purpose. [p. 293, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 30th May 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Multan, dated the 20th December 1920.

Lala Hari Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which the present second appeal arises are given fully in the judgments of the lower Courts and are briefly as follows:—The Municipal Committee of Multan has leased a plot of land 4 ft. by 5 ft. in a public street in front of the plaintiff's shop to one Ranjit Ram who has made it over to Mehnga, defendant No. 2, who has set up a stall where he cooks and sells meat to the passers by. Plaintiff sued for an injunction to issue to the Municipal Committee that it should remove the obstruction and should not in future let out the plot of land to any one. The Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's claim and the Municipal Committee appeals.

The First Court found that plaintiff suffered special damage from the erection of the meat stall in front of his shop and this finding was not contested in the grounds of appeal to the learned District Judge. The latter held that the Punjab Municipal Act gave the Municipality no right to lease out a portion of a public street which had been vested in it under section 56 of the Act. Lala Hari Chand, the appellant's Vakil, has referred me to the following sections of the Municipal Act:—

Sections 169 and 170. These sections allow the Committee to close a public street for a public purpose; to divert, discontinue or close permanently a public street or to sell the land forming such street or a part thereof and to permit temporary occupation of streets, etc., for certain purposes. These sections do not give any authority to a Committee to lease any portion of a street for any specified term.

Section 173 (1) (c). It lays down that whoever without the permission of the Committee deposits building materials, goods for sale or other articles of merchandise on any street shall be punishable with a fine which may extend to Rs. 50.

On this it is argued that a person may deposit goods for sale with the permission of the Committee, or, in other words, that the Committee may give any person permission to deposit goods for sale on any public street. In my opinion, however, this section does not give the Committee any such power. It no doubt may have power to allow goods for sale to be deposited on certain streets which are not public streets or which belonged absolutely to it. The section in question only imposes a penalty upon persons who do certain things without permission. It does not grant powers of any sort to a Municipal Committee.

Lala Hari Chand further referred to section 240 (o) and to a Notification of the Government in virtue of which the Committee can only lease property which has vested in it for a period not exceeding ten years except with the sanction of higher authority. It cannot, however, be inferred from this that the Committee can lease any portion of a public street. The contention on behalf of the appellant is that as the public street in question has vested in the Municipality, it has full powers to use it in any way it likes. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri for the respondents argued that the street in question is not the property of the Municipality but only has vested in it, and for the meaning of the word "vest" refers to Sundaram Ayyar v. Municipal Council of Madurai (1) the head-note of this is as follows:— "When a street is vested in a Municipal Council, such vesting does not transfer to the Municipal authority the rights of the owner in the site or soil over which the street exists. It does not own the soil... but it has the exclusive right to manage and control the surface of the soil and so much of the soil below and of the space above the surface as is necessary to enable it to adequately maintain the street as a street."

Numerous English authorities are referred to in this ruling at page 646 of the report it is stated that:—

"The conclusion to be drawn from the English case-law is that what is vested in urban authorities under Statutes similar to the District Municipalities Act, is not the land over which the street is formed, but the street qua street and that the property in the street thus vested in a Municipal Council is not general property or a species of property known to the Common Law, but a special property created by Statute and vested in a corporate body for public purposes."

At page 645 of the report there is a quotation from the judgment of Lord Herschell in which his Lordship says:—

"It seems to me that the vesting of the streets vests in the urban authority such property and such property only as is necessary for the control, protection and maintenance of the street as a highway for public use."

In accordance with this authority it appears to me that the street in question has vested in the Municipal Committee of Multan and it only has power to exercise rights over it in order to maintain it as a street and for the purposes of public use as such.

The learned District Judge has referred to certain pages of Peacock's Law of Easement in British India which appear to me to be in point. The passage quoted from page 234 of the Second Edition seems particularly to be in point and it is as follows:—

"In the case of an ordinary highway, although it may be of a varying and unequal width running between fences, one on each side, the right of passage or way, prima facie, extends to the whole space between the fences; and the public are entitled to the use of the entire of it as the highway and are not confined to the part which may be metalled or kept in order for the more convenient use of carriages and foot passengers."

I fully agree with the learned District Judge in his view that the Municipal Committee cannot use a public street otherwise than as a public street, and that it has no right to interfere with the enjoyment of the right of way by the public by letting out a portion of it to a particular individual for a private purpose. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The plaintiffs brought a suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration of their paini taluk right to certain jungle alleging that the defendant No. 6 with a large number of men was ready to cut the trees in the jungle. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs had no right in the jungle and that they had no possession for 12 years. While the suit was pending the plaintiffs applied for an ad interim injunction to restrain the defendant from cutting any trees, and on the 28th November 1921 the Subordinate Judge passed an order restraining the defendants from disposing of such trees as they might cut in reclaiming the land till the disposal of the suit. The Subordinate Judge's view was that the defendants were apparently entitled to cut trees for the purpose of reclamation and that, while it was not proper and reasonable to restrain them from cutting any trees at all, it would be right and proper to restrain them from disposing of the trees that they might cut.

The present appeal was lodged by the defendants on the ground that this is not a case in which there can be any interim injunction. Now, the general principle applicable to cases of this kind is that where a permanent injunction cannot be given, no prayer for a temporary injunction will be allowed. The learned Vakil for the respondents urges that it is necessary that the status quo should be preserved and that the trees should not be allowed to go out of the hands of the defendants in the event of the plaintiffs succeeding in their present suit, but he forgets that the present suit is only for declaration and that it will not give the plaintiffs any consequential relief so far as the trees are concerned. Upon the frame of the plaint it may be contended that the present suit does not lie; that is another matter which will be decided at the trial; but, so far as the justice of the case goes, I see no reason why the defendants who deny the plaintiffs' title and claim to be in possession, should be restrained from disposing of what they claim to be their own property. The learned Vakil for the respondents attempted to distinguish the case of Jital Singh v. Raja Kamaleswari Prosad (1); in that case the interim prayer was to restrain a person who had obtained a decree from executing such decree while a suit was pending for a declaration that the decree had been obtained without jurisdiction, and the principle that an ad interim injunction ought not to be given when permanent relief is not obtainable was affirmed; this principle is consistent with reason and in the present case, therefore, we should comply with it.

The result is that the appeal is allowed with costs.

Contract—Breach of promise—Cause of action.

If there is a contract binding upon the co-sharers of a village, by the terms of which one of them is not to sell any share in the village to a stranger without offering the other co-sharers an opportunity of purchasing at the same price and a co-sharer does in fact sell a share in the village to a stranger in contravention of the terms of that contract, the circumstance that the period for which the contract was to run, came to an end before another co-sharer could institute a suit to enforce his right, will not deprive the latter of his right to maintain the suit upon the cause of action which had already arisen. [p. 295, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 27th October 1920.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for pre-emption on the basis of a deed, bearing date the 12th April 1919, by which the defendants, second party, conveyed a share in village Ambahari to the first defendant, who is a relation of theirs by marriage. The deed, on the face of it, is a shankalap, or gift in favour of a Brahman, made from motives of gratitude and piety. The plaintiff, however, who is a co-sharer in the same village, came into Court alleging that the deed of gift was a mere cover for a contract of sale, which had really been carried out by the payment of consideration amounting to Rs. 200 on the part of the first defendant to the defendants, second party. In reply, this allegation was denied and both sets of defendants contended that the transaction was a transfer by way of gift, as it purports to be in the document by which it was effected. They also denied that the plaintiff had any right of pre-emption. The First Court found on the evidence that there had really been a sale for a sum of Rs. 200 and held that the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt. Both points were raised in appeal; but the lower Appellate Court contented itself with recording a finding that it was not proved that the plaintiff had a right of pre-emption under any custom prevailing in the village. The second appeal before us is by the plaintiff and his main contention, the only one which has been pressed upon us in argument, is that he has a right of pre-emption under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz of 1885, independently altogether of the question whether this is a record of contract or of custom. The suit as brought purported to be based on the conditions of the wajib-ul-arz and the custom of the village. We think it was open to the plaintiff to rely on the wajib-ul-arz, and we find that this argument was pressed in the lower Appellate Court. The learned District Judge remarks that it was admitted before him that the deed of transfer in suit was executed during the pendency of the Settlement at which the wajib-ul-arz was prepared, on the strength of which the plaintiff claims a right to pre-empt. He thinks, however, that the fact that the suit was instituted after the period of the Settlement had expired would prevent the plaintiff from claiming any right based upon the contract, if it be a contract recorded in this document. Obviously, if there was a contract binding on the plaintiff and on the vendor defendants by the terms of which the latter were not to sell any share in the village to a stranger without offering the plaintiff an opportunity of purchasing at the same price, and they did in fact sell a share in the village to a stranger in contravention of the terms of that contract, the circumstance that the period for which the contract was to run, came to an end before the plaintiff could institute a suit to enforce his right, would not deprive the plaintiff of his right to maintain a suit upon a cause of action which had already arisen. We should not have been prepared to affirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the grounds on which it proceeds. On a perusal of the judgments of the Courts below, however, we were greatly impressed with the contention in favour of the defendant that the transfer in question was a gift pure and simple. As the lower Appellate Court has not seen fit to examine the evidence on this point, and as we think it expe-lient that a suit of this nature should be concluded as soon as possible, we have ourselves looked into the very scanty evidence on the point. We think it sufficient to say that we are wholly dissatisfied with the manner in which the learned Munsif criticised and appraised that evidence. The deed upon which the suit is based is, on the face of it, a deed of gift pure and simple and the motive for making such a gift was not lacking. The learned Munsif thinks it practically impossible that the defendants, second party, should have made such a gift, because their witnesses said that the property gifted was worth a thousand rupees or more. He has, however, practically accepted the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiff, who say that the property was only worth Rs. 200. The plaintiff cannot have it both ways. He is not entitled to contend that the property involved in this transfer is so valuable as to make it grossly improbable that the defendants, second party, should have made a gift of it, and, at the same time, to claim that it is worth only Rs. 200 and was in fact transferred for its full market-value. In our opinion the transaction should have been upheld, upon the finding that the transfer in question was a gift pure and simple not subject to any right of pre-emption. For these reasons we dismiss this appeal.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (2) (b)— Agreement to effect mortgage—Agreement creating

An agreement to merely effect a mortgage is admissible in evidence without registration, but if it is relied on as justifying a declaration to a charge as distinguished from a mortgage, it ceases to be a document, merely creating a right to obtain another document but becomes in effect a document operating to create a charge in future, when the declaration sought is made, and requires registration to render it admissible in evidence.

Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich, 10 C. 315; 8 Ind. Jur. 436; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 211; followed.

Mr. Setalvad, for the Plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.—This suit has been heard ex parte as a short cause.

As I felt some difficulty in granting reliefs (b) and (c) claimed in the plaint, I heard further arguments both on the question of jurisdiction and as to the effect of the agreement of December 10, 1918, to execute a mortgage.

As regards the question of jurisdiction, I do not feel any difficulty now. I have dealt with this question in the judgment delivered in Jasraj v. Akubai, Original Civil Jurisdiction Suit No. 2839 of 1922, decided by Shah, J., on November 13, 1922.

As regards the agreement, I am satisfied that it cannot be used for the purpose of holding that there is a charge on the property mentioned therein. As an agreement to effect a mortgage it would be admissible in evidence; but if it is relied upon as justifying a declaration as to charge as distinguished from a mortgage, it seems to me that it ceases to be a document merely creating a right to obtain another document, but becomes in effect a document operating to create a charge in future 'when the declaration sought is made.'

I have considered the argument urged by Mr. Setalvad that the document does not operate to create a charge; but that the charge is the result of such an agreement by operation of law. I am unable to accept the contention. If that is the effect of the document it operates to create such an interest, and would require to be registered. I need not deal with this question at any length. The ratio decidendi in Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich (1) appears to me to afford a complete Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 27—Specific performance—Constructive notice, doctrine of, applicability of—Third person in possession—Duty of purchaser to make enquiry.

Defendant purchased a piece of land knowing that the superstructure on the land belonged to another person than his vendor. He made no inquiry as to the nature of that person's possession or that of his sub-tenants who were actually in occupation under him, and it ultimately appeared that there was a prior contract to sell in favour of that person. In a suit by the latter for specific performance of the agreement to sell in his favour:

Held, that defendant must be taken in law to have had constructive notice of the prior agreement to sell and of all the equities in favour of the plaintiff, since he had wilfully abstained from or grossly neglected to make an inquiry which would have informed him of the prior agreement and he was, therefore, not entitled to resist plaintiff's suit for specific performance. [p. 299, col. 1.]

The general principle of constructive notice in such cases as the above is that notice of the occupation of the properties purchased by a person other than the vendor which indicates that the vendor is not entitled to present possession, at once puts the purchaser on inquiry as to the interest that occupier holds in the property. Where nothing more is known to the purchaser, or would be known to him, on reasonable enquiry, than the fact that certain tenants are in occupation under a tenant right, he is not affected with notice of more than the facts as to those tenants' rights. [p. 298, col. 2.]

But when, beyond this, the purchaser is directly informed and, therefore, knows of the occupation of the property by another whether by himself or by his sub-tenants he is equally put upon notice to inquire into the interest of that other. The absence of such inquiry will fasten the purchaser with all the equities which the occupier holds against the purchaser's vendor. [p. 298, col. 2; p. 299, col. 1.]

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Appellant (Defendant No. 4).—The plaintiff is not entitled to specific performance against the 4th defendant who is bona fide purchaser for value.

Section 27 of the Specific Relief Act lays down the law as to the persons against whom alone specific performance can be granted. The 4th defendant comes within the exception in clause (b) to section 27, namely, that in favour of a person who had paid money in good faith without notice of the original contract. There is no suggestion or finding that the 4th defendant had actual notice. The only question, therefore, is whether he had in law constructive notice.

Notice is defined in section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no question of wilful abstention from enquiry which ought to have been made or gross negligence. Admittedly, the actual occupation was with tenants, and that was a fact within the appellant's knowledge. The inquiry would have served no purpose. The tenants could not be expected to give information regarding their landlord's contract.

The case in Daniels v. Davison (1) relied on by the lower Court is an extreme view of the law.

That cannot be extended to cases of this kind, where the person who claims the benefit of the original contract is not the person in actual occupation. Vide Barnhart v. Greenshields (2), Hunt v. Luck (3), affirmed Hunt v. Luck (4).

If Daniels v. Davison (1) is to be applied to India it must be so applied as interpreted and circumscribed by Barnhart v. Greenshields (2). See also Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 14th Edition, pages 548, 762; Sudgen's Vendors and Purchasers, Sixth Edition, Vol. II, p. 975.

Messrs. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, Muhammad Ibrahim Sahib and C. Venkatasubbaramiah, for the Plaintiff-Respondent.—I submit the appellant must be held to have had constructive notice. The position is rendered clear by Illustration (3) to section 27 of the Specific Relief Act and Illustration (h) to section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act. The cases in Knight v. Bowyer (5) and Bailey v. Richardson (6) and Faki Ibrahim v. Faki Gulam Mohidin (7) support my contention fully.

JUDGMENT.—The substantive point for decision in City Civil Court Appeal No. 29 of 1921 is, whether on the date of his purchase under Exhibit IV appellant (4th defendant) had notice of the prior agreement by first defendant to sell the same property to the plaintiff. Plaintiff owns the superstructure on the land bought by appellant under Exhibit IV from defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who in their turn had bought under Exhibit III from first defendant. It is not disputed that plaintiff held an agreement prior to both Exhibits III and IV from first defendant to sell the land to him.

2. Appellant admitted in evidence that at the time of his purchase, he learnt from Exhibit III that the superstructure belonged to plaintiff, and that he made no enquiry of plaintiff under what right he occupied the land. It appears that he made no enquiries whatever, either from his vendors, (e.g., whether they were receiving the ground rent from anyone), or from first defendant their vendor, or from plaintiff, or from the sub-tenants actually in occupation of the superstructure under plaintiff. Such utter absence of reasonable enquiry is either wilful or grossly negligent.

3. The general principle of constructive notice in such a case is that notice of occupation (of the property purchased) by a person other than the vendor, which indicates that the vendor is not entitled to present possession, at once puts the purchaser on enquiry as to the interest that occupier holds in the property. The usual case is where the property is physically occupied by tenants, and then the purchaser is, by that occupation itself which puts him on enquiry, in law affected with notice of the interest which these tenants have in the property. He is by their occupation not affected with notice of more than the terms on which they hold, including any agreement collateral to their leases, but he is not bound to enquire, nor are they bound to answer to whom they pay rent, so that the purchaser is not in such a case affected with notice of the tenant's lessor's title or rights. This is the general principle laid down in a series of English cases from Daniels v. Davison (1) onwards, succinctly dealt with in Hunt v. Luck (3). The principle has been embodied in India in section 27 of the Specific Relief Act and section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act.

4. So that, where nothing more is known to the purchaser, or would be known to him on reasonable enquiry, than the fact that certain tenants are in occupation under a tenant right, he is not affected with notice of more than the facts as to those tenants' rights. But when, beyond this, the purchaser is directly informed and, therefore, knows of the occupation of the property by another whether by himself or by his sub-tenants, he is equally put upon notice to enquire into the interest of that other. This is no extension of the principle above-mentioned, but a mere application of it. It makes no difference in principle whether the occupation by another is brought to his notice by physical occupation or by direct information. Where, then, the purchaser is definitely informed that another is in occupation of the property whether himself directly or through sub-tenants does not matter, he is at once put on enquiry as to the nature of the interest of that other in the property. This application of the general principle is clearly set out in Hunt v. Luck (3) quoted above, and has been followed in India in the case reported as Faki Ibrahim v. Faki Gulam Mohidin (7). The absence of such enquiry will fasten the purchaser with all the equities which the occupier holds against the purchaser's vendor.

5. Now, in the present case, appellant knew, and apparently knew nothing more than, that plaintiff was the owner of the superstructure, and appellant does not say whether he knew that plaintiff was not occupying it himself. With such knowledge it was incumbent on him to enquire into the nature of the interest held by plaintiff, and, if he wilfully abstained, as he did, from making any enquiry, or was grossly negligent, as he was, in making enquiry, he will be, in law, affected with notice of any fact which he would have come to know had he made such enquiry. Such an enquiry would have told him that plaintiff was a tenant under first defendant, and would also, as soon as he enquired the period of plaintiff's interest in the land, i.e., the period of the tenancy, as he was also bound to do, have informed him that the tenancy was to come to an end as soon as first defendant executed and registered the deed of sale of the land which he had agreed to sell to plaintiff. We must, therefore, hold that appellant wilfully abstained from, or grossly neglected to make, an enquiry which would have informed him of the prior agreement by first defendant to sell the land to plaintiff which precluded first defendant from selling it to his (appellant's) vendors and that appellant had in law constructive notice of that fact. Plaintiff is entitled then and has an equity, to repel the claim of the appellant, who made no enquiry as to the nature of his possession. Where appellant made no enquiry at all, he is taken to have had constructive notice of all the equities in favour of plaintiff. The fact that his immediate vendor was not first defendant, but purchasers from first defendant, does not affect this question of notice.

6. Appellant, then, though possibly a purchaser in good faith was a purchaser with notice of the contract to sell of which plaintiff now seeks specific performance and cannot, therefore, (vide section 27, Specific Relief Act) resist the plaintiff's suit.

7. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court's decision, though the reasons given by it are hardly adequate. It follows that this appeal must be dismissed and we dismiss it with costs to plaintiff and half costs to first defendant, payable by appellant. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 will within one month from to-day execute the conveyance directed by the decree of the lower Court regarding the land in schedule A, and on execution thereof the Rs. 1,000 now in deposit in the lower Court will be paid out to 4th defendant.

App. Nos. 33 and 34 of 1921 are not pressed before us and are dismissed with costs to 4th defendant and half costs to first defendant (in C. C. C. App. No. 33 of 1921) payable by appellant. JHABHU V. BATUL.

The cause of action for a suit for damages in respect of a wrongful restraint under the first clause of section 146 of the Agra Tenancy Act takes its origin from the day on which the distraint comes to an end and the suit may be lawfully instituted within the prescribed limitation period of three months calculated from the said date. Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 30th May 1921.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was under section 146 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, II. of 1901. As it has been disposed of upon a question of limitation and this is the only question before us to-day for determination, we have to look narrowly at the frame of the plaint in order to see whether, on the allegations therein made, the plaintiffs were or were not seeking their remedy within the period prescribed by law. What the plaintiffs say is that they were lessees of one village and the defendants lessees of another, and there was bad blood between them because the plaintiffs had succeeded in securing a lease which the defendant were coveting. The plaintiffs had cut and stacked, from the land within the purview of their lease, a large quantity of thatching grass which they hoped to sell at a substantial profit. The defendants, it is alleged, wrongfully and maliciously levied a distraint under colour of the provision of Chapter IX, of the Tenancy Act, upon this grass of the plaintiffs. The immediate result of this was that the plaintiffs missed their market and were unable to sell their grass, while the defendants were disposing of theirs. In the meantime, the rainy season began and the land upon which the plaintiffs' stacks were standing was flooded. The plaintiffs brought a suit to contest the distraint and finally succeeded in obtaining an order from the Court setting the dis-traint aside. When, however, they became entitled to re-enter into possession of their own grass the stacks had been so damaged by rain and flood as to be utterly worthless. Therefore, the plaintiffs claimed the full value of the stacks, as the correct measure of damages for the wrong done to them by the defendants in wrongfully distraining the same. As regards dates, we may note that the distraint was levied on the 15th of May 1919. The suit under section 142 of the Tenancy Act, to contest the distraint, was promptly instituted, but was not terminated by the Court's order releasing the grass until the 16th of September 1919. The present suit for damages was instituted on the 12th of December 1919. The Assistant Collector examined the parties and fixed various issues, the first of which was an issue of limitation. He took evidence tendered by both parties. We have thought it worth while to look at the statements of the parties and the evidence produced by them, and, having examined the record in order to make it perfectly clear to our minds what the parties were really fighting about in the Trial Court, it seems to us even clearer than it would have been upon a mere examination of the plaint, that the essential cause of action put forward and relied upon by the plaintiffs was the wrongful nature of the distraint. The Assistant Collector, however, treated the suit as one falling wholly and solely within the purview of the second clause to section 146 of the Tenancy Act. Following the decision of this Court in the case of Dambar Singh v. Balwant Singh (1) he held that it was barred by limitation. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court. In their Memorandum of Appeal they undoubtedly took the point that the finding against the plaintiffs on the question of limitation is contrary to law and, further, that their cause of action accrued to them on the 16th of September 1919, that is, on the date on which the distraint terminated under the orders of the Court, and not previously. They did not, however, take in plain terms the plea, which, in our opinion, they should have done, namely, that the suit as brought was in its essence one falling under the first, and not under the second, clause of section 146 aforesaid. The District Judge, dealing with the matter on the same lines which had been followed by the Court of first instance, affirmed the decision of that Court and dismissed the appeal. There was a second appeal to this Court and we may make the same comment regarding the drafting of the Memorandum of Appeal to this Court. We have before us, however, the referring order of the learned Judges before whom the appeal was first argued, and that order makes it clear enough that the case for the plaintiffs-appellants was presented to that Bench in a two-fold form.

First, it was contended that, treating the suit as one under the second clause of section 146 of the Tenancy Act, it was nevertheless within limitation under serial No. 6 of the 4th Schedule to the said Act, because the right to bring this suit did not accrue to the plaintiffs before the 16th of September 1919.

Secondly, it was contended that, even if this first plea be repelled by the Court, the suit being essentially based upon the allegation that the distraint levied by the defendants was a wrongful distraint, it was a suit upon a continuing wrong; within the meaning of section 23 of the Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908. That wrong being the distraint maliciously levied by the defendants, had continued until the distraint was brought to an end under the orders of the Court. Therefore, from this point of view the plaintiffs' suit was rightly brought within three months of the 16th of September 1919 the date on which the distraint came to an end.

We now turn to examine the first two clauses of section 146 of Local Act No. II of 1901. In so far as these clauses are applicable to the facts of the present suit, the first clause gives a right to institute a suit for compensation against the distrainer, if any person under colour of this Act distrains any property otherwise than according to the provisions of this Act. The claim must be for compensation for any injury which the plaintiff has thereby sustained; that is to say, has sustained in consequence of this distraint wrongfully made under colour of the provisions of the Tenancy Act. The second clause gives the owner of distrained property a right of action for damages, independent altogether of the question whether the distraint was or was not lawful and proper. The cause of action for a suit under this clause is the distrainer's not having taken proper precautions for the preservation of the distrained property and consequent loss, damage or destruction of the same. What was laid down in Dambar Singh v. Balwant Singh (1) was, in effect; that the cause of action for a suit under this clause is the loss, damage or destruction to the property and that, consequently, it is to the date of such loss, damage or destruction that the Court must look when computing the prescribed period of limitation which is three months from the date on which the right to sue accrued. The words above quoted from the Fourth Schedule to the Local Tenancy Act are purposely general in their effect because they have to cover the three different kinds of suits provided for by section 146 of the Act. As applied to the second clause, however, their effect seems to us to have been rightly stated in the case of Dambar Singh v. Balwant Singh (1). Here the plaintiffs, on their own admission, knew in the month of July that their stacks of grass had been practically ruined by rain and flood. They had a right to bring their suit on the basis of this destruction, independently altogether of the question whether the distraint levied upon them was lawful or the reverse; but they were bound to bring this suit within three months of the date of the destruction of their property in consequence of the negligence of the defendants. In so far, therefore, as the Courts below have acted upon this principle of law, we think their decisions were correct.

Coming, however, to what we have stated as the alternative argument put forward in support of this appeal, we feel satisfied that it is in substance sound and ought to prevail. We repeat that the suit was, in our opinion, essentially based upon the allegation that the distraint levied by the defendants was a wrongful and malicious act done under colour of the provisions of the Tenancy Act. The wrong inflicted by an unlawful distraint continues and is renewed every day that the distraint lasts, the lawful owner of the property being thereby restrained from making use of it or exercising any right of ownership over it. In effect, therefore, as was suggested long ago in the decision of the Board of Revenue quoted in the referring order, Dalip Upadhia v. Gauridat Upadhia (2), the cause of action for a suit for damages in respect of a wrongful distraint, takes its origin from the day on which the distraint came to an end, and may be lawfully instituted within the prescribed limitation period of three months culculated from the said date. This suit was, therefore, in our opinion, within time. We have commented upon the imperfect nature of the pleadings set up by the plaintiff, but we do not wish to penalise them further than by directing the costs here and hitherto, including in this Court fees on the higher scale, to be costs in the cause. We set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and send the case back to the Court of first instance to be tried according to law, with reference to the finding which we have recorded on the limitation question.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—“Interest,” what is—Trust for benefit of widows and orphans of Khatri—Khatris, whether interested in trust.

It is wholly impossible to define with any degree of accuracy what exactly constitutes an “interest” as contemplated in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. There is no doubt, however, that the interest contemplated by that section need not be a direct interest, in the sense that only a beneficiary can institute a suit, but it must be a real, substantial and existing interest. Where a trust is created for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the Khatris of a particular locality, the male members of the Khatri community of that locality have a sufficient interest in the trust to enable them to bring a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code for the enforcement of the trust. First appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 18th November 1919.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Lala Sardha Ram, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Balkishan Das died on the 21st January 1907. On the 18th January 1907 he had executed a Will, Baldeo Parshad of Bareilly and Lala Sultan Singh of Delhi being appointed executor's therein. Under the terms of the Will the executors were to invest a sum of Rs. 5,000 the income of which was to go to the testator's widow for whose benefit a house was also to be purchased at a maximum cost of Rs. 3,000. Certain other directions for the benefit of the said widow were also given. A certain specified house was to be used for purposes of the Inderprasth Hindu Kanya Sikhshala School for girls at Delhi and a bequest of Rs. 1,000 was also made to that institution. This school was to be housed in that particular building until such time as the funds of the institution enabled it to purchase suitable accommodation, when, on the happening of that event, the said house was to be made a Dharamsala to perpetuate the memory of the testator's father.

After the payment of debts the residue of the estate was to be utilised for the support and maintenance of orphans of the Khatri caste and Surat Brahmans.

On the demise of the testator's widow such property allotted to her as she had not alienated or appointed was to be sold by the executors in order to start a fund for the support of Khatri widows. Probate of this Will was duly taken out by the executors in 1907 and the testator's widow died a few years later. On the 30th April, 1919 Lala Murlī Dhar and six other persons living in Delhi, Khatri by caste, instituted a suit against Lala Sultan Singh and Baldeo Parshad as trustees, having obtained the necessary sanction under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the plaint it was alleged that the girl's school had long been able to acquire proper accommodation for itself and that the defendants, as trustees, were neglecting their duty and had failed either to establish a Dharamsala in the said house or under the later clauses of the Will to arrange for the support of Khatri orphans and widows. They, therefore, prayed that the trustees be removed, other trustees appointed in their place, and the trust property administered, a scheme for the management of the property being drawn up. The suit was contested on various grounds it being alleged that the sanction under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code was bad in law; that no trust had been created by the Will, that the defendants were still executors and not trustees; and that the funds of the girl's school were not yet sufficient for the acquisition of the necessary buildings and that the debts of the testator had swamped the estate leaving no residue. It was alleged that the plaintiffs had no interest in any trust or trusts that may have been contemplated by the testator and that, therefore, the suit should be dismissed. The Trial Court framed various issues and at a preliminary hearing upon the legal issues dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had not such an interest as is contemplated in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.

They have thereupon come up to this Court in appeal through Mr. Sheo Narain who has contended that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs were residents in the mohalla in which the house is situate, they have an interest such as is contemplated by section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that they were entitled to represent the community, and that even if the strictest proof laid down in any authority be followed, their interests qua Hindus, Khatri and residents of the mohalla are substantial and existing and not sentimental or remote. As against this it has been argued that, so far as the trust in favour of the widows and orphans is concerned, the persons having a direct interest are such widows and orphans and inasmuch as no such person has been impleaded, the present plaintiff's suit does not lie. We find, however, that the Khatri community of this mohalla are most certainly interested in the maintenance of their widows and orphans, and, even more so, in the establishment of the Dharamsala which is contemplated in the Will; for whether or no it is more usual to have a temple or a kitchen attached to a Dharamsala, it is beyond doubt that it is a resting place and as such is open, primarily no doubt, to pilgrims and travellers of the Hindu faith, but also to the residents of the mohalla though they naturally would not use it to the same extent and would ordinarily reside in their own houses. We have considered the following authorities:—Ganapati Ayyan v. Savithri Ammal (1), Manohar Ganesh Tambekar v. Lakshmiram Govindram (2), Garuda Sanyasayya v. Narella Muthemma (3), Gopala Krishnier v. Ganapathy Aiyar (4), Varthnatha Aiyar v. Theyagaraja Aiyar (5), Puran Alal v. Darshan Das (6), and Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbu (7).

We are entirely in accord with the views expressed by the majority of the Judges of the Madras High Court in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbu (7), that it is wholly impossible to define with any degree of accuracy what exactly constitutes an interest as contemplated in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. There is no doubt that it need not be a direct interest in the sense that only a beneficiary can institute a suit, and that it must be a real, substantial and existing interest. Holding that the

Mr. Davar, for the Wife.

Mr. Campbell, for the Husband.

JUDGMENT.—This suit consists of a petition for divorce by the wife against her husband on the ground of his alleged adultery, cruelty and desertion, and a cross-petition brought by the husband against the wife and a co-respondent named Nicola Kandelaft, asking for a divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery.

On the wife's petition being called on, and after I had read the two petitions, I asked Counsel for the wife whether he was in a position to put his client into the box to deny the accusations against her which had been made in the husband's petition. They included, in particular, an allegation that the wife had travelled with the co-respondent in the same cabin from Bombay to Marseilles by the steamer Loyalty in December 1919, and that the only other occupant of that cabin was a small boy aged eight or thereabouts. Mr. Davar admitted that his client had travelled on that steamer and, after consulting his client, he told the Court that he was not in a position to call his client to contest the husband's allegation against her in that respect.

There, then, remained the allegations which she made against the husband on the ground of his desertion and cruelty. As regards the question of desertion, Counsel for the husband took the point that the desertion required to be proved under the Act was desertion within the meaning of section 3, sub-section 9, viz., an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it. He pointed out that here the wife left the petitioner of her own wish and not of her husband's wish. Moreover, it was clear from certain correspondence which took place almost immediately, between her Pleader and her husband, and from a letter written by the husband to the wife that it was in no way his wish that she should leave the house in this way. I should explain that the marriage took place on June 2 and that the wife left her husband on June 27. On putting this to Counsel for the wife asking him whether he wished for leave to amend, Counsel, after consulting his client, said that the real reason for leaving him was something different from what was stated in the pleadings, and that he had no objection to his client's petition being dismissed.

However, as the lady had charged cruelty I also considered whether there was any ground open to her there. This raised another point on the authorities, viz., that speaking generally, a guilty party cannot obtain relief by way of judicial separation any more than she can obtain relief by way of a divorce. The leading case on that point is Otway v. Otway (1). Similarly, as regards the point I have mentioned about the desertion, viz., that it must be a wilful abstention by the husband against the wish of the wife, I may refer, so far as our own Courts are concerned, to Bai Kanku v. Shiva Toya (2).

However, at this stage of the argument Counsel for the wife intimated that he was not in a position to controvert the propositions which had been advanced by Counsel for the respondent and accordingly the petition could be dismissed. I accordingly directed the wife's petition to be dismissed, and made no order as to costs, the husband not asking me to make any order for costs, nor the wife's Counsel either.

That left me with the husband's petition for divorce. On that, Counsel appears for the wife but does not defend the suit. I may, however, say at once that I am satisfied there is no collusion or anything of that sort on the evidence before me. There is one technical point, and that is that the cross-petition has been brought not by a separate petition on a separate document, but by a further statement added to the original defence to the wife's petition. However, section 15 of the Indian Divorce Act assists the husband in this respect. There is also a decision of Sir Samuel Evans in N. v. N (3) in which the point raised was, whether a husband, who had objected successfully to his wife obtaining a divorce on the ground of want of jurisdiction having regard to the domicile of the parties, could afterwards in answering his wife's amended petition for a judicial separation put in an answer claiming damages. The English Registrar considered that a separate document was necessary, but the learned President ruled otherwise, and further held that there was a sufficient service of the cross-petition on the wife by the fact that the husband had given a copy of his answer to the wife's Solicitors. As far as the question of service is concerned, as we have Counsel appearing for the wife, there is no difficulty on that point as regards her. And there is an affidavit proving service by registered post on the co-respondent in accordance with the practice of this Court.

I should mention one word as regards the co-respondent. What his precise nationality or domicile seems to be open to some doubt. He can hardly be a British subject, and at the date of this petition he was apparently living in Paris. A point has been raised as to whether there is jurisdiction in the Court to add a foreigner as co-respondent. That matter was considered by Sir Samuel Evans in Rayment v. Rayment (4), and he came to the conclusion that the Court had that jurisdiction. As a matter of common sense that decision must be right. It would seem absurd to hold that a wife can commit adultery with impunity, provided she is only careful enough to select a foreigner to consort with. When one remembers that, as far as the English Courts are concerned, Scotsmen and Irishmen are considered foreigners, such absurdity becomes all the more apparent.

I, therefore, consider that there is ample jurisdiction in this Court to add a foreigner as co-respondent. Of course, that point is entirely different from the question whether our High Court has jurisdiction to grant a divorce where the parties are domiciled in England or elsewhere abroad. But the facts here are perfectly clear that the petitioner was and is domiciled in India; he was born in India; he has lived all his life in India; and the marriage was in Bombay. The wife, moreover, is still living in Bombay according to her own petition. Therefore, the matrimonial domicile was and is clearly Indian, and so this Court is in no way affected by the recent decision in England on the jurisdiction of the Indian Courts.

I think I have now disposed of the several technical points that were raised on this petition, and it remains to consider whether the charge against the wife has been proved. Counsel for the wife admitted yesterday that she was on this boat with the co-respondent, and that they occupied the same cabin. But, quite apart from admissions of Counsel, an Official in the Steamship Company, who owned this particular steamer, has been called. He produced the original passenger tickets issued to the co-respondent and the respondent. He also produced a passenger register showing the passengers who eventually travelled by this boat. Having regard to the peculiar name of the co-respondent and the name of the wife and the fact that her son by her former marriage is named Jules, I think the identity of the persons named in these records is clearly established as being that of the wife and the co-respondent.

In my opinion, therefore, the charge of adultery against the wife is clearly proved. I think it unnecessary for Counsel to go into the other charges which are contained in paragraph 18 of the petition, and in respect of which there was a particular order dispensing with the co-respondent. Nor is there any point of delay, because the husband swears that it was not still after his wife had brought this petition that he knew that she had gone with the co-respondent on this particular voyage to Marseilles.

On the cross-petition of the husband, there will accordingly be a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage. There will be an order for costs against the co-respondent as asked in prayer (b). The usual minimum period of six months will be fixed in the decree nisi.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V. of 1908), s. 151, O. XLVII, r. 7—Review, grant of—Grounds not sufficient—Order under s. 151—Appeal.

An appeal does not lie from an order granting an application for review of judgment, even although there were not sufficient reasons for entertaining the application, as the grounds on which such an appeal may be entertained are restricted by the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 307, cols. 1 & 2.]

Rule against the decision of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 23rd September, 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Fifth Court, Dacca, dated the 7th February 1921.

Bibu Sures Chandra Talukdar, for the Petitioners.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was obtained by the plaintiffs for revision of an order passed on appeal by the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 23rd September 1921, from an order of the Munsif of the same place, dated the 7th February 1921, by which he set aside the order of dismissal of a suit and restored it for hearing. What happened was that the suit had been proceeded with for a considerable time and, as the learned Munsif observes, was advanced to some extent and that the plaintiffs had spent a good deal of money for it. The suit related to establishment of the plaintiffs' title to a piece of land and if the plaintiffs' allegations in the plaint are true, the act of the defendants would affect their rights to a very great extent. On the last occasion when the suit came up for hearing before the Munsif it so happened that the two Pleaders engaged for the plaintiffs were both absent. The Munsif dismissed the suit for default. There was an application for restoration of the suit shortly afterwards under O. IX, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code. But a difficulty was found in proceeding with the application under that Rule as one of the plaintiffs happened to be present in person in Court when the order for dismissal was made. This difficulty felt by the Munsif was overcome by his allowing the plaintiffs to alter their application for restoration of the suit to one for review of his previous order and this, it appears, was not objected to by the defendants. Then the Munsif, treating that application as an application for review under O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, set aside his previous order of dismissal of the suit. He states in his judgment, "I set aside the order of dismissal of the suit and restore the suit in the interest of justice and in the exercise of inherent jurisdiction of this Court as section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives me based on the application under O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code." Then he imposed certain terms on the plaintiffs as regards payment of costs.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge and on appeal the learned Judge held that the plaintiffs had failed to show that they had any sufficient cause for applying for review of judgment and thereupon allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the Munsif, restoring the original suit. The question raised by the petitioners is that the appeal to the District Judge was incompetent; having regard to O. XLVII, r. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is contended by the opposite party that there was an appeal to the District Judge, because the order of the Munsif contravened the provisions of r. 4, sub-rule (1) of O. XLVII and, secondly, that the order of the Munsif restoring the suit having been passed without jurisdiction, I should not in any case restore the order of the Munsif. With regard to the last contention, I am of opinion that, assuming that the Munsif's order was not in strict accordance with the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, the result has been to remove a great hardship and it was as he himself has put it, "in furtherance of justice." If I were asked to set aside this order in revision I do not think I should have interfered with it in the exercise of my discretion. If, however, as the learned Vakil for the opposite party contends, the appeal to the District Judge was competent, this Court can not revise the order of the District Judge. It seems to me that there was no appeal from the order of the Munsif to the District Judge under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Munsif took into consideration the facts under which he made his previous order and although, according to the provisions of the Code, there might not have been sufficient reasons for entertaining an application for review of judgment, there was no appeal from that order, however erroneous it might be, as the grounds on which such an appeal may be entertained are restricted by the provisions of r. (7), O. XLVII. I do not think that the order of the Munsif contravenes any of the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 4. Moreover, the learned Munsif purported to have exercised the inherent jurisdiction of the Court under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There could not be any appeal to the District Judge against an order passed under section 151. I, therefore, hold that the appeal to the District Judge was incompetent and the order of the District Judge passed on appeal must, therefore, be set aside as without jurisdiction and that of the Munsif restored.

Under the circumstances, however, the petitioners must pay the costs of the appeal before the District Judge to the opposite party.

I make no order as to costs in this Court

The High Court will not interfere with the reasonable exercise of discretion by an Appellate Court in the matter of costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 3rd February 1922, modifying that of the Munsif, Bahraich, dated the 22nd November 1921.

Mr. Tara Shankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. A. Khan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been pressed solely on question of costs. The suit was

KADIR BAKHSH v. ALLAH DITTA:

One for a balance due to the plaintiff in respect of bricks which the defendants failed to supply. The claim was for Rs. 800. Rs. 541-4 were evidently decreed. The First Court allowed the plaintiff proportionate costs. The lower Appellate Court disallowed his costs altogether. Where a reasonable discretion has been exercised in the matter of costs this Court will be slow to interfere. I have to see, therefore, whether the Court below has given its consideration to the question and given reasonable grounds for the order passed. The question has been considered, and the grounds given are in the main two.

In the first place, the plaintiff produced in support of his case a letter purporting to come from the defendant which both the Courts below have found not to be genuine. This is certainly a very serious matter. In the second place, the lower Appellate Court finds that the plaintiff got a fictitious agreement executed by one Muhammad Ali in order to enable him to get damages to which he was not entitled. These were sufficient grounds for disallowing costs and I am not prepared to interfere.

The second point pressed is, that the deficient duty and penalty on a certain document which was levied from the appellant should have been included in the costs. It is pointed out by the appellant that if the duty had been levied under section 35 of the Stamp Act the liability should have been passed on to the defendant in accordance with section 44 of that Act. In this case, however, it is common ground that the duty and penalty were illegally levied. The document in question had been admitted by the lower Court without any question of stamp-duty being raised. In these circumstances, the power of the Appellate Court under sections 35 and 61 of the Stamp Act was confined to recording its opinion as to the duty and penalty payable, impounding the documents and sending them to the Collector for action. However, no one seems to have drawn the attention of the Court to the fact that it was acting ultra vires and the duty and penalty were levied not by the judgment but by a separate order. It seems difficult to hold that any legal liability can attach to the defendant in respect of a penalty illegally levied from the opposite party and section 44 certainly does not apply to it. I am, therefore, unable to accept this plea also. It must be conceded that the conduct of the defendant in the case was very far from faultless. Not only did he not admit the amount which was due from him but in his written statement he claimed that a sum of Rs. 346-9 was actually due to him from the plaintiff. Under these circumstances, although I dismiss this appeal I do so without costs. The order is that the appeal is dismissed. The parties will bear their costs.

Mr. B. A. Cooper, for the Appellant.
Lala Rama Nand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff in this case, who is the collateral in the third degree of one Piara, a childless proprietor, who died in 1918, brings this suit against his sister's son in whose name mutation has been effected, and contends that by custom

he has a better right to succeed. The suit has been dismissed by both the lower Courts, and he now comes up on second appeal with a certificate; and the only point to be decided is whether, amongst Lak Jats of the Muzaffargarh District, collaterals in the third degree exclude sister's sons.

The plaintiff relies on one published decision of this Court, a decision of the District Judge of Muzaffargarh and one of the Munsif of Muzaffargarh. These refer to particular cases in which it was decided that, among Minwal Jats, Gorab Jats and Gurab Jats, collaterals exclude sisters. He also relies on the reply to question No. 10 in the Riwaj-i-am which shows that in some cases sisters have been excluded and in other cases collaterals have been excluded by them.

As against this evidence there is the Customary Law of the Muzaffargarh District, question No. 21, in which it is clearly laid down that sisters or their descendants succeed in preference to the grandfather or his descendants. In two reported decisions of the Chief Court, Alam v. Nur (1) and Sawan v. Sahib Khatun (2), which related to Mithu Jats and Panwar Jats of the Muzaffargarh District, it was held that sisters succeed as against collaterals. Similarly, in Exhibit D-I sisters and their sons have been preferred and in Exhibit D-II, a judgment of Wilberforce, J., (No. 151 of 1912) it was held that among Mouda Jats sisters excluded collaterals in the third degree. The position of the females generally, as has been clearly established in many rulings, is very much stronger in the western Punjab than elsewhere.

I find that it is fully established by the evidence on the record that a sister or sister's son excludes collaterals in the third degree among Lak Jats of the Muzaffargarh District. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Wagering contract—Speculation—Intention.

The element of speculation is present in most transactions relating to the sale and delivery of goods at a certain rate at some future date owing to the possibility of fluctuations in the market-rate. But where it is accompanied by a real desire or intention on the part of the vendor to sell and the buyers to purchase the goods agreed to be sold at the contracted rate, the contract is not a wagering contract and can be enforced.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 2nd December 1922, upholding a decree of the Sub-Judge, Bahraich, dated the 20th June 1921.

Messrs. Ram Chandra and Hardhian Chandra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suits, which have given rise to these appeals, were brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the recovery of damages. Both the parties are shopkeepers carrying on cloth business at Bahraich. On the 8th September 1919 the plaintiff and the defendant were talking about the possible decline or rise of the market rate, and in the course of that conversation, the plaintiff said that the market rate would not fall while the defendant said that it would. Eventually, the plaintiff agreed to purchase 100 pieces of muslin at Rs. 7 per piece and 25 pieces of long-cloth at Rs. 20 per piece within a year and the defendant agreed to supply the same at those rates. The market-rates for those goods, however, rose and the defendant failed to supply the said goods. The plaintiff consequently sued for damages calculating the same on the difference between the rates settled and the rates prevailing on the date of the last day fixed for delivery.

The main defence was, that the contract was of a wagering or speculative character and consequently unenforceable. The Courts below found, that there was nothing to show that there was no intention not to take delivery of the goods. As observed in Kong Yee Lone & Co. v. Lowjee Manjee, (1) and Bhagwandas Parasram v. Burjorji Ruttonji Bomanji (2) a contract may be unenforceable, if it only amounts to a wager on the rise or fall of the market, and is not accompanied by an intention to sell or to purchase goods at a given time and place at a certain rate. To some extent, speculation forms an element in many transactions relating to the sale and delivery of goods at a certain rate, because the market-rate for those goods may be liable to fluctuation; but the existence of such an element does not make the contract void, because it may yet be accompanied by a real desire on the part of the vendor to sell and the buyer to purchase the goods agreed to be sold, at the contracted rate. Where such an intention exists, the contract is not a wagering contract and can be enforced. The Courts below found, though in a somewhat negative form, that the absence of such an intention was not proved. It is not possible to interfere with that finding here.

As regards the amount of damages, there was no disagreement between the parties as to the rates originally settled and those prevailing on the last date fixed for delivery. The plaintiff has, therefore, been rightly awarded the amount claimed.

The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Principal and surety—Decree against principal only—Appeal—Execution of decree—Limitation terminus a quo.

Where in a suit against a principal and his surety a decree is passed against the principal only, and the plaintiff appeals against that part of the decree exonerating the surety and the appeal is dismissed, the decree to be executed is the decree of the Trial Court, and limitation, for the purpose of execution, runs from the date that decree was passed.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Jalgaon, in Darkhast No. 664 of 1920.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs filed a suit in 1905 against the four sons of one Jayachand, deceased. They added as a defendant one Bhaichand who they alleged stood surety for the amount due by Jayachand. A decree was passed in March 1907 against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 as representatives of the deceased Jayachand. The plaintiffs' suit against defendant No. 5 was dismissed. Against that order of dismissal the plaintiffs appealed but without success. The plaintiffs made various applications for execution against defendants Nos. 1 to 4, including Darkhast No. 745 of 1917 filed in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Dhulia, which was transferred to Jalgaon owing to the transfer of the territorial jurisdiction from Dhulia to Jalgaon. By that Darkhast the applicant sought to attach the particular house to which a claim was made by a third party which was successful. Thereafter, the applicant asked the Court to amend that particular Darkhast by substituting other property for the property therein mentioned which had already been declared to be not liable to be attached. We think that the amendment ought not to have been allowed and that the application must be considered as a fresh application. Otherwise, clearly, the provisions of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code could easily be evaded, and a Darkhast could be kept alive for an indefinite time.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider whether Exhibits 35 and 71, which admittedly are applications for execution made more than twelve years after the date when the decree was passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 4, were in time, and it is contended that limitation runs from the date the plaintiffs' appeal in the High Court against defendant No. 5 was dismissed. That contention could only prevail if the High Court in dismissing the appeal, could be said to have passed a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 which could be executed. It is not suggested that the High Court confirmed the decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 which had already been passed by the lower Court. It merely dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal as against defendant No. 5. It seems to me, therefore, that the decree which is sought to be executed is the decree of the Trial Court and no other, and that limitation must run from the date that decree was passed.

Various cases have been cited, but I doubt that any of them are really in point. In Mashiat-un-nissa v. Rani (1) a decree for possession of immovable property was passed not jointly, but severally as against all the defendants individually and specifically stated the proportions of which they were severally in possession. Two of the defendants appealed, and it was held that the first application for execution of the original decree against those defendants who had not appealed from it, and which was made five years after the date of the decree was barred by limitation. On the other hand, when a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff against a particular defendant, and part of the decree is appealed against, then no doubt the whole case is before the Appellate Court and the decree of the Appellate Court will be the decree to be executed.

It seems to me this case stands entirely on its own facts, and the plaintiffs, as soon as the decree was passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 4, could have executed it. An application by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 to the Appellate Court for stay of execution, because the plaintiffs were appealing against defendant No. 5, certainly would not have been competent. There was nothing, therefore, to prevent the Court executing the decree passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and the date of that decree must be the date from which limitation must run for the purposes of execution. We think the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 5—Preliminary decree—Execution, application for, whether can be treated as application for final decree.

When the holder of a preliminary decree, instead of applying for a final decree being passed, applies for the execution of the decree, the Court has no jurisdiction to treat the latter application as an application to make the decree final. [p 312, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether this application of the plaintiff-applicant under O. XXXIV, r. 5 to make the decree final is within time.

The preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure was passed on the 26th of October 1915. The period allowed to pay the mortgage amount was six months which expired on the 26th of April, 1916. The decree-holder or his legal advisers appear to have done nothing from start to the finish effectively to make the decree final. The first application made was one for execution on the 3rd September 1918. The only reference made to it is in the present application made in the lower Court and that former application itself is not contained in the record before us. On referring to the former application, however, it appears that it was returned to the applicant with a direction that he should first apply for a final decree being passed. Despite this direction nothing further was done till the 24th of April 1919 when an application similar to the present one was made and it was dismissed for the failure to supply a copy. The second application was made on the 17th of June 1919 which was dismissed for default. The present application was made on the 17th of September 1919.

It is argued for the applicant that the application in September 1918 for execution should be treated as an application to make the decree final and secondly the present application should be taken to be a revival of the former application and thus to extend the period. Both the grounds appear to us to be without any substance. The law as laid down in O. XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure was expressly altered some what from the old law under the Transfer of Property Act. It is incumbent on the parties to comply with new provision. Nor can the Court be asked to remove such an omission by allowing an application for execution to be treated as an application for making the decree final. The object of amending the law, as was pointed out by Jenkins, C. J., who was himself partly concerned in framing the present Code, in the case of Amolak Chand Parak v. Sharat Chandra Mukherjee (1), was to end as far as possible the conflict of old decisions. And although a certain number of cases in the unauthorised reports of the Madras High Court, such as Natesa Udayan v. Annasami Udayan (2), are in favour of the contention of the applicant to a certain extent, we agree with the reasoning of Sir Lawrence Jenkins which found favour with the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ahmed Khan v. Gaura (3) that an application for execution should not be treated as an application to make the decree final. There is no question that Art. 181 applies to the present case. When the law expressly lays down the period of three years from the expiry of six months in the preliminary decree within which the applicant is bound to apply to make the decree final we have no jurisdiction, we think, as we are asked to do to extend the period of limitation laid down by law by granting the present application which was clearly beyond time. Judgment-debtors have their rights equally with the decree-holders and the negligence of the latter to take the proper legal steps within the period of limitation should not be condoned on the ground set up in the present case.

The application fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The maxim "expressio unius exclusio alterius" is often a valuable servant, but a dangerous master to follow in the construction of Statutes or documents. [P. 316, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 5th of April 1919, modifying that of the Revenue Officer, Krishnagarh, dated the 14th of December 1916.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Baranashibasi Mukerjee), for the Appellants:—The defendants are the appellants. The appeals arise out of proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Our defence was that we were not liable to assessment by virtue of the presumption raised in our favour under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Assistant Settlement Officer held that these were cases of tenures and he enhanced our rents. On appeal it was held at first that having regard to the provisions of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the rents were not enhanceable. On review, however, the learned Judge reversed that decision and affirmed that of the Assistant Settlement Officer. The question now to be decided is, whether the sub-division of a tenure affects the presumption raised under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The finding is that the original tenures had been sub-divided with the consent of the landlords; each sub-divided portion was held at a proportionate rent and that the aggregate rent was equal to the original rent. The learned Judge holds that the sub-division amounts to the creation of new tenures and that, therefore, the provisions of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act not applying to such a case the rent is liable to enhancement. I submit the continuity of a transferable tenure is not affected by sub-division. See Chandra Kanta Chakrabarty v. Ram Krishna Mahalnobis (1), Jagabandhu Saha v. Magnamoyi Dassi (2). The decision in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) was distinguished in Jyoti Prasad Singh v. Lachipur Coal Company (4), Bissesswar Roy Chowdhry v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (5). I submit, in view of these decisions, the judgment of the learned lower Appellate Court is manifestly wrong and ought to be set aside.

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar (with him Babu Amarendra Nath Bose), for the Respondents.—There is nothing to show that these tenures were sub-divided before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decision in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) has never been expressly dissented from. In the case of Jyoti Prasad Singh v. Lachipur Coal Company (4) the facts and circumstances were very different from the present case. Hence the case of Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) was distinguished there. In Aditi Singha v. Sukhraj Rai (6) also it was the case not of a tenure but of a raiya holding. The case of Bissesswar Roy Chowdhry v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (5) proceeded upon altogether different considerations. The case of Jagabandhu Saha v. Magnamoyi Dassi (2) was not a case under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If you disagree with the decision in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3), I would ask for a reference to the Full Bench for the elucidation of the point. That case is evidently supported by section 50 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It has been found that the tenures in each case did not exist for 20 years.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—These seventeen appeals arise out of as many proceedings instituted by landlords under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for assessment of fair and equitable rent in respect of lands included in tenures held under them. The tenure-holders contended that they were entitled to the benefit of the presumption formulated in section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and were consequently protected from enhancement under section 50 (1). It was found that the original tenures had been subdivided with the consent of the landlords; each fragment was held at a proportionate rent and the aggregate rent was equal to the original rent. Notwithstanding this, the Revenue Officer held that the provisions of section 50 were inapplicable to the disputed tenures, which must be deemed to be new tenures the rent whereof was liable to enhancement. On appeal, the Special Judge held that the sub-division of a tenure does not operate as a breach of the continuity of the tenure, if each fragment is held at a proportionate rent and the aggregate rent equals the original rent. The Special Judge, however, reviewed his decision and ultimately adopted the view taken by the Revenue Officer. We have now to consider whether the earlier or the later view which commended itself to the Special Judge is correct.

Section 50 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides as follows —

"The operation of this section, so far as it relates to land held by a raiyat, shall not be affected by the fact of the land having been separated from other land which formed with it a single holding, or amalgamated with other land into one holding."

With reference to this provision, it was ruled by Sharfuddin and Coxe, JJ., in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3), that where a tenure existed from long before the Permanent Settlement but was subsequently split up into two equal halves, each bearing one-half of the original rent, the old tenure could not be regarded as continued in the shape of the two new tenancies. The Court held that the words "so far as it relates to land held by a raiyat" in section 50 (3) clearly imply that the operation of the section, so far as it relates to land held by a tenure-holder, is affected by the separation of the land from other land which formed with it a single tenure. It is plain that the Court held the maxim applicable, expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The construction of section 50 (3) adopted in this case has, however, found no favour with the Courts.

In Mulluk Chand Das v. Satish Chandra Das (7) where Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) was cited, the Court declined to lay it down as an inflexible rule of law of universal application that whenever the lands of a tenancy have been sub-divided, there is a creation of new tenancies, destructive of the original obligation, and added that the effect of the division must depend upon the intention of the parties. Again, in Jyoti Prasad Singh v. Lachipur Coal Company (4) Coxe, J., who had been a party to the previous decision, distinguished it with the concurrence of Teunon, J., and held that where the original grant was that of a permanent tenure, the mere fact that subsequently the tenure was split up into more than one would not affect the permanent character of the tenancies. The decision in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) was again pressed upon the attention of the Court in Biswaswar Roy Chowdhry v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (5), but the endeavour was fruitless. In Adit Singha v. Sukhraj Rai (6) the Court reserved its opinion upon the question decided in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) but pointed out that under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1859, the principle recognised in section 50 (3) as applicable to raiyati holdings had been applied to tenures, Kazee Khoda Newaz v. Nubo Kishore Raj (8), Raj Kishore Mookerjee v. Hureehur Mookerjee (9), Kasheenath Lushkur v. Bama-soonduree Dobia (10) and Soodha Mookhee Dassee v. Ram Guttee (11). In Chand Kanta Chakravariy v. Ram Krishna Mahalanabis (1) the proposition was treated as well-settled that the continuity of a transferable tenure is not affected by sub-division or by consolidation. The Court added that the decision in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) overlooked, as had been already pointed out in Adit Singha v. Sukhraj Rai (6), the pre-existing law on the subject, as indicated in the cases of Hills v. Huro Lall (12) and Kazee Khoda Newaz v. Nubo Kishore Raj (8), which are in conformity with Ramnath v. Robert Watson and Company (13), Sukhimani v. Gangagobinda (14) Hill v. Basarat Mir (15), Ram Kumar v. Raghab Mondal (16) and Gopal Chandra v. Mathuramohan (17). In Jagabandhu Saha v. Magnamoyi Dassi (2) the proposition was again affirmed that as the tenure was divisible, the fact of sub-division was not a breach of its continuity, and each fragment, carved out of the original tenure, retained its incidents. To the same effect is the decision in Prossanna Deb Roykot v. Safuruddin Ahmed (18), where it was ruled that mere sub-division of an old tenure or amalgamation does not necessarily mean the creation of a new tenure, so as to destroy the presumption under section 50(2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Court did not follow the decision in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3), as Chatterjee, J., had not done many years earlier in Pirithi Chand Lal v. Sheikh Hazari (19).

The position thus is, that the decision in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) stands by itself, and every effort made to induce the Court to follow it has been unsuccessful. It is further plain that when the decision was pronounced, the attention of the Court was not drawn to the fact that, under the pre-existing law, it was firmly established in respect of tenures at least, that neither sub-division nor amalgamation necessarily destroyed their continuity. It is difficult to believe that if the Legislature intended to introduce such a fundamental change in the existing law, the object would be attempted to be achieved by implication. The alteration would seriously prejudice all tenure-holders in the country with retrospective operation. If sub-section (3) is interpreted as a provision enacted in favour of the *raiya*t and against the tenure-holders, it would restrict the operation of sub-section (1) as also of sub-section (2) to the case of tenure-holders, only so long as the tenures were not sub-divided or amalgamated. Sub-section (1), it will be observed, contains the substantive rule on the subject of protection from enhancement, while sub-section (2) deals merely with the mode of proof. If sub-section (3) had the effect attributed to it, the result would follow that, even in the case of a tenure, proved by direct evidence to have been created before the date of the Permanent Settlement, and to have been held at an unchanged rent or rate of rent since that time, the protection afforded by sub-section (1) would disappear in the event of sub-division, whether prior or subsequent to the enactment of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If an alteration of this character in what was settled law in respect of tenure-holders had been intended, an express provision would have been made in that behalf. We are of opinion that sub-section (3) must have been introduced solely with a view to secure the position of *raiya*t which it is well-known, was the chief aim of the legislation culminating in the Bengal Tenancy Act and not with a view to injure the position of tenure-holders. In fact, an examination of the judicial decisions shows that while the rights of tenure-holders in respect of the matter now before us, were assured, the positions of *raiya*t was by no means equally clear, see the decision of Sir Richard Couch, C.J., in Moula Buksh v. Judoonath Sadoo Khan (20). In our judgment, this is not a case where the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius can be safely applied.

It may be conceded that, as stated by Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Blackburn v. Flavell (21), a general rule of construction of Acts of Parliament is expressio unius exclusio alterius. Nor need we dispute the accuracy of the statement quoted from the judgment of Hargrave, J., in Drinkwater v. Arthur (22): "If there be any one rule of law clearer than another as to the construction of all Statutes and all written instruments (as, for example, sales under powers in deeds and Wills), it is this: that where the Legislature or the parties to any instruments have expressly authorised one or more particular modes or sale or other dealing with property, such expressions always exclude any other mode except as specifically authorised."

But it is important to bear in mind that the method of construction summarised in the maxim cannot be applied without limitation, for a failure to make an expressio complete may easily arise from the accidents of Legislative procedure, and it is common to find provisions put into Statutes ex abundanti cautela and at the instance of parties interested. Consequently, provisions sometimes found in Statutes enacting imperfectly or for particular cases only, that which was already and more widely the law, have occasionally furnished ground for a specious argument, based on the maxim, that an intention to alter the general law was to be inferred from the partial or limited enactment. But the maxim is plainly inapplicable in such cases. The only inference which a Court can draw from such superfluous provisions (which often find a place in Acts to meet unfounded objections and idle doubts) is that the Legislature was either ignorant or unmindful of the real state of the law or that it acted under the influence of excessive caution. This point of view is lucidly explained in the following passages from the judgment of Farwell, L. J., in Lowe v. Dorling (23):—

"Acts of Parliament are not, in my experience, expressed with such accuracy and precision as to justify the Court in striking out unambiguous words in order to make a sentence grammatical or logical. The generality of the maxim 'expressum facit cessare tacitum', which was relied on, renders caution necessary in its application. It is not enough that the express and the tacit are merely incongruous, it must be clear that they cannot reasonably be intended to co-exist." In Colquhoun v. Brooks (24) Wills, J., says: "I may observe that the method of construction summarised in the maxim 'Expressio unius exclusio alterius' is one that certainly requires to be watched. Perhaps few so-called rules of interpretation have been more frequently misapplied and stretched beyond their due limits. The failure to make the 'Expressio' complete very often arises from accident, very often from the fact that it never struck the draftsman that the thing supposed to be excluded needed specific mention of any kind; and the application of this and every other technical rule of construction varies so much under differing circumstances, and is open to so many qualifications and exceptions, that it is rarely that such rules help one to arrive at what is meant." Lopes, L. J., in the Court of Appeal Colquhoun v. Brooks (25) says: "the maxim 'Expressio unius exclusio alterius' has been pressed upon us I agree with what is said in the Court below by Wills, J., about this maxim. It is often a valuable servant, but a dangerous master to follow in the construction of Statutes or documents. The exclusio is often the result of inadvertence or accident, and the maxim ought not to be applied, when its application, having regard to the subject-matter to which it is to be applied, leads to inconsistency or injustice."

It may be observed that the view taken by Wills, J., in Colquhoun v. Brooks (24) which gave way to that of Stephen, J., in the Division Court was approved by Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes, L. J., in the Court of Appeal, Fry, L. J., dissenting, Colquhoun v. Brooks (25) and, ultimately the decision in the House of Lords was in accordance with the dissentient judgment of Wills, J., Colquhoun v. Brooks (26).

We may also usefully re-call here the warning given by Lord Halsbury in McLaughlin v. Westgarth (27): "It might be that modern Statutes were drawn with greater particularity and minuteness. The misfortune in the framing of those Statutes was that any body of persons, seeing a possibility of liability on their part, apply to Parliament to have special provisions inserted for their protection. That application was occasionally complied with, and then the argument arose, which their Lordships had heard that day, namely, that any body who is not included in the enumeration of the particular persons so interested, must be taken to be excluded by the operation of the Statute from protection just because they were not excluded and others were. The doctrine applicable to all such cases was that a great many things were put into a Statute ex abundanti cautela and it was not to be assumed that any body not specifically included was, for that reason alone, excluded from the protection of the Statute." It may be mentioned here that before the High Court of Australia, McLaughlin v. Fosbery (28) the position that the protection given by a Statute must be construed strictly as extending only to those persons who are expressly mentioned and to things done under the Statute had been attempted to be supported by reference to Fletcher v. Fletcher (29), Thomas v. Saunders (30), Eliot v. Allen (31), R v. Pinder, In re Greenwood (32) and Griffith v. Taylor (33). In support of the view taken in McLaughlin v. Westgarth (27) reference may also be made to West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (34), Mollwo, March & Company v. Court of Wards (35), Duke of Newcastle v. Morris (36).

Our conclusion is that the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius has no application to the present case, that section 50(3) was inserted for the benefit of raiyats and not with a design to prejudice tenure-holders, that the operation of section 50 (1) and 50 (2) is not excluded in the case of tenures merely by reason of sub-division or amalgamation and that the decision to the contrary effect in Uday Chandra Karji v. Maharaja Nripendra Narayan Bhup (3) cannot be supported on principle. In this view, we need not consider whether the Special Judge should have at all entertained the application for review of judgment. But we may add that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (37) lends support to the construction of the appellant that the review should not have been granted.

The result is that these appeals are allowed, the decrees made by the Special Judge after review, on the basis of his judgment dated 5th April 1919, are set aside and the decrees originally made by him pursuant to his judgment dated 25th May 1918 are restored. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court. The hearing fee will be assessed at one gold mchur in each case.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 29th July 1921.

Mr. K. P. Jayaswal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. N. Sinha and Murari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—Mr. Jayaswal, on behalf of the appellants, has no objection to the sale of the villages other than village Prasad but he contends that we ought to set aside the sale of village Prasad. It appears that the Court fixed the valuation of village Prasad at Rs. 16,112. The decree-holder did not accept this valuation and he assessed it at Rs. 3,664-3-0. The sale proclamation settled by the Court gave the valuation of the Court and also that of the decree-holder; and it is contended before us by Mr. Jayaswal, on the authority of Beni Prasad v. Edal Singh (1), that the insertion of any valuation in a sale proclamation other than the valuation fixed by the Court is calculated to mislead intending bidders and that it is, therefore, wrong.

We set aside the sale of village Prasad and direct that the valuation stated by the decree-holder in the sale proclamation be struck off and that the sale do proceed on the valuation already fixed by the learned Subordinate Judge. There will be no order as to costs.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

Pre-emption—Substitution, date of.

A successful pre-emptor is vested with the rights of the vendee whom he dislodges not from the date of the sale but from the date when he enforces his rights, that is, from the date on which he satisfies the conditions of his decree and brings it into operation. No doubt he is substituted for the vendee in all the rights that were transferred by the sale, but the process of substitution does not take place on any date prior to the satisfaction by the pre-emptor of the conditions on which his decree has been granted to him. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 26th May 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Campbellpur, dated the 31st March 1919.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, for Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit to pre-empt some land in Mohallah Urtak of Hazro has been dismissed by the Courts below. The plaintiff described the property as village immoveable property and based his claim to pre-empt on the ground that he was a collateral of the vendor. On the objection of the defendants that the site was an urban immoveable property the plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to pre-empt as a co-sharer. The Court below found that the land is an urban immoveable property and has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that as a fact the land in suit is not a part of an undivided holding and; therefore, plaintiff's claim to succeed as a co-sharer in an undivided holding must fail. The Court below arrived at this finding on the strength of a supposed statement by the plaintiffs that the land in suit had been partitioned off from the original undivided holding, but here the learned District Judge appears to have committed a mistake, for no such statement by the plaintiff appears to be on the record.

The question then remains whether plaintiff at the time of the sale in respect of which he claims to pre-empt was a co-sharer in the undivided holding. The date of the sale of the land in dispute is the 9th November 1917. The sale of the other portion of the undivided area was dated 14th May 1917 and on that sale the plaintiff brought a suit to pre-empt, and obtained a decree in May 1918. A consideration of the afore-mentioned dates will show that on the 9th November 1917 the plaintiff in this case was not a co-sharer in the undivided estate and the question for decision is whether, by reason of his decree of 1918, his title in the joint undivided estate must be referred back to the 14th May 1917. On his behalf it is urged that the right to pre-empt is a right to be substituted for the vendee. This is no doubt incontestable, but the further question arises, from what date does the right of the vendee pass to the person who is substituted for him. The appellant relies on Hakam Singh v. Indar (1) which does indeed support his contention, but the grounds upon which that decision reposes do not, we think with all respect, justify the conclusion arrived at. In our opinion a successful pre-emptor is vested with the rights of the vendee whom he dislodges not from the date of the sale but from the date on which he enforces his rights, i. e., from the date on which he satisfies the conditions of his decrees and brings it into operation. No doubt he is substituted for the vendee in all the rights that were transferred by the sale, but it seems to us unreasonable to conclude that the process of substitution takes place on any date prior to the satisfaction by the pre-emptor of the conditions on which his decree has been granted to him. Any other conclusion will greatly increase the difficulties of persons desiring to dispose of their property by sale, for they would have to enquire regarding the existence not only of ostensible potential pre-emptors but would also have to enquire into the history of contiguous estates. In our opinion a suit to pre-empt on the ground of possession of other property is open only to persons who at the time of sale have an established title in that property.

For these reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs.

OPPONENT.

Bombay Rent (War Restrictions, No. 2) Act (VII of 1918), s. 4 (6),—"Change of conditions," meaning of.

The words "change of conditions," occurring in section 4 (6) of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions, No. 2) Act do not refer to any change of occupiers, but to the premises leased. [p. 320, col. 2.]

Mr. Pamanmal, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a very simple case. The plaintiff-opponent, Chellaram Cooverji, filed a suit against the applicant Velji Hirji in the Small Cause Court for the recovery of rent of a shop building which he had leased to Velji and he claimed rent on the basis of Rs. 19-13-0 per mensem which he stated was the standard rent of the premises.

It is alleged and not denied that the Controller of Rents had determined the standard rent of the premises in question.

to be Rs. 19-13-0. But subsequently the Controller reduced the rent from Rs. 19-13-0 to Rs. 11-0-0. The owner of the premises applied to the Committee against the order of the Controller and they increased the rent to Rs. 14-0-0 per mensem. The plaintiff-opponent, however, filed a suit in the Small Cause Court for recovery of rent at Rs. 19-13-0 which he contended was the standard rent and he filed the Controller's certificate with the plaint. In the lower Court the applicant contended that the owner of premises was not entitled to rental of Rs. 19-13-0 per mensem but that the correct rent for which he could sue was the one determined by the Committee. And an issue on the pleadings before the lower Court was, "whether the order of the Controller dated 17th March 1920 (fixing the standard rent at Rs. 11-0-0) and that of the Committee (fixing the standard rent at Rs. 14-0-0) the dated 12th May 1920 were ultra vires." The learned Judge was of the opinion that both the orders were ultra vires and he decreed the plaintiff's suit at the rental of Rs. 19-13-0 as originally determined by the Controller.

Mr. Pamanmal has now applied to us to revise the order of the Small Cause Court Judge and contends that the order is wrong inasmuch as the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was in error in holding the two orders to be ultra vires. There can be very little doubt that if the order of the Controller is not maintainable the order of the Committee which is based on it must fail and the primary question for our consideration is whether he is empowered, except under the conditions described in the Rent Act, to review his own order. Mr. Pamanmal relies on clause (b) to section 4 of the Act VII of 1918 which is as follows:—

"The Controller may, after such inquiry as he may think fit, from time to time having regard to the provisions of the principal Act, fix the standard rent of any premises determined by him or by the Committee to be small premises."

It is not disputed that in the present case the premises are small premises as described in the Act. Mr. Pamanmal faintly argued that when the Controller firstly fixed the rent, he did not hold proper inquiry. But the nature of the inquiry to be held by him is one that is entirely within his discretion as stated in clause (1) to section 4. The principal words of clause (b) on which Mr. Pamanmal relies are the words "from time to time" and according to him the Controller is empowered to alter the standard rent just as he may deem necessary. Clause (b) of section (4) must be read with clause (6) of the same section.

"Subject as hereinafter provided and subject to the right of the Controller to re-fix the standard rent of any small premises should there be a change of conditions affecting the standard rent thereof, an order under sub-section (1) shall be final."

The section is perfectly clear and explicit in its terms. The first order that the Controller passed with regard to the standard rent at Rs. 19-13-0 was final and was only subject to alteration if there was a change of conditions. And it is not alleged that in the present case there was any change of conditions. Mr. Pamanmal raised an ingenious argument that the tenants of the premises had changed. But the change of conditions does not refer to any change of the occupiers but to the building and as I said clause (6) of section 4 must be read with clause (b) and as such they clearly point out that the alteration in the standard rent can be made by the Controller only when there is a change of conditions in the premises that are leased.

It was next argued that the plaint did not contain the certificate of the Controller and consequently it should have been rejected. But, as a matter of fact, the plaint was accompanied by the first certificate granted by the Controller and that was all that was necessary as the second certificate was a nullity.

The result is, that the application must be dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 108—Accused required to furnish security—Subsequent conviction of substantive offence—Security withdrawn—Committal to Jail—Date from which substantive sentence to commence.

Accused was, on 23rd May 1921, ordered to furnish security under section 108, Criminal Procedure Code, for one year, or undergo imprisonment for that period. On 31st July 1921 he was convicted of a substantive offence under section 500, Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo three months' simple imprisonment, but he remained on bail till 23rd November 1921, when the bail-bond was cancelled. In the meanwhile, on the 16th October 1921, he withdrew his security and on 23rd November 1921 was committed to Jail under section 108, Criminal Procedure Code. The question was whether the substantive sentence of three months should commence on the date the bail-bond was cancelled, or on the expiry of the period of one year under section 108:

Held, that the sentence of imprisonment under section 500, Penal Code, took effect on 23rd November 1921 when accused's bail-bond was cancelled, as on the date on which that sentence was imposed, he was not undergoing a sentence of imprisonment.

Criminal Application against an order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 7th December 1921.

Dr. J. N. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. Hamid Ali Khan, for the Complainant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application might have raised a question of great importance, namely, the question whether a sentence of imprisonment in default of finding security under the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure was a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of section 397, Criminal Procedure Code. There is no case of this Court on the point. The Allahabad High Court in the well-known Full Bench ruling of Emperor v. Tula Khan (1) has held that it is a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of the section. Other

(1) 30 A. 334; A. W. N. (1908) 133; 5 A. L. J. 318; 7 C. L. J. 427; 4 M. L. T. 41. (F. B.)

High Courts, such as the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Vishnu Balkrishna (2), the Patna High Court in Markandar Genda v. Emperor (3), and the Madras High Court in Joghi Kannigan v. Emperor (4), have answered the question in the contrary sense. It appears, however, on an examination of the facts that it will not be necessary to decide the question, as the facts here are clearly distinguishable.

On 23rd May 1921 the applicant was ordered to furnish security for a period of one year under section 108, Criminal Procedure Code. In default of finding security it was directed that he should undergo rigorous imprisonment for the same period. The accused furnished the security required so that the alternative sentence of rigorous imprisonment did not come into operation. On 31st July the applicant was convicted of a substantive offence under section 500, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three months' simple imprisonment. He, however, remained on bail until 23rd November when the bail bond was cancelled. In the meanwhile, on October the 16th the applicant had withdrawn his security under section 108, Criminal Procedure Code, and had been committed to prison under that section. The question for decision is, whether the substantive sentence of three months' imprisonment should commence on the date on which the bail bond was cancelled, namely, 23rd November, or on the expiry of the period of one year under section 108.

Now, assuming the correctness of the ruling in Emperor v. Tula Khan (1) it is necessary for the provisions of section 397, Criminal Procedure Code, to be applicable that the person concerned should have been "undergoing a sentence of imprisonment" on the date on which sentence was passed on him for the substantive offence. The date on which he was sentenced for the substantive offence was 31st July. Can it be said that he was on that date undergoing a sentence of imprisonment? Clearly not. He had been ordered to furnish security and had furnished security. But for his subsequent withdrawal of the security no sentence of imprisonment under section 108 would ever have come into operation. The sentence of imprisonment came into operation from October the 16th, two and-a-half months after the date on which the applicant was sentenced to imprisonment under section 500. On the date when he was sentenced for that offence he was not undergoing any sentence of imprisonment whatever.

I, therefore, allow the application and direct that the sentence of imprisonment under section 500 take effect from the date on which the accused's bail under that section was cancelled. If he had served any portion of the term before being admitted to bail this will of course be taken into account.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Monmotha Nath Mukerjee, Upendra Kumar Roy and Lalit Mohan Sanyal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Monier and Babu Sarat Chandra Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Three persons who are the opposite parties before us were tried by B. Surendra Nath Banerjee, Magistrate, Second Class, at Bongaon, who framed charges against them for having committed offences punishable under sections 323 and 342, Indian Penal Code. In the first charge they were alleged to have caused hurt to one Hari Nath Bose and in the second charge they were alleged to have wrongfully confined Hari Nath Bose and Shib Chandra Chakravarty. They were convicted on both these charges and they appealed to the District Magistrate. At the hearing of the appeal an application was made by Hari Nath Bose to compound the case under section 345 Criminal Procedure Code. The District Magistrate allowed the compromise and acquitted all the appellants under that section.

This Rule has been obtained by Shiba Chandra Chakravarty on the ground that he was no party to the compromise and that, therefore, the acquittal so far as the offence committed against him was concerned, was illegal. We hold that this Rule must be made absolute on this ground. Though Hari Nath Bose was the complainant in the case that gave him no power to compound the offences under section 345, Criminal Procedure Code. Under that section the persons by whom an offence may be compounded are set out in the 3rd column of the statement which forms part of that section. Hari Nath Bose could compound the offences of hurt and wrongful confinement committed against him. But the only person who could compound the offence of wrongfully confining Shib Chandra Chakravarty was Shib Chandra Chakravarty himself. As he was no party to the compromise the acquittal of the accused on this part of the charge was illegal.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute. We set aside the order of acquittal so far as it relates to the conviction for the offence of wrongfully confining Shib Chandra Chakravarty. The appeal, so far as it relates to this offence, must be heard on the merits.

The three accused will appear before the Magistrate and execute fresh bail bonds for their appearance when called on.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 79, 183, applicability of—Offence committed during journey in foreign territory and British India—Offence, whether triable in British India—"Consequence" in s. 179, meaning of.

Section 183 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to cases where the offence is committed in British India and not in foreign territory. This section is part of a Code of Procedure for the trial of offences committed in British India; it extends to the whole of British India, but cannot give the Courts jurisdiction over offences committed beyond the limits of British India. The word "journey" used in the section does not include a journey in foreign territory, but is confined in its meaning to a journey within the territories of British India. [p. 324, col. 1.]

Babu Baldi v. Queen, 5 M. 23; 1 Weir 1; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 17, relied on.

Where an offence is committed in the course of a journey part of which lay through foreign territory and it is doubtful whether the offence was committed in foreign territory or in British India, section 183 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable to the case and it is not triable in British India. [p. 324, col. 1.]

Semble:—The "consequence" contemplated by section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code means a consequence which forms a part and parcel of the offence and does not mean a consequence which is not such a direct result of the act of the offender as to form any part of that offence. [p. 324, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 15th November 1922, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Rawalpindi dated the 16th October 1922.

Mr. Har Charan Das Bhalla, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Beni Parshad Khosla, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioners were tried and convicted of criminal breach of trust as carriers, under section 407 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three months rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 175 fine each. An appeal was preferred to the Sessions Judge but was dismissed and the convictions and the sentences imposed by the Trial Magistrate confirmed. The petitioners have now come up in revision to this Court.

It appears that the petitioners were entrusted with a certain amount of ghee at Islamabad in the Kashmir territory for conveyance to Rawalpindi. The charge against them was that on their way from Islamabad to Rawalpindi they abstracted about eleven maunds of ghee from the tins which were entrusted to their care, and that they committed criminal breach of trust in respect thereof.

On the facts found by the learned Sessions Judge there can be no doubt that the accused are guilty, and that it must be held that the charge of criminal breach of trust brought against them is fully established. I issued notice in this case only because I felt doubtful on the question of jurisdiction. I have now heard Counsel on both sides and, after giving a most careful consideration to the matter, have arrived at the conclusion that the Rawalpindi Courts had no jurisdiction to try this case and that the convictions must be set aside. No definite finding has been given by any of the Courts below as to the place where the offence was committed, and it has practically been taken for granted that the offence must have been committed within British India. I do not see there was any warrant for such a presumption. No evidence was produced by the prosecution upon this point and, in these circumstances, it would, in fact, be impossible for any Court to come to a definite finding that the offence was committed in British India or in foreign territory. The learned Sessions Judge in his judgment observes that the offence was committed somewhere between Islamabad in Kashmir and Rawalpindi and that the likelihood is that it was committed near Bharakau where Gulab lives. I do not see upon what evidence this conclusion has been arrived at. If there were any doubt upon this matter the benefit of the doubt ought to have been given to the accused and not to the prosecution. In the absence of any direct evidence upon the point, it is impossible to hold that the offence was committed in British India. In these circumstances it is clear that section 183 of the Criminal Procedure Code would be entirely inapplicable. This section applies only to cases where the offence is committed in British India and not in foreign territory. As ruled in Bapu Baldi v. Queen (1), the section is part of a Code of Procedure for the trial of offences committed in British India. It extends to the whole of British India, but cannot give the Courts jurisdiction over the offences committed beyond the limits of British India. The word "journey" spoken of in this section does not include a journey in foreign territory, but is confined in its meaning to a journey within the territories of British India. There being no evidence on the record that the offence was committed in British India, it must be held that section 183 does not apply. Nor has the section 181 (2), which the learned Sessions Judge thinks applies, anything to do with this case. That section provides that the offence of criminal misappropriation or a criminal breach of trust may be enquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property, which is the subject of the offence, was received or retained by the accused person or the offence was committed. It is obvious that none of the requirements of this section are fulfilled in the present case. It is admitted that there is no evidence on the record to show that any part of the 11 maunds of ghee which is said to have been abstracted from the tins, was received or retained by the accused persons within British Territory and the section cannot, therefore, be of any application whatever.

Next, it is argued that if none of the two sections above mentioned is applicable, section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code might apply. I am unable to agree with this contention either. This section applies only to cases in which the offence is completed by reason of a consequence ensuing within the local limits of another jurisdiction, or to cases in which the fact of a consequence ensuing in another jurisdiction is the cause of the offender being accused of the offence. It is clear that none of these things exist in the present case. Moreover, all the High Courts are not agreed as to the exact scope of the words "by reason of any consequence which has ensued." In a large number of cases it has been laid down that the consequence means a consequence which forms a part and parcel of the offence and does not mean a consequence which is not such a direct result of the act of the offender as to form any part of that offence. In re Rambilas (2); Krishnamachari v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (3) and Gokal Chand v. Phul Chand (4). The complainants in the present case were certain commission agents at Rawalpindi to whom the ghee was consigned from Islamabad, and it is impossible to see how it can be said that the consequences of the offence, which was probably complete as soon as the ghee was abstracted, ensued to the complainants at Rawalpindi so as to give the Rawalpindi Courts jurisdiction to try this case.

In my opinion the trial of the case was without jurisdiction and the convictions and the sentences must be set aside and the proceedings quashed.

I allow the revision and order accordingly.

A village headman is protected by section 28 of the Burma Village Act to this extent that he cannot be prosecuted for an act or omission punishable under section 10 of that Act, or for an abuse of his power similarly punishable, even though such act or omission, or such abuse of power is punishable under the Penal Code, or some other law, unless the prosecution is instituted by order of, or under authority from, the Deputy Commissioner. [p. 326, col. 1.]

Mr. R. K. Banerjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant here accused four persons, one of whom was a village headman, of illegally confining him and causing him hurt, offences punishable under sections 342 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code. The Deputy Commissioner appears to have had an enquiry made into the conduct of the headman, and, upon the 30th of May, issued an order "refusing sanction." This enquiry was initiated upon a report by the Magistrate to whom the complaint had been made that the action of the headman in confining the accused was, apparently, an abuse of his powers, punishable under section 10 of the Village Act or under section 342 of the Indian Penal Code, and the Magistrate thought that the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner was necessary. This view appears to have been accepted by the Deputy Commissioner and upon his refusing sanction, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate discharged the accused. An application was then made to the Commissioner of the Division who pointed out that no sanction was required for the prosecution of a village headman under sections 323 and 342 of the Indian Penal Code, but at the same time held that sanction should have been granted and, apparently acting under the powers conferred by section 23 of the Village Act, the Commissioner sanctioned the prosecution of the headman under those sections. Against this order the headman appears to have applied in revision to the Local Government which recorded an order to the effect that the Local Government "is advised that no authority has power to sanction or to refuse sanction to a prosecution under section 342 of the Indian Penal Code, and the Lieutenant-Governor is, therefore, unable to interfere in the petitioner's behalf. The complainant then appears to have lodged another complaint under sections 323, 342 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code against the same accused in the Court of the Senior Magistrate. The Senior Magistrate after perusing the orders already passed, expressed an opinion, that the orders of the Commissioner were not legal and could not be regarded as an authority to prosecute the headman, and he, therefore, dismissed the complaint. The complainant then applied in revision to the Sessions Judge who pointed out that no defence of acting under the Village Act could be urged in answer to charges under sections 323 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code, and that, therefore, no order or authority from the Deputy Commissioner was required so far as those charges were concerned. The Sessions Judge then expressed an opinion that the order of the Deputy Commissioner was necessary for a prosecution for illegal confinement, and the Judge said that the opinion of the Legal Remembrancer who had been consulted by the Local Government had been overruled by the Government Advocate, who expressed an opinion that any order of a Deputy Commissioner giving or withholding leave to prosecute could be revised by a Commissioner under section 23 of the Village Act; and the Judge held that the order of the Commissioner reversing the order of the Deputy Commissioner refusing sanction was a good and valid order, and directed the Court to proceed to enquire into the charge under section 342. Against this order the headman now comes to this Court in revision. There appears to have been a good deal of misunderstanding and confusion of thought on the part of the various officers concerned in dealing with this case. Section 28 of the Village Act provides that no complaint against a headman of any act or omission punishable under this Act shall be entertained by any Court unless the prosecution is instituted by order of, or under authority rom, the Deputy Commissioner. As was pointed out by the Legal Remembrancer when he was consulted by the Local Government, the Village Act says nothing about sanction of a Deputy Commissioner being required for a prosecution.

The case of Nga Shwe Yi v. Crow (1) may be referred to. That was a case under the Lower Burma Village Act of 1889, but the wording of section 28 of the present Act is identical with that of section 19 of that Act, and section 10 of the present Act corresponds exactly with the first part of section 8 of the former Act. I agree with much of the criticism of Irwin, J., in that judgment of the language of the Act, and I am not very greatly impressed by the arguments of the Judges who decided that case. At the same time, there can be no doubt that the interpretation given by the majority of the Judges to section 19, which corresponds with section 28 of the present Act, is in accordance with the ordinary practice and gets over the serious difficulty that, if the words of the section are strictly construed, they have no meaning and are superfluous. I think it must be taken, therefore, that a village headman is protected by section 28 of the Village Act to this extent, that he cannot be prosecuted for an act or omission punishable under section 10 of the Act or for an abuse of his power similarly punishable, even though such act or omission or such abuse of power is punishable under the Indian Penal Code or some other law, unless the prosecution is instituted by order of or under authority from, the Deputy Commissioner. The wording is unfortunate because it must often be impossible to say whether a headman was acting or claimed to be acting in the exercise of his powers when he did the act complained of. It would appear to be the duty of a Magistrate to whom a complaint is made, if it is clear from the allegations of the complainant that the village headman was acting ostensibly in the exercise of his powers, to dismiss the complaint, and similarly to refuse to proceed with it if it appears in the course of the trial that the headman was exercising powers conferred upon him by the Act, even though he may have abused those powers unless the Deputy Commissioner has authorised the prosecution.

As to the power of the Commissioner to institute or give authority to institute a prosecution which the Deputy Commissioner has not instituted or authorised, it appears to me very doubtful whether the provisions of section 23 give the Commissioner any such authority. The Deputy Commissioner is an executive officer who is presumably bound to obey the orders of his superior, and the correct procedure would apparently be for the Commissioner, if he considers that a headman should be prosecuted, to direct the Deputy Commissioner to institute or authorise his prosecution under section 28 of the Village Act.

Prima facie it does not appear that the village headman has any power to cause hurt to or insult another person and there appears to be no reason why the Magistrate should not enquire into the charges brought against the headman under sections 233 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code.

As far as the charge under section 342 of the Indian Penal Code is concerned, it would appear that the headman must have been acting under colour of his authority as headman, and I am of opinion that the correct procedure would be, if the Commissioner considers that the headman should be tried, that he should direct the Deputy Commissioner to institute or authorise proceedings against him; in the absence of such institution or authorisation the Magistrate is debarred from entertaining the complaint in respect of the charge under section 342 by section 28 of the Village Act.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 135, 141—Obstruction—Jury, appointment of—Failure to return verdict—Procedure.

Where a person against whom a conditional order is made under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code obtains the appointment of a jury, but the jury, for any reason, does not return a verdict within the time fixed by the Magistrate the latter must inquire into the matter before he passes a final order.

Raimohan Karmokar v. Emperor, 35 Ind. Cas. 969; 44 C. 61; 20 C. W. N. 1171; 17 Cr. L. J. 409, relied on.

Application against an order, dated 28th October 1922, passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sitamarhi.

Mr. Bankim Chandra De, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application made by one Ajodhya Tewari asking that an order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sitamarhi, directing the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence against the provisions of section 188 of the Indian Penal Code may be set aside.

The matter is a very simple one. The petitioner was alleged to have obstructed a roadway. Apparently, the petitioner maintains that at that time the roadway was not public. However, the Police received information that there was some obstruction and they reported that the petitioner had put up a post in a path running from the village to the well and had also erected a talli which had the effect of diminishing the width of the path. Proceedings accordingly were commenced against the petitioner under the provisions of section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 25th of May this year. The petitioner, as he had a right to do, applied to the Magistrate for a jury in the manner provided by the provisions of section 135 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The jury was accordingly appointed and instructed to report on a certain day; but they did not report on the day on which they had been told and on that day the Magistrate without any further ado made the conditional order, which he had previously made; absolute, ordering the alleged obstructions to be pulled down. Apparently, the order directed the petitioner to pull the obstructions down by the 5th of August. For some reason or other he did not do so and some days later the fact that he had not done so was brought to the notice of the Magistrate who directed him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted, for an offence against the provisions of section 188 of the Indian Penal Code, i.e., for having disobeyed an order duly promulgated by a proper authority. However, a little later on, the petitioner came and told the Magistrate that he had removed the alleged obstructions; but, nevertheless, the Magistrate has directed that he should still be prosecuted.

Now, one must proceed a little further and ascertain what has been brought before the notice of this Court. The position really is that, when the jury had failed to return their verdict as ordered at the time fixed, the Magistrate should not have, without giving any body an opportunity of being heard, made the order absolute. Section 141, which says that if the jury appointed does not return its verdict within the time fixed the Magistrate may "pass such order as he thinks fit" must mean that if the jury for any reason does not return its verdict, the Magistrate must inquire into the matter before he passes an order. This is obviously only in consonance with the proper conduct of legal investigation and I cannot imagine that it could seriously be maintained that without any investigation whatever and merely upon either an ex parte statement made by the complainant or on a report by the Police as to what the Police may have found at the place in question, a Magistrate is really justified in passing anything but an emergency order (which is provided for by another section) without any attempt to investigate the rights and circumstances which surround the position of the affair. This view, which I think is the correct one, is borne out by the case of Raimohan Karmokar v. Emperor (1) and the whole tendency of the other decisions to which I have been referred points in the same direction. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that the proper course in this case is to set aside the order which was made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 28th October 1922 ordering the prosecution of the petitioner in connection with an offence against the provisions of section 188, Indian Penal Code. Of course, if there is obstruction still existing (which I do not find from the papers which are at present before me) there is nothing to prevent further proceedings being taken against the petitioner and with his being dealt in the manner provided by law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 367, 537—Judgment, place of, in criminal trial—Non-compliance with provisions of s. 367 of Act V of 1898 whether mere irregularity.

The delivery of judgment and the passing of sentence is an integral part of a Criminal trial. It is not a mere formality and, consequently, where a judgment is signed and dated before delivery and is translated to the accused by the Court Interpreter, the Judge himself being absent, it amounts to a breach of the provisions of section 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code and cannot be treated as a mere irregularity to be cured by section 537 of the Code.

Criminal Appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Arakan, dated the 31st January 1922, in Sessions Trial No. 4 of 1922.

Mr. Saw Hla Pru, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The report of the learned Additional Sessions Judge shows that on the date fixed for delivery of judgment the Judge was ill. He signed and dated the judgment and sent it to his Chief Clerk to deliver. Counsel pointed out that this would be illegal. The Clerk, therefore, informed the Judge who directed the Court Interpreter to translate the judgment to the accused. There is, therefore, the fact that the judgment was signed and dated before delivery, it was not legally pronounced, there was no Court for no presiding Judge was present and there has thus been a breach of all the important provisions of section 367. The delivery of judgment and the passing of sentence is an integral part of a criminal trial. It is not a mere formality and the deliberate breach of express provisions of the law cannot be treated a mere irregularity to be cured by section 537.

We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct a re-trial. The Additional Sessions Judge has now been transferred and, therefore, no order as to the Court is necessary.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114 (e)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O.XXI, r. 24 (2)—Warrant signed by Serishtadar "by order"—Presumption.

Where a Serishtadar signs a warrant "by order" the presumption under section 114 (e) of the Evidence Act is applicable, and he must be held to be the officer appointed by the Court to sign processes as required by clause (2) of r. 24 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 20th November 1922, recommending reversal of the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Dinajpur, dated the 7th August 1922.

A FIRST GRADE PLEADER, In the matter of.

FACTS appear from the following ORDER OF REFERENCE.

The petitioners have been convicted under section 186, Indian Penal Code, in the under-noted circumstances:—

Warrants of attachment of the moveable property of two of them, in pursuance of decrees, were entrusted to a peon of the Civil Court for execution. The warrants purport to be signed by the officiating Serishtadar of the Court, and there is nothing on the record to show that he was authorised to sign them on behalf of the Munsif.

The peon attached some cattle belonging to the judgment-debtors, and made them over to two servants of the decree-holder, from whom the petitioners and others rescued them.

I am of opinion that the conviction is bad in law.

It had been held, in the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Mir Sarwar Jan (1), that where a warrant purports to be signed on behalf of the presiding officer of a Court by a person appointed to do so, there should be evidence, either on the face of the signature itself or otherwise, to prove the appointment. In that case a warrant of arrest issued under the corresponding section of the old Code, was held not to be a good warrant, and a conviction for resisting its execution was set aside.

I am, therefore, of opinion, that in the present case, the conviction under section 186, Indian Penal Code, cannot stand. I accordingly refer the matter for the consideration of the Hon'ble Judges with the recommendation that the conviction be quashed and a retrial directed in accordance with law.

Babu Indu Prokash Chatterjee, for the Accused.

Babys Mammatha Nath Mukherjee and Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Complainants.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the present case can be distinguished from the facts of the case cited by the learned Sessions Judge in his letter of reference, namely, the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Mir Sarwar Jan (1). In that case the warrant signed by the Serishtadar did not show on the face of it that the Serishtadar had signed in the exercise of the authority delegated to him by the Judge. But here we find that the Serishtadar who signed the warrant purported to make that signature "by order." We think, therefore, that the presumption under section 114 (e) of the Evidence Act can be applied to the present case, and we hold that the statement that appeared in the face of the warrant that the Serishtadar signed "by order" can be presumed to be true, and that we should hold, in the absence of anything to suggest the contrary, that he was actually the officer appointed by the Court to sign processes as required by clause 2 of r. 24, O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code.

We accordingly refuse to accept this reference and direct that the papers be returned. The accused must surrender to their bail and undergo the unexpired portion of their sentence.

Messrs. Nugent Grant, Counsel, and K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra, for the Vakils' Association.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under the Legal Practitioners Act for the legal practitioner in question to show cause why he should not be dealt with by the Court. The facts of this case have been put before us very fairly indeed by the learned Advocate-General as the President of the Vakils' Association and very frankly by Mr. Grant on behalf of the Pleader in question; and, although very sinister charges indeed were made against the Pleader, on examination the sinister aspect of the case disappears but there remain these facts. The Pleader having, in his professional capacity, had the custody of certain documents put them into Court. He was acting at that time for the father of the present petitioner and his brother, and, on the death of the father, he continued to act for a time for the two brothers. Those documents not being required for the purpose of the then pending suit, the practitioner applied to and got them back from the Court. They apparently were taken by his clerk and kept among other documents belonging to this practitioner by his clerk, and we are prepared to accept as a fact that he forgot that he had ever got them back and had not any knowledge of where they were. At a later time, the brothers having quarrelled, he was asked by one of them for the documents. He applied to the Court, believing that they were still with the Court, for those documents, and then discovered that, at any rate as far as most of them were concerned and in particular the document which the practitioner was particularly anxious to get hold of, they had been returned to him. He discovered after search that those documents were in fact among the papers in the custody of his clerk. With that knowledge he wrote two letters stating in effect that he had not got the documents and concealing the fact that the Court had recently told him that he had got the documents and that he had discovered them in the hands of his clerk. Mr. Grant, appearing for him, used what is appropriate language. He says that those documents contained lies. A professional man in this profession must know perfectly well that lying to his client is unprofessional conduct. We have no doubt in this case he did so because he thought that if he spoke the truth he would get into considerable trouble with, at any rate, one of the two brothers, probably with both, and he realised, especially as one document was still missing, that the sinister suggestions which at that time apparently were already being made, that he had from the start acted fraudulently in concealing his custody of these documents, would seem to have been with some foundation and would probably be urged against him with the result that he would lose his clients, persons obviously of a very litigious nature and no doubt very valuable clients.

There can be no justification at all for not speaking the truth. The fact that a man is going to be injured professionally if he does speak the truth is no valid excuse for telling a lie; but, it is an attitude which is not uncommon and which is not of the most serious character. It is very different from the case of a professional man telling a lie fraudulently in the sense of wishing to assist his client in deceiving the Court or even wishing to assist his client in a claim that he is making against another. It is done recklessly, foolishly and wrongly, apparently partly from fear and partly in his own interest.

Having said so much, we think there is little else to be said or done in the matter. We think it is a case where, but for the circumstances to which I am about to refer we should order the practitioner to pay the costs of the petitioner in the matter, but in this case, the petitioner has acted throughout certainly vindictively. He has put in a petition to the Court, and before the District

INDAR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Judge in the enquiry which was directed to be held by the District Judge a sinister view of the whole matter and made charges of a very serious fraud, viz., that the petitioner had originally got these documents from the Court in order to help not his own client but the brother, and had concealed the documents with the object of hurting his client in his suit and assisting the brother in any litigation that there might be between the two brothers. Those charges have wholly failed and, therefore, we do not think it right in this case to order the practitioner to pay the costs. While we must express our disapproval of the conduct of the practitioner in this matter we think that he has already been sufficiently punished by standing under the shadow of those much more serious charges, and by the expense that he has consequently been put to in having to appear in these proceedings.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 379, 411—Theft—Receiving stolen property—Accused pointing out place of concealment.

The mere pointing out by an accused person of the place where stolen property is concealed, which place is not in his possession, is not of itself sufficient evidence to maintain a conviction for theft, or for dishonestly receiving stolen property.

Petition for revision, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, of an order of the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 16th March 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Ferozepore, dated the 14th February 1920, convicting the petitioner.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner

Sardar Mehtab Singh, S. B., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, dismissing the appeal of Indar Singh who had been convicted of an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code. The only evidence against him is, that he pointed out two places in which large amounts of cash said to be stolen were found and that his footprints were found in the wara of a neighbour of the complainant at a distance of 20 or 25 karams from the scene of the theft.

Now, it has been held frequently that the mere pointing out by an accused person of the place where stolen property is concealed which place is not in his possession, is not of itself sufficient evidence to maintain a conviction for theft or for dishonestly receiving stolen property. The Sessions Judge himself was aware of the rulings to this effect but was of opinion that the track evidence was a sufficient corroboration. Now, the footprints said to be those of the appellant are of shoes and not of bare feet. There may be many other shoes which are similar to those of the appellant and it is, therefore, difficult to rely implicitly on the evidence of a tracker so as to say that the tracks are undoubtedly those of the shoes worn by the accused person. But granting for the sake of argument that the footprints found in Bachan Singh's wara were those of the appellant, it is difficult to see how they connect him with the theft. It is possible that the burglars may have got on to the roof of Bachan Singh's house and in that way reached the complainant's house, but there were no signs on the roof to show that this was done. The appellant lives in the same village and I do not see how the presence of footprints in the wara of Bachan Singh is any evidence that he took part in the burglary.

I, therefore, hold that there is no sufficient reason in this case for holding the guilt of Indar Singh proved. The revision is allowed and the order of the lower Appellate Court being set aside, Indar Singh is acquitted and it is ordered that he be forthwith released from custody.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 118, 121, 514—Security for good behaviour—Forfeiture, grounds for—Offence, commission of before making of order—Commission of offence, proof of.

The period for which a person is bound over to be of good behaviour begins from the date on which he is bound over. [p. 333, col. 1.]

Therefore, where security is given for good behaviour neither the principal nor the surety can be made liable for an offence which occurred before the security was given. [p. 333, col. 1.]

A conviction is ordinarily considered necessary to establish that an offence has been committed but the commission of an offence, within the meaning of section 121 of the Criminal Procedure Code may be proved otherwise than by a conviction, for instance, by evidence recorded under section 512 of the Code. [p. 333, col. 1.]

Emperor v. Jalal Shah, 5 Ind. Cas. 827; 5 P. R. 1910 Cr.; 8 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.; 169 P. L. R. 1910; 11 Cr. L. J. 252, referred to.

The flight of a person accused of dacoity to Independent Afridi territory raises a strong presumption of the intention of the absconder to join a band of dacoits. In such a case a bond for good behaviour given under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on proceedings taken under section 110 of the Code is liable to forfeiture, provided evidence is produced to show either that the person bound committed an offence in British India prior to his absconding and during the currency of the bond, or that during the same period he committed an offence during his outlawry punishable with imprisonment. [p. 334, col. 1.]

Petition for revision, under sections 435, 439, Criminal Procedure Code, of an order of the District Magistrate, Peshawar, dated the 7th April 1922, by which the petitioner's appeal against an order, dated the 24th January 1922, of forfeiture of bond passed by the Magistrate, First Class, was dismissed.

Mr. Gokal Chand Dhawan, for the Petitioner.

Lala Dewan Chand, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts material to this case are as follows:—On the 15th of October 1920 a Magistrate received from the Police an information report recommending security proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, against Juma. Juma failed to appear in the first instance and a warrant for his arrest was issued. He was placed in custody on the 5th of November 1920 and released on bail on the 11th of November 1920. Notice was issued to him in due course under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, on that date. After regular proceedings, he was ordered on the 6th of December 1920 to furnish Rs. 500 security with one surety for his good behaviour for one year under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 4th of January 1921 a security bond was filed under this order by Mansur as security. It would appear from the record that Juma disappeared again without attesting the bond, but it was finally attested by him on the 28th of January 1921. Between the date on which the case was originally sent up by the Police and the close of the proceedings a number of dacoities occurred on the 16th of November 1920. Juma does not appear to have been suspected at the outset, but on the 5th of December 1920 his name was mentioned by one of the complainants. After considerable inquiry certain persons were sent up for trial for one of the dacoities on the 16th of February 1921. Juma had been admitted to bail in that case on the 8th of January 1921 but had disappeared before the case came up for trial. His bail was duly confiscated. In respect of the dacoity, proceedings were taken against him under section 512, Criminal Procedure Code, by order of the 29th of April 1921. The case was referred to a jirga under section 11, Frontier Crimes Regulation, and on the 29th of June 1921 the jirga found that the accused including Juma were not guilty. A second jirga was appointed on the 2nd of August 1921 who found all the accused including Juma guilty. Three of the accused, who were then in custody, were sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. It appears to have been on account of this dacoity that proceedings under section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, were instituted against Mansur, with a view to the forfeiture of the security which he had given for Juma under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate ordered the confiscation of the security. The District Magistrate rejected the appeal, and Mansur has applied to this Court for revision.

MANSUR V. EMPEROR.

The order of the District Magistrate on appeal is distinctly misleading. It implies that the security taken under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, has been forfeited by reason of the commission of the dacoity of 16th November 1920. As this dacoity occurred a month and-a-half before the security bond under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, was filed, it is clear that it was not in itself a ground for forfeiture of the security. When security is given for good behaviour, neither the principal nor the surety can be made liable for an offence which occurred before the security was given. The period for which a person is bound over to be of good behaviour begins from the date on which he was bound over.

From the record, however, it appears that the ground on which the security was really forfeited was that Juma had absconded to Independent Afridi territory since the security was given, and had there joined a gang of habitual dacoits. What I have to consider, therefore, in these proceedings is whether the order forfeiting the security was justified on this ground. The conditions under which a security bond taken under Chapter VIII, Criminal Procedure Code, may be forfeited are given in section 121 of the same. In the case of a bond for good behaviour taken under the provisions of section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, the commission or attempt to commit, or the abatement of any offence punishable with imprisonment, wherever it may be committed, is a breach of the bond. It is argued by the Counsel for the petitioner that the word "commission" in this section necessarily implies a conviction. It is true that a conviction is ordinarily considered necessary to establish that an offence has been committed. At the same time, I have been shown no authority for the extreme view that the commission of an offence cannot be proved otherwise than by a conviction. In fact the ruling published as Emperor v. Jalai Shah (1), which has been quoted for the petitioner as showing that proof of the actual commission of an offence is indispensable, distinctly lends colour to the view that the commission of an offence can be proved otherwise than by an actual conviction. In that case the learned Judges considered the question as to whether there was sufficient evidence to show that a person had committed an offence and they disallowed the forfeiture of security on the ground that that evidence was insufficient. It was not suggested that the mere fact of the absence of a conviction was fatal. It is clear that there had been no conviction in that case, and if its absence had been sufficient in itself to vitiate the proceedings under section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, the learned Judges clearly would not have dealt with the evidence on its merits. It is, further, only common sense to recognise cases where bonds for good behaviour are liable to forfeiture when the person bound over has, after the commission of an offence, succeeded in escaping from justice. Such cases must necessarily have special prominence in the North-West Frontier Province where the extreme proximity of the border of Independent territory renders escape peculiarly easy and peculiarly tempting. It would appear to me to amount to negation of the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code if it could be assumed that their object was ipso facto defeated by the flight of an offender across the administrative border. In such cases it appears to me that the proper course for Courts to take is to satisfy themselves both by the record of evidence under sections 512 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and by such other evidence as may be necessary that an offence punishable with imprisonment has actually been committed by the person bound over. In the present case evidence was recorded to show that Juma has, since the execution of the bond, become a member of a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoities and located in Ilamguddar in Afridi territory. Whether or not the evidence produced was sufficient to establish this is a question of fact into which I do not propose to enter. It appears to me sufficient that the evidence was actually produced, and that it was sufficient to satisfy the Court. I can see no reason to hold that it was insufficient. The fact that section 400, Indian Penal Code, was not specifically mentioned as the offence in question does not seem to me material. The flight of a person accused of dacoity to the Independent Afridi territory raises the strongest possible presumption of the intention of the absconder to join a band of dacoits. In such cases I hold that a bond for good behaviour given under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, on proceedings taken under section 110 of the same is clearly liable to forfeiture, provided that evidence is produced to show either that the person bound committed an offence in British India prior to his absconding and during the currency of the bond, or that during the currency of the same he committed any offence during his outlawry punishable with imprisonment. I, therefore, decline to interfere in these proceedings and reject this petition for revision.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488, scope of—Maintenance of son during period of study.

The rights conferred by section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code are very restrictive. Under the provisions of the section, a father is bound to maintain his child, if the latter is not able to maintain himself. But where he is able to maintain himself, but wants to prosecute his studies in order to better his prospects, he has no right to force his father to comply with his wishes.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pegu, dated the 1st of December 1921, passed in Criminal Miscellaneous Trial No. 153 of 1921.

ORDER.—Order of reference read and considered. I am concerned with the boy

CHHOTAI SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Maung Ba, who is between 17 and 18 years of age. He has passed the 7th Standard Anglo-Vernacular examination and is now studying in the 8th Standard. A boy with such educational qualifications can maintain himself by taking up clerical work. By reason of his age he can earn his living also by manual labour, if he wishes to take up such work. The boy in question does not want to leave school now but wants to go on till he passes the 10th Standard. His father is not bound to keep him in school until then. The maintenance asked for is under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The rights conferred by that section are very restrictive. The father is bound to maintain a child, if he is not able to maintain himself. In this case the son is able to maintain himself because he is 17 or 18 and has passed the 7th Standard Anglo-Vernacular examination, if he wishes to go out into the world. But he wants to better his prospects by staying on in school for 3 years more at least, at the expense of his father. I do not think he has any right to force his father to comply with his wishes under the provisions of the section. Therefore Rs. 12-8 which has been allowed to him must be disallowed from the date of the father's application. The original amount of maintenance ordered will be reduced to Rs. 37-8 and this will be for three younger children.

Mr. Radha Kishen, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The accused, Chhotai Singh, has been convicted of an offence under section 498 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

The complainant, Durjan, is present today and states that he has received Rs. 90 in cash from Gobind Singh, son of Lotan Singh, a relation of the accused, and that he is willing to compound the offence by withdrawing the charge and take the woman, Musammatt Sartagi to his house. In Lalla v. Emperor (1) an offence under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code was similarly allowed to be compounded in revision. In view of the composition of the offence the application is allowed and the accused, Chhotai Singh, acquitted of the offence charged.

It is inadvisable for a High Court to interfere in revision in a pending case unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent on the face of the proceedings calling for prompt redress.

ORDER.—The learned Standing Counsel does not oppose the application, saying that there does not appear to be any dishonesty disclosed in the prosecution evidence. It is unusual to interfere in revision with a pending case but a perusal of the record convinces me that this is one of the exceptional cases in which the High Court should interfere, according to the principles laid down in Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (1) and Hari Charan v. Srish Chandra (2). The element of dishonesty necessary to constitute the offence of criminal breach of trust under section 405, Indian Penal Code, is entirely absurd in this case. There was no concealment. The Magistrate seems to think it to be a criminal offence in every case for a Pleader to retain fees the legal recovery of which may be time-barred, entirely leaving out of consideration the fact that a Pleader will not be willing to continue to act for a party as he did in this case unless he is paid all his fees; and the other item in respect of which the charge has been framed consists of money which the applicant openly admitted to belong to the complainants and held at their disposal. If the Magistrate's view were right the non-payment of a debt would always amount to criminal breach of trust. It is useless to enter into details. The criminal charge is clearly unsustainable. I quash the proceedings and direct that the applicant be discharged from his bail. He is acquitted.

Where an arbitrator signs, otherwise than as a witness, an award directing partition on an unstamped paper, he is liable to prosecution under section 62 (2) of the Stamp Act, if the instrument is chargeable with duty.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Unao.

JUDGMENT.—This reference and Reference No. 12 of 1923 have been made to this Court by the learned District Magistrate of Unao. He has requested the Court to set aside a conviction and sentence imposed on certain arbitrators who made an award and signed it. The reason given is that in the opinion of the Board of Revenue these men were illegally convicted of an offence under section 62 (b) of the Stamp Act. That section makes punishable the executing or signing otherwise than as a witness any instrument chargeable with duty other than a Bill of Exchange, cheque or promissory note without the same being duly stamped. The instrument which these arbitrators signed was an instrument of partition because it is an award by an arbitrator directing a partition [see section 2 (15)]. The instrument is similar to the one which was before the Bombay High Court for consideration upon a civil reference in the case of Kalidas Lalbhai v. Tribhuvandas Bhagwandas (1). It appears that according to the learned District Magistrate also the instrument was liable to stamp duty. His opinion seems to be that only the party executing an instrument of partition is liable to prosecution under section 62 (b). In my opinion there is a certain amount of confusion of thought in this opinion. It is true that under section 29 (g) the stamp duty on an instrument of partition is payable by the parties, whose properties are partitioned, but section 62 does not make only those parties liable to prosecution. Not only persons who execute an instrument of partition but also those who sign it otherwise than as witnesses are liable to prosecution, if they append their signatures to an instrument which is not duly stamped. The arbitrators certainly signed the instrument of partition otherwise than as witnesses and were, in my opinion, liable to prosecution because they put their signatures to a dutiable instrument which had not been duly stamped. I had the advantage of hearing Mr. Gokul Prasad who appeared on behalf of some of the arbitrators, but, in my opinion, the learned District Magistrate's interpretation is not justified.

Through no fault of theirs, the arbitrators have been put to the additional expense of appearing in this Court and engaging a learned Pleader. I shall, therefore, take the opinion of the Board of Revenue to amount to a disapproval of the arbitrator's prosecution and to the withdrawal of the sanction to prosecute them under section 70 of the Stamp Act. For these reasons I set aside the conviction and sentence in every case and order the fines, if recovered, to be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 435—Sessions Judge, powers of, in cases under s. 110—Private inquiries influencing judicial decision, effect of.

A Sessions Judge has power, under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to call for the record of proceedings under section 110 of that Code, before an inferior Criminal Court within his jurisdiction, and to refer the matter to the High Court.

Where a Magistrate has made private inquiries, and has allowed actual information ad hominem to influence his judgment in a judicial decision against particular individuals brought before him by process of law, his order is liable to be quashed as being vitiated by the admission of such information.

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 6th March 1923.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—I am told that this is the first case in which revision being sought from a Sessions Judge of an order resulting from proceedings before a Sub-Divisional Officer and a District Magistrate under the badmashi section, the Sessions Judge, being himself unable to make any final order in the case, has expressed his opinion, that there is cause for interference by the High Court and referred the matter to the High Court with the recommendation that the order be set aside. Having regard to the amended procedure which is probable when the new Criminal Procedure Code becomes law, and to the imminence of some new legislation separating the executive from the judicial, my decision is of very small importance and likely to be of short duration as an authority. But I am definitely of opinion that section 435 does enable a Sessions Judge to call for the record of proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, taken before an inferior Criminal Court within his jurisdiction, and that the other provisions of the Code enable him to refer the matter as he has done.

I am not alarmed by the prospect that other attempts may be made to follow this precedent, if it is one. Having myself read a certain number of the voluminous records of cases under section 110, I am satisfied that no Judge would voluntarily take upon himself the task more often in his life time than he was absolutely compelled, and it would be doing scant justice to the capacity or sincerity of our Sessions Judges to assume that they will be likely to interfere in any case in which a really paramount reason for interference was not shown.

I do not propose to exercise an independent judgment in this case upon the merits. I am satisfied that the Sessions Judge had power to refer it, and I am satisfied that he has gone very carefully into the whole matter. He has done what I have been compelled to do more than once, submitted the whole record to an elaborate analysis in order to see whether the case was fairly tried according to law, and he has come to this conclusion. He finds the evidence for the prosecution partly inadmissible, partly inconclusive. He finds that it is hearsay, vague and unsubstantial. He finds nothing definite proved against the accused, and no evidence called against them from their own village. He makes the trenchant observation that if it is impossible to get evidence from their own village because of their sinister influence, the real ground for binding them over would be that there was no evidence against them. On the other hand, he finds a number of persons of good character and position from their village itself and from the neighbouring villages who speak well of these men, while nobody has been able to suggest that they have not got resources for living as they do live, without support from theft or bad means of livelihood. He holds very strongly that it would be unfair to brand these men as bad characters upon this evidence, and on the whole after a careful study of his judgment I am satisfied that if I had studied the record I should have come to much the same conclusion as he has done. I should, therefore, if the matter had come before me and I had been compelled to go through this record, have interfered in revision, and on that ground I accept the reference.

But there is one further ground upon which I think I should have interfered in any case. In the explanations tendered by the District Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Officer respectively in answer to the Sessions Judge's opinion, it is stated that these gentlemen held private enquiries and confidential enquiries. No doubt a Magistrate is compelled in the performance of his duties to make private enquiries as to the character of his neighbourhood and as to the persons reputed to be of bad character and to be likely to cause trouble. These enquiries are necessary to an executive officer having to inform himself of the nature of the population committed to his charge, but where it is shown, as it appears to be shown in this case, that the Magistrate has allowed actual information ad hominem to influence his judgment in a judicial decision against particular individuals brought before him by process of law, I would have no alternative but to quash the order which was vitiated by the admission of such information.

I accept the reference and quash the order.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 186—Obstructing public servant—Assault on persons summoned by public servant to aid in investigation.

A Naib-Tahsildar of Income Tax visited the village of the accused where he was told by the Lambardars that the accused kept several shops and ought to be assessed to Income Tax. A dispute, thereupon, took place between the Lambardars and the accused and in the course of the quarrel the latter assaulted and beat the former, who, as a result, declined to render any help to the Naib-Tahsildar in his investigation:

Held, that the action of the accused did not amount to obstructing the Naib-Tahsildar in the discharge of his public functions within the meaning of section 186 of the Penal Code. [p. 339, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, with his No. 1326 of 12th July 1922.

FACTS.—A Naib-Tahsildar on special duty connected with the assessment of Income Tax visited the village of Pai, where the Lambardars told him that a certain family of Mahajans had several shops and ought to be assessed. A dispute took place between the Lambardars and Mattu Ram Mahajan. The former said he had only one shop, the Lambardars said he had several. The Lambardars showed the Naib-Tahsildar several shops. The dispute between Mahajans and Lambardars grew hotter and resulted in a fight between them. The Naib-Tahsildar, therefore, had to stop his work for the time being.

Seven accused persons were convicted by Tahsildar of Kaithal, Magistrate Second Class, under section 353, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced—Mattu Ram and Madho Ram each to Rs. 100 fine and five other accused each to Rs. 50 fine.

They appealed to the District Magistrate, Karnal, who held that the Naib-Tahsildar had not been assaulted and the conviction under section 353 could not stand. But he found that the accused had obstructed the Naib-Tahsildar in the execution of his duty, and altered the conviction to section 186, Indian Penal Code, but maintained the sentences.

GROUND.—After hearing the petitioners' learned Vakil I agree with the District Magistrate's finding as to the facts and think that the petitioners were rightly convicted under section 186, Indian Penal Code, but the sentences appear to be unduly severe. Mattu Ram and Madho Ram are real brothers. Of the other petitioners Sant Lal is their real brother, Beni is the son of Mattu Ram and Gita is real nephew of the three brothers. The remaining two petitioners Payara and Kali Ram are first cousins once removed of the three brothers, i.e., all the petitioners are descended from the same great-grandfather. This family has been fined collectively Rs. 450 for a not very serious offence. The Lambardars who lodged a separate petition. have compromised it and the Naib-Tahsildar was not forced to leave the village merely to suspend operations for the time being.

I recommend that the fines be reduced as follows:—Mattu Ram and Madho Ram (who actually committed the assault on the Lambardars) Rs. 25 each and the other five petitioners Rs. 10 each, making a total of Rs. 100 on the family.

This will, I think, meet the ends of Justice.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—The petitioners have been fined under section 186, Indian Penal Code, for voluntarily causing obstruction to a Naib-Tahsildar in the discharge of his public functions, and the contention urged on their behalf is, that on the facts found by the learned District Magistrate the case does not fulfil the requirements of the aforesaid section.

It appears that the Naib-Tahsildar of Income Tax visited the village of the petitioners where he was told by the Lambardars that the petitioners kept several shops and ought to be assessed. A dispute then took place between the Lambardars on the one side and the petitioners on the other, and it is alleged that the Lambardars were, in the course of the quarrel, assaulted and beaten. They thereupon filed complaints under section 323, Indian Penal Code, but these cases have been compounded.

The case, out of which this application for revision arises, relates to the alleged obstruction offered to the Naib-Tahsildar. Now, the learned District Magistrate finds that the Naib-Tahsildar was obstructed because the Lambardars, "whom he called in, as he had a right to do, to aid him in his investigation were assaulted and beaten." I consider that this is a far-fetched view. The learned Magistrate does not find that the petitioners either assaulted the Naib-Tahsildar or made any gestures, and I am not prepared to hold that the mere fact that the Lambardars who were assaulted, declined to render any help to the Naib-Tahsildar in his investigation can be viewed as an obstruction caused by the petitioners.

Accordingly, I hold that the guilt of the applicants under section 186, Indian Penal Code, has not been made out and, setting aside their convictions, I direct that the fines be refunded to them.

The object of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to prevent a breach of the peace by a summary decision as to the possession of the contending parties, leaving them to decide their title and right to possession in a competent Civil Court where, naturally, the proceeding has to be a protracted one. It is, therefore, incumbent upon Magistrates to dispose of proceedings under section 145 of the Code as quickly as possible and with due regard to the rules of procedure prescribed by that self-contained section. The procedure for the trial of a case under this section is that laid down for the trial of summons-cases. [p. 340, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 138 of the Evidence Act merely lays down the order in which witnesses will be examined, cross-examined and re-examined. An examination-in-chief of a witness, without an opportunity being offered to the opposite party to cross-examine, is not legally acceptable. [p. 341, col. 1.]

Messrs. Akbari and Hasan Jan, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—I regret that the order of the Magistrate, dated the 3rd of May 1922, declaring the possession of the first party under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, must be set aside and the case remanded for continuing the trial thereof from the stage at which it had reached that day. This was a very old case. The dispute between the parties led to a proceeding under section 145 of the Code some time last year and on account of the indiscretion of the Magistrate who tried that case, the order had to be set aside by this Court on the 19th of October 1921 with the direction to start a fresh proceeding in case of a danger of the breach of the peace still existing. On the 26th of November 1921 the Magistrate considered the Police report and the High Court judgment referred to above and started the proceeding which is the subject-matter of the present application obviously because the dispute between the parties still continued in so acute a form as to necessitate the adoption of a fresh proceeding under section 145.

Now, the object of section 145 is to prevent a breach of the peace by a summary decision as to the possession of the contending parties leaving them to decide their title and right to possession in a competent Civil Court where, naturally, the proceeding has to be a protected one. It is, therefore, incumbent upon Magistrates to dispose of proceedings under section 145 as quickly as possible and with due regard to the rules of procedure prescribed by that self-contained section. These rules are very simple and it is to be regretted that the Magistrate in the present case has not adopted them although his attention was drawn to the rules by the order of this Court, dated the 19th October 1921. It is extremely harassing to the parties that the present proceeding, started on the 26th November 1921, could not be finished by the 3rd of May 1922.

Without going to the earlier orders in the case I would at once come to the order of the 6th of February 1922. By that order the case was made over to the Magistrate in question when the evidence had already commenced in the Court of the Magistrate who had before that the seizure of it. In the order of the 7th of February the Magistrate directed the witnesses of the first party to appear on the 17th of February; thereby he allowed the second party to keep back his witnesses till the evidence on behalf of the first party was finished.

Thereafter, on various dates, he examined several witnesses on behalf of the first party only in chief. The procedure for the trial of a case under section 145 is that laid down for the trial of summons-cases where witnesses are examined, cross-examined and re-examined and then discharged. The Magistrate in the present case started the enquiry as if it was a warrant-case. He examined the witnesses in chief and postponed their cross-examination till after the first party had closed its case. Then, on the 5th April 1922, the first party closed its case and the witnesses were directed to be produced for cross-examination on the 18th. One witness for the first party was then cross-examined on three dates, the 18th, the 19th and 20th of April. The cross-examination shows that the Magistrate would not have taken more than half an hour or so each day in recording the cross-examination of that witness. This was, as observed above, extremely harassing to the parties. For cross-examining one witness the second party had to go to the Court day after day. There is no reason why the Magistrate should not have taken up this case and continued the hearing of it till it was finished in two or three sittings. The result was that the parties had got tired of this procedure and on the 3rd May 1922 when the cross-examination of the witness had to be resumed the second party did not appear in time. The Magistrate then disposed of the case ex parte, holding that the evidence adduced by the first party was sufficient to prove its possession over the lands in question. No opportunity was given to the second party to cross-examine the witnesses other than the one already referred to and two other witnesses, Nos. 11 and 15. Witness No. 11 was a Sub-Deputy Collector and he was a formal witness. His cross-examination was declined by the second party. Witness No. 15 was also a formal witness. He simply proved the complaint petition.

Mr. Akbari says that the second party had a right to cross-examine these witnesses and if they did not cross-examine them, after they were examined in chief there was no irregularity committed by the Magistrate. He has also referred to section 138 of the Indian Evidence Act, I am unable to agree with this view. Section

CHHOTAY LAL v. CHHEDI LAL.

138 of the Act has obviously no application. It only lays down the order in which the witnesses will be examined, cross-examined and re-examined; and, referring to the cross-examination, it says that the witnesses will be cross-examined after the examination-in-chief if the party so desires. It certainly implies that the party had an opportunity to cross-examine and does not mean that merely a right to cross-examine a witness without an opportunity being offered for cross-examination is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law.

Now, it is an elementary principle of law that in examination-in-chief of a witness, without an opportunity being offered to the opposite party to cross-examine, is not legally acceptable. Therefore the evidence of the witnesses in the present case was not such as upon which the Magistrate could act. It may, however, be said that the second party was absent when the case was called on and one of the witnesses of the first party referred to above who was under cross-examination was present in Court and, therefore, there was an opportunity to cross-examine him. The non-appearance of the second party does not, therefore, make evidence of that witness inadmissible. There is some force in this argument. But the Magistrate does not in his order say that he has acted upon the evidence of that witness alone and not upon the evidence of witnesses who were not cross-examined and whose evidence was, as observed above, inadmissible. It appears to me that apparently he has not referred to any evidence. After the default was committed by the second party he simply, in continuation of his recording the order that the second party did not put in appearance, wrote one passage in his order that the "first party had adduced sufficient evidence to prove possession." There is also a good deal of force in the contention of Mr. Yunus that on that day only the first party's witness referred to above was to be cross-examined and that the Magistrate ought to have given opportunity to the second party to adduce its evidence. This opportunity was never given.

Considering all the circumstances of the case, I hold that the order of the 3rd of May 1922, does not seem to have been based upon the legal evidence and is, therefore, without jurisdiction. I also hold that the Magistrate has denied a fair trial of the case to the second party. I further hold that the Magistrate has in the present case shown great indifference in the disposal of the case. He seems to have treated this case as if of no importance and used to take it up when it suited him. This is, perhaps, due to his being in charge of the Treasury and thus not being able to afford much time for this case. I think some better arrangements should have been made for the trial of this case.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate, dated the 3rd of May 1922, and direct that the case be taken up from that stage after giving an opportunity to the second party to cross-examine one witness already referred to and the other witnesses on behalf of the first party and to adduce its own evidence, if any.

Coutts, J.—I agree that the order must be set aside and the trial continued from the stage it had reached.

CHHOTAY LAL—APPLICANT

versus

CHHEDI LAL—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 10, 195 (1) (a)—Police Act (V of 1861), s. 4, District Magistrate acting under, whether Court—Jurisdiction of Sessions Judge to interfere—Revision whether competent—Superintendent of Police whether subordinate to District Magistrate.

Where a District Magistrate has authority to grant and does grant, contrary to the opinion of the Superintendent of Police, sanction to prosecute a person on the allegation that he had committed contempt of the lawful authority of an officer in-charge of a Police station, he does so by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of the Police Act. He is, however, not acting as the Presiding Officer of the Court of a District Magistrate, constituted under the Criminal Procedure Code and consequent, ly a Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to interfere with his order. His order, not being that of a Court of Justice, is not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of a High Court.

The Superintendent of Police of a District is subject to the Magistrate of that district within the meaning of section 195 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Emperor v. Sarada Prosad Chatterjee, 32 C. 180; 2 Cr. L. J. 171, not followed.

Messrs. G. W. Dillon and S. N. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This application was originally filed as one in revision against an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Etawah refusing to interfere with the order of a gentleman holding the office of District Magistrate of the district of Etawah whereby he overruled an order passed by the Superintendent of Police of that district and contrary to the opinion of the said Superintendent, granted sanction for the prosecution of the applicant, Chhotay Lal, on the allegation that the said Chhotay Lal had committed a contempt of the lawful authority of the Police Officer in charge of a certain Police station in that district by giving the said Police Officer false information with such intent as to make the giving of the information an offence punishable under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge was perfectly right in refusing to interfere. If the District Magistrate had authority to grant the sanction in question he had that authority in virtue of the provisions of the Police Act V of 1861, section (4). He was not acting as the presiding officer of the Court of a District Magistrate constituted under the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act V. of 1898. The learned Sessions Judge rightly appreciated this fact and held that he had no jurisdiction to interfere. One of us was responsible for admitting this application and at the time of its admission, the suggestion was thrown out that the order of the Sessions Judge might be correct and yet the order of the District Magistrate a bad one. Upon this suggestion a further application in revision has been filed which assails the order of the District Magistrate direct. This was not the intention with which the suggestion above referred to was thrown out. The order of the District Magistrate, not being that of a Court of Justice, is not in itself subject to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. What was contemplated was that on proceedings being taken upon this order of sanction the person accused, or sought to be prosecuted, might have pleaded before the Court seeking to take cognizance of the matter that the said Court had no cognizance because of the invalidity of the alleged sanction. If proceedings had gone this length an issue of law would have been raised in a Court of subordinate jurisdiction to this Court and the opinion of this Court might have been sought by way of an application in revision. As the matter stands, however, we think it expedient to deal directly with the question sought to be raised. The real question in issue is whether the Superintendent of Police of the District of Etawah is or is not subordinate to the District Magistrate of Etawah within the meaning of section 195 (1) (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is clear authority of this Court for answering this question in the affirmative; Emperor v. Shib Singh (1). That authority has not, so far as we are aware, been challenged in this Court for some 18 years. Moreover, it seems to us that the words of the relevant section of the Police Act, referred to by the learned Judge who decided that case do have the force and meaning which he ascribes to them, that is to say, they do make the Superintendent of Police of a District subordinate to the Magistrate of that District. There is one authority of the Calcutta High Court to the contrary. It was referred to by the learned Judge of this Court who decided Emperor v. Shib Singh (1). We are by no means clear that the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court have not to a considerable extent changed their view of the matter, vide the subsequent decision in Emperor v. Sarada Prosad Chatterjee (2). At any rate, it is sufficient for us to say that we find ourselves in general agreement with the view taken by Sir George Knox in Emperor v. Shib Singh (1). We reject both these applications. The stay order passed at the time when they were admitted is discharged.

BENCH.We are asked to revise the decision* of the Sessions Judge of North Arcot, confirming the conviction of the two petitioners, Head Constables, of an offence punishable under section 342 and their sentences to pay a fine of Rs. 10 each. The findings of the lower Court are, we take it, that on the night of 8th August 1921 the two petitioners arrested one Nayinatha Udayan as he was drunk and creating a disturbance in the Brahman street of the village, and that they took him to the station and confined him there, although one of them, it is found, knew of his name and address. On those findings the learned Sessions Judge held that Nayinatha Udayan, having committed a non-cognisable offence, could not be arrested or taken to the station, inasmuch as there was no necessity for the Head Constables under section 57 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to do so in order that his name or residence might be ascertained.Here the petition has been argued, first, with reference to section 21 of the Madras Police Act, XXIV of 1859, the contention being that this section removes any restriction on the power of arrest imposed by any other law, including the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 21, no doubt, states that "it shall be the duty of every Police Officer to use his best endeavour and ability to prevent all crimes, offences and public nuisances to preserve the peace, to apprehend disorderly and suspicious characters;" and then further duties are described with a similar absence of precision. This section, as we understand it, expresses only some of the pious injunctions, to which our earlier Indian Draftsmen were addicted, and was not intended to enlarge the powers with which the Police were at its date or have since been invested under the substantive law, whatever that law at the time in question may have been or may be. We cannot presume an intention to limit the* liberty of the subject by language so general We, therefore, turn to the second argument relied on by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar on behalf of the petitioners, that in fact what they did was authorised by the substantive law, as declared by Judicial Authority in this Presidency.

GOPAL NAIDU, In re:

Shortly, petitioners rely on the decision in In re Ramasami Iyar (1) as justifying their action. That decision we read as founded on three propositions. First, that the Common Law of England would authorise an arrest not only by the Police or a Magistrate but by any person, in the circumstances of the present case; next, that the Common Law of England is applicable to India, except where a Statute either expressly or by implication has abrogated it, and, thirdly, that the Common Law has not been abrogated in any way, so far as it is applicable to the facts before us.

The first of these propositions has not been disputed here, and we observe only that the Common Law power to terminate a nuisance, such as is here in question, by the arrest of the offender is an effective and immediate remedy adapted to the circumstances of such cases. The second rests in this Presidency on the authority of Potluraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (2). The learned Public Prosecutor has drawn our attention to Satis Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ram Dayal De (3) and it is possible that re-consideration of the principle involved, in the light of the latter decision may be justified. We do not, however, pursue this further, since we are clear that in connection with the third of the propositions above stated a reference to a Full Bench must be made.

To the third proposition the learned Public Prosecutor has taken objection on the ground that certain provisions of Statute Law were not considered by the learned Judges in the previous case. The offence in question then, as now, was one punishable under section 290 or section 510, Indian Penal Code, Nayinatha Udayan having in fact been convicted of an offence punishable under the former. Which section, however, was really applicable does not matter, because the offence under each is one, for which the Police cannot arrest without warrant; that is, it was non-cognisable. There is then the provision regarding arrest in non-cognisable offences, section 57, Criminal Procedure Code, and, whatever the inconvenience involved, we cannot disregard the existence of this apparently exhaustive provision regarding the powers of the Police in them. There is no mention of these provisions in In re Ramasami Iyar (1) and no consideration of the extent to which they abrogate the right of arrest under the English Common Law. In the absence of such mention we entertain doubt as to the correctness of the learned Judge's conclusion; and we accordingly refer to a Full Bench the question whether In re Ramasami Iyar (1) was correctly decided.

This case came on for hearing on the 28th of November 1922 in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench, dated the 16th November 1922.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor for the Crown.

OPINION.

Schwabe, C. J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is whether In re Ramasami Aiyar (1) was correctly decided.

This is not a desirable form of reference to a Full Bench, because the facts of one case are seldom precisely the same as those of another and it is much better that the point on which the opinion of the Full Bench is desired should be formulated. In In re Ramasami Iyar (1) a Village Magistrate arrested a drunken man whose conduct was at the time a grave danger to the public. In this case two Police Constables arrested a man who was drunk and creating a disturbance, but to what extent he was a danger to others does not appear in the Order of Reference. The decision in In re Ramasami Iyar (1) went on the ground that the English Common Law which is "that for the sake of the preservation of the peace any individual who sees it broken may restrain the liberty of him whom he sees breaking it so long as his conduct showed that the public peace is likely to be endangered by his acts" [as per Parke, B. in Timothy v. Simpson (4)] applies to India and affords a good answer to any person charged for wrongful confinement under section 342 of the Indian Penal Code if the facts of the case comply with that definition.

The first introduction of English Common Law in this country was in a Charter of Charles II in 1689 whereby it was ordained that the law of the Kingdom, which would include the Common Law, should be administered in this country. In later Charters and enactments it has been provided that the Hindu Law is to be applied between Hindus and the Muhammadan Law between Muhammadans and in cases not otherwise provided for, the principles of equity, justice and good conscience and these later words have been held to include material parts of the English Common Law. But for the purpose of this case it is not necessary to consider precisely to what extent and with what restrictions the Common Law of England is part of the Law of India.

In this country the Criminal Law has been codified in the Indian Penal Code and in the Code of Criminal Procedure and the principle has been well-established and is fully enunciated in the speech of Lord Halsbury in the Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (5) that "where a Statute is expressly said to codify the law, you are not at liberty to go outside the Code so created, because, before the existence of that Code, another law prevailed." This perhaps should be limited by the speech of Lord Herschell (at page 145) to the effect that the purpose of the codified Statute is that on any point not specifically dealt with by it the law shall be ascertained by interpreting the language used.

Now, there can be no doubt that the Code of Criminal Procedure deals with the powers of arrest with or without warrant, and the Indian Penal Code deals specifically with the question of wrongful confinement. It is, however, to be observed that the Code of Criminal Procedure is dealing rather with the arrest for crimes that had been committed than with the arrest for the prevention of crime, although there are specific instances given permitting the arrest of persons suspected of crime and it may be correct to say that the Code of Criminal Procedure does not specifically deal with the matter under discussion here. However this may be, the Indian Penal Code makes 'wrongful confinement' an offence by section 342. What amounts to wrongful confinement must be ascertained by examining the definition contained in sections 339 and 340. If the acts complained of come within both definitions the offence has been committed unless there are other sections in the Code which provide an excuse for or a defence to what otherwise would be a crime. The Indian Penal Code defines the offence and also states what matters will afford a defence and, therefore, it may be said that this Code deals specifically with the question, and it follows that the Court is not entitled to invoke the Common Law of England in the matter at all. I, therefore, cannot agree with the grounds of decision in In re Ramasami Iyar (1) but, in my judgment, the decision was perfectly correct and can be supported on other grounds to be found on a proper interpretation of the Code itself.

By section 340 of the Indian Penal Code, whoever wrongfully restrains any person in such a manner as to prevent that person from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits is said to wrongfully confine that person. By section 339, whoever voluntarily obstructs any person so as to prevent that person from proceeding in any direction in which that person has a right to proceed is said wrongfully to restrain that person. So on the arrest of any person when he has not been guilty of an offence for which arrest without warrant is permitted prima facie it is wrongful confinement of the person; sections 96 and 97 give a right to every person to defend his own body and the body of every other person and the property of himself and of every other person against certain offences, and this right of private defence 'commences,' under sections 102 and 105, when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the person or property commences. In our judgment these provisions are quite wide enough to have afforded a complete defence in the case reported as In re Ramasami Iyar (1) and in effect provide for this country what is provided in England by the rule of Common Law referred to. The question in each case must be whether the person arresting or confining has a genuine and reasonable apprehension that to allow the other to remain at large will endanger the person and property of others. Some such provision is a necessity in a civilised community, for, otherwise, its citizens would be left the alternative of standing by until a crime has been committed or of themselves becoming criminals by taking what might be the only course to prevent the commission of a crime, namely, the confinement of the person whose actions show that the persons and property of others are endangered. In my judgment the Indian Penal Code adequately provides the solution of the difficulty.

Reliance has been placed on section 21 of the Madras City Police Act, XXIV of 1859, which provided that it shall be the duty of every Police Officer to use his best endeavour to prevent all crimes and offences and public nuisances to preserve the peace, to apprehend disorderly and suspicious characters. This was followed by many sections providing when a Police Officer could or could not arrest with or without warrant but on the coming into force of the first Code of Criminal Procedure these sections were repealed but section 21 was left unrepealed. This, no doubt, was done deliberately and it states the duties of the Police in the matter of prevention of crime, leaving the matter of arrest of persons for crimes that have been committed or are suspected to have been committed to be dealt with in future under the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is not necessary to consider in this case whether this section gives to the Police wider powers in cases such as the one in question than are enjoyed by all citizens; but it is to be observed that it would be remarkable if Police Officers were by Statute enjoined to preserve the peace and a genuine attempt to do so under circumstances like the present would amount to the commission of a criminal offence by the Police. It is not, however, necessary to consider this point further as it has not been specifically referred to us, but it must not be taken that I am expressing my view of the correctness or otherwise of the decision of the Referring Bench on this point.

The answer to the question referred to us is that the case in In re Ramasami Iyar (1) is rightly decided on the ground stated above. It will be for the Referring Bench to consider, on the facts of this case, whether the accused had a genuine and reasonable apprehension that unless the prosecutor was arrested there would be damages to the person or property of others.

Having had the opportunity of reading the judgments of my learned brothers I would add that it will be also open to the Referring Bench to consider the applicability of section 81 of the Indian Penal Code.

Phillips, J.—I agree and would only add that in the present case and in similar cases the provision in section 81 of the Indian Penal Code may also be considered. That section lays down that nothing is an offence merely by reason of its being done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause harm if it be done without any criminal intention to cause harm and in good faith for the purpose of preventing or avoiding other harm to person or property. While I am not prepared to say that this provision is strictly applicable to the facts of the case referred, it appears to me that it and other provisions of Chapter IV of the Penal Code have been framed to provide for cases like the present one, to which, before the enactment of the Code, the Common Law would have applied.

Devadoss, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is, whether In re Ramasami Iyar (1) was correctly decided. In that case a Village Magistrate was convicted under section 341, Indian Penal Code. Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ., held that the Common Law of England was applicable to this country and that on the facts found the petitioner "had ample justification, not as Village Magistrate, but as a private citizen to put a restraint upon the complainant who was drunk and disorderly and threatened to commit a breach of the peace and was a danger to the other villagers." In the case under reference the petitioners who are Police Constables have been convicted under section 342, Indian Penal Code, for wrongfully confining the complainant and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 10 each.

Two questions arise for consideration.

1. Whether the Common Law of England is applicable to India except where a Statute either expressly or by implication has abrogated it.

2. Granting that the Common Law of England is applicable to India, whether the Statute Law has not abrogated it so far as it is applicable to this case.

As regards the first point Mr. Jayarama Iyer for the petitioners contends that the Common Law of England is applicable to India and relies upon Baboo Gunnesht Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdry (6) and Ramloll Thackoorseydass v. Soojumnull Dhondmull (7). In Ramloll Thackoorseydass v. Soojumnull Dhondmull (7) an action was brought in the Supreme Court of Bombay on a wager. Lord Campbell in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council observed, at page 310: "The Statute, 8 and 9 Vic., Ch. 109 does not extend to India, and although both parties on the record are Hindus, no peculiar Hindu Law is alleged to exist upon the subject; therefore, this case must be decided by the Common Law of England" and held that the wager in question was not illegal and could be enforced in a Court of Justice.

In Baboo Gunnesht Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdry (6) the question was whether witnesses could be sued for damages in respect of evidence given by them in a judicial proceeding. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held, "that witnesses cannot be sued in a Civil Court for damages in respect of evidence given by them upon oath in a judicial proceeding. Their Lordships hold this maxim, which certainly has been recognised by all the Courts of this country to be one based upon principles of public policy. The ground of it is this,—that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of Justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages, but that the only penalty which they should incur if they give evidence falsely should be an indictment for perjury." In the former case, their Lordships assumed as a matter of course that the Common Law of England was applicable to contracts in Bombay. According to the Charter of the Supreme Court the King's Judges were enjoined to administer the Common Law of England, and it was evidently on that ground the question whether the Common Law of England was applicable or not was not raised in argument in that case. In the latter case their Lordships rest their judgment upon the principles of public policy. They do not invoke the aid of the Common Law of England for holding that a witness could not be sued for damages in respect of the evidence given by him.

In Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (2) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that the statement of an accused person in answer to a question by the Court is absolutely privileged under the Common Law of England and could not form the subject of an indictment, under section 499, Indian Penal Code, even though false and made without good faith, and that exceptions to section 499, Indian Penal Code, were not exhaustive. This decision has been dissented from by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Satis Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ram Dayal De (3) with the greatest respect to the learned Judge who decided Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (2). I share with Spencer, J., the apprehension entertained by him in that case that the cause of justice might suffer by the extension of the principle of absolute privilege to unscrupulous persons who in a petty case might make the most unfounded aspersions on the character of the relations of the complainant and his witnesses.

When the Charter was granted to the Madras High Court it was provided by section 30 that all persons brought for trial before the High Court of Madras either in the exercise of its Original Jurisdiction as a Court of Appeal, Reference or Revision, charged with any offence the law as contained in the Penal Code or Amending Acts of such Code should be applied. Section 112 of the Government of India Act lays down that the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay should, in the exercise of their Original Jurisdiction in suits against the inhabitants of the three Cities, apply the personal law in the matter of inheritance, succession and contract where the parties are subject to a personal law. But no distinction is to be made with regard to the administration of the Criminal Law of the land except so far as that law is laid down in the Acts of the Legislatures. The powers of the Governor-General in Council to make the laws are embodied in section 65 of the Act. Subject to certain restrictions, which it is unnecessary to detail here, the central Legislature has power to legislate on all subjects. The Common Law of England has not been made applicable to this country by any Act of Parliament or by any enactment of the Indian Legislature. Our attention has not been drawn to any Statute or legislative enactment which makes the Common Law of England the law of the land. The Charter of Charles II. granted to the East India Company and the later Charters enjoin upon the Company and its servants due obedience to the Common and Statute Law of England. It was only towards the close of the 18th century that the Supreme Courts in Madras, Calcutta and Bombay were established, where the King's Judges administered the Common Law of England. Outside the jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts, the law of the land with regard to civil matters and the Muhammadan Law as regards offences were administered by the Company's Courts. The principal Civil Court was called Sudder Adalat, and the principal Criminal Court was known as Fowzdari Adalat. In Madras, as well as in other provinces, Regulations were passed empowering the Courts to deal with Civil and Criminal matters. In Madras, Regulation II of 1802 was passed giving jurisdictions to Civil Courts. Then by Regulation III Rules of Civil Practice in the Zillah Courts were enacted. By Regulation V the Saddar Adalat or Chief Court of civil jurisdiction was established. Regulation VI laid down rules for the guidance of Magistrates. By Regulation VIII the Fouzdari Adalat or Chief Criminal Court was established. From 1802 onwards various Regulations were passed with regard to the trial of offenders and the trial of civil suits. By those Regulations the Judges of the Zillah Court and the Sudder Adalat were enjoined to apply the Hindu Law to Hindus and the Muhammadan Law to Muhammadans and "in cases for which no specific rule may exist the Court shall act according to justice, equity and good conscience." Regulation II of 1802, section 17, and Regulation V of 1802, section 30. This provision was re-produced in Madras Civil Courts Act of 1873; and by section 16 clause (c) "in cases where no specific rule exists the Court shall act according to justice, equity and good conscience. English Judges who sat in the Company's Courts had Cauzees and Pundits to advise them on points of Muhammadan Law and Hindu Law. They naturally looked for guidance to the principles of the Common Law of England as they were familiar with that law. As well said by a famous Judge, the Common Law of England is the embodiment of common sense and in most cases the Common Law of England supplied the Judges with rules and precedence which were in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. In this manner the Common Law of England came to be considered to be the law of the land.

There is no statutory law of torts in this country, and under the Customary Law of India, suits for damages for civil wrongs were almost unknown. British Courts in India entertain suits for damages for torts and give relief according to the rules of the Common Law of England. The same may be said as regards easements and specific relief before the passing of the Easements Act and the Specific Relief Act. In enjoining the Judges in India that where there is no rule of law applicable to a particular case, they should act according to justice, equity and good conscience, the Legislature left it to them to invoke the aid of the Common Law wherever possible. By such practice of the Courts a custom has sprung up of looking to the English Common Law for guidance and precedents where there is no Customary, Hindu or Muhammadan Law or Statute Law governing the case. It is unnecessary to pursue this interesting subject further, in view of my opinion on the second question.

The second question is, granting that the Common Law of England is applicable to India, whether the Statute Law had not abrogated it so far as it is applicable to this case. Section 22 of the Police Act of 1859 empowered Police Officers to arrest without a warrant. But after the passing of the Indian Penal Code in 1860 and the Criminal Procedure Code in 1861 sections 22 to 43 were repealed by Act XVII of 1862. It is contended for the petitioners that section 21 gives power to arrest without a warrant. Section 21 lays down the duties of Police Officers. Among other things, it shall be their duty to use their best endeavours to prevent crimes, etc., and to apprehend disorderly and suspicious characters. This section does not empower them to arrest persons without a warrant. The intention of the Legislature is made quite clear by the repeal of the section 22 which gave power to the Police to arrest without a warrant; and the preamble to Act XVII of 1862 puts the matter beyond doubt. Therefore, the contention that a Police Officer is entitled to arrest without a warrant by virtue of section 21 is untenable. Under section 44 of the Act penalties are provided for neglect of duty, and that section, as the Act now stands, immediately follows section 21; and it can be safely assumed that a Police Officer is enjoined by section 21 to carry out certain duties, and his failure to do so without lawful excuse will subject him to penalties under section 44. We must, therefore, look for authority to arrest without a warrant elsewhere. The law as to arrest without warrant was first codified in sections 100, 101 and 104 and 108 of the Code of the Criminal Procedure, Act XXV of 1861, and the provisions contained in those sections have been re-produced with slight amendments in sections 54 to 57 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898. Under section 54 a Police Officer may arrest without any warrant a person concerned in a cognisable offence, any person having in his possession without lawful excuse house breaking implements, proclaimed offenders, persons in possession of stolen property, etc. Offences are classified as cognisable and non-cognisable by the Criminal Procedure Code. Cognisable offence is one in which a Police Officer may arrest a person charged or suspected of the offence without a warrant. Under section 55 an officer in charge of a Police Station may arrest (1) any person preparing to commit a cognisable offence under certain circumstances, (2) persons without ostensible means of subsistence, and (3) habitual offenders. Section 57 gives power to a Police Officer to arrest without warrant when any person in the presence of such Police Officer commits or is accused of committing a non-cognisable offence and refuses on demand by a Police Officer to give his name and residence or gives a name or residence which such officer has reason to believe to be false. Such person may be arrested without a warrant in order that his name and residence may be ascertained. The offence of being drunk and disorderly is not a cognisable offence, and a Police Officer cannot arrest the alleged offender without a warrant. He can arrest him only if he refuses to give his name and residence or gives a false name or residence. If his name or residence is known to a Police Officer, the law does not empower him to arrest such person without a warrant. In no case other than that provided by sections 45, 55 and 57 can a Police Officer arrest a person without a warrant. The law being jealous of the liberty of the subject has set wholesome bounds to the power of the Police to arrest without a warrant. The Criminal Procedure Code being a complete Code defining the powers of the Police with regard to arrest, it is not open to a Court to travel outside the Code for finding powers either for the Police or for private persons to interfere with the liberty of the subject. The provisions enacted in 1861 have not been altered though the Criminal Procedure Code has been amended and re-enacted in 1872, 1882 and 1898. In this connection, I may quote the well-known observations of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (5). In that case the question was as regards the interpretation to be placed upon section 7, sub-section (3), of the Bills of Exchange Act of 1882. The Court of Appeal relied upon the law as it existed before the Bills of Exchange Act was passed; in interpreting the section Lord Herschell observed: "I cannot bring myself to think that this is the proper way to deal with such a Statute as the Bills of Exchange Act, which was intended to be a Code of the law relating to negotiable instruments. I think the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Statute and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view."

Under certain special and local laws power is given to certain officers to arrest without a warrant for offences under these Acts. Under the Madras Salt Act, VIII of 1889, for instance, a Salt Officer may arrest without warrant a person concerned in the manufacture, sale or keeping of such contraband salt or dealing therewith. Under the Madras City Police Act, a Police Officer may arrest without warrant in certain cases.

I may also quote the words of Lord Abinger in Henderson v. Sherborne (8): "The interpretation of Statutes has always, in modern times, been highly favourable to the personal liberty of the subject, and I hope will always remain so." The liberty of the subject should not be curtailed by importing something which is not warranted by the Statute Law of the land. At the same time, it is not necessary to invoke the aid of the Common Law of England in order to justify the arrest of a person who is threatening to commit an offence against the person of an individual. The general exceptions contained in Chapter IV of the Indian Penal Code afford ample protection against threatened violence to person or mischief to property.

With due respect, I may observe that the learned Judges who decided In re Ramasami Iyar (1) need not have rested their decision on any rule of Common Law, as the (8) (1837) 2 M. & W. 236; 6 L. J. M. C. 28; M. & H. 401; 1 Jur. 152; 150 E. R. 743.

Village Magistrate arrested the complainant to prevent harm to himself and to others, and he was protected by section 81, Indian Penal Code. If a person threatens to commit an assault he can be disarmed and, if necessary, put under restraint to prevent harm to persons or to property. A private person is justified in doing an act which would prevent any harm happening to himself or to another person provided he does that act, bona fide and without unnecessary force or violence. Both the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code are complete Codes of laws regulating the rights of citizens to personal freedom; and such rights could not be curtailed by judicial decisions unless warranted by Statutes. The Common Law of England applicable to a case of arrest without warrant does not apply to India. The case of an alleged illegal arrest or wrongful confinement has to be decided according to the law as contained in the Indian Penal Code and Criminal Procedure Code. My answer to the question referred to us is, In re Ramasami Iyar (1) was rightly decided, not because the Common Law of England was applicable, but by reason of the act complained of coming within the exceptions contained in Chapter IV of the Indian Penal Code.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I have come to the same conclusion, and as the question raised is one of great importance, I desire to say a few words.

It has been argued that the Common Law of England may be applied to India in regard to power to arrest and that a Police Officer or a private citizen can exercise the power independent of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and any special or local law which by section 1 of the said Code is expressly declared not to be affected thereby. I am totally unable to accept this argument. The Code sets out in great detail circumstances in which arrests may be made and persons who may exercise the right. Provision is made for arrests not only after the commission of an offence but also with a view to prevent offences being committed and in some instances for securing the preservation of the peace. I may instance section 54, clause (2), which empowers a Police Officer to arrest without warrant any person having in his possession without lawful excuse any implement of house-breaking. Section 55, again, authorises any officer in charge of a Police Station to arrest similarly subject to certain qualifications, a person found taking precautions to conceal his presence with a view to committing an offence or any person who has no ostensible means of subsistence or any person who by repute is an habitual robber or thief. It is thus clear that the Code contains provisions in respect of arrest both for the purpose of preventing crimes and for bringing offenders to book. The subject is exhaustively dealt with, and it is impossible to hold that a power of arrest is possessed apart from and independent of the Statute Law. This is my view of the law as it stands, and I may add that as the question relates to interference with the liberty of the subject it is far more desirable on the grounds of public policy and expediency, that the right should be precisely defined and regulated by the Legislature than that it should be left to the Magistracy of the country to ascertain the law, in the words of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (5), by roaming over a vast number of authorities extracting the law by a minute critical examination of previous decisions and probably also, I may add, of the statements to be found in ancient text-books. It has been pointed out to us that the only case which so far has decided that a private citizen possesses a right of arrest apart from the Statute Law is in In re Ramasami Iyar (1). Speaking for myself, I am glad to find that there is so little authority in support of the position that such right exists. In that case the accused removed to the Police Station an individual who was very drunk and bit him in the foot and tore the sacred thread of one of the witnesses. The question arose whether the accused committed an offence of wrongful restraint under section 341 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Judges, very naturally, considered that it would be unjust to punish a person for doing an act which, in the interest of the orderly government of the society and the preservation of the peace, should be declared lawful and they justified the act with reference to the power of arrest which every individual as an ordinary member of the general public possesses, under the Common Law of England. But with great respect, it seems to me, that if their attention had been invited to certain sections of the Indian Penal Code they would probably have rested their judgment upon grounds other than that underlying their decision. Section 81 enacts that nothing is an offence if it be done without criminal intention and in good faith for the purpose of preventing or avoiding other harm to person or property. It was suggested that if a person who is under the influence of drink carries a revolver in his hand and runs amuck there must be the power to arrest him on the part of every citizen, as otherwise disastrous results may follow. But this argument ignores that any reasonable act on the part of any citizen interfering with the freedom of the drunken person is amply protected by the aforesaid section and by other sections of the Indian Penal Code. The right of private defence conferred by that Code is quite adequate to meet all reasonable requirements. By section 97 every person is given a right to defend his own body and the body of any other person, his own property as well as the property of other persons. Under sections 100 and 104, the right of private defence may be exercised when there is a reasonable apprehension of danger to life or of grievous hurt to body or of robbery or of house-breaking or commission of other serious offences. Section 100 sets out in very clear terms that the offence which occasions the exercise of the right may be an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt will be the consequence of such assault. Assault is defined by section 351 as consisting of a gesture or preparation that is likely to cause an apprehension that criminal force will be used. Section 103 similarly provides for the exercise of the right of private defence not only when the offences specified therein are committed but also when attempts to commit them are made. In my opinion, therefore, there is no need to have resort, in the circumstances such as those existed in In re Ramasami Iyar (1), to the doctrine of the Common Law that every private individual has a right to arrest. Dealing with the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, 56 and 57 Vic. Ch. 71, Cozens Hardy, M. R., in Bristol Tram- ways & Carriage Company v. Fiat Motors (9) observes:—"I rather deprecate the citation of earlier decisions such as Chanter v. Hopkins (10) or Shepherd v. Pybus (11). The object and intent of the Statute of 1893 was, no doubt, simply to codify the unwritten law applicable to the sale of goods, but in so far as there is an express statutory enactment, that alone must be looked at and must govern the rights of the parties, even though the section may to some extent have altered the prior Common Law." In an earlier case Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (5) Lord Herschell remarks: "I think the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Statute and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a Statute, intended to embody in a Code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated." I think that every word in the observations of these eminent Judges applies with great force to the subject on hand.

The learned referring Judges conclude their Order of Reference with these words: "And we accordingly refer to a Full Bench the question whether In re Ramasami Iyar (1) was correctly decided." My answer is, that the grounds of the decision are wrong though the decision itself is correct.

Wallace, J.—I agree with the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and would also with my learned brothers, call in aid section 81 of the Indian Penal Code.

Evidence of instances in which the accused has been suspected, is not evidence of general repute, nor evidence on which the Court can bind the accused over under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but such evidence may be admissible as corroborating independent evidence given of accused's reputation.

Application against an order of the District Magistrate, Sitapur, upholding an order, dated the 8th June 1922, of the Magistrate First Class, Sitapur.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order binding over the applicant to give security under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The chief plea urged on behalf of the applicant is that evidence of specific instances in which the accused was suspected has been admitted. In this connection, I may refer to what I said in the case of Raja Ram v. Emperor (1). Evidence of instances in which the accused has been suspected is certainly not evidence of general repute, nor evidence on which the Court could bind the accused over under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, but when independent evidence of the accused's reputation has been given, evidence that he has been suspected in a number of instances may in my view be admissible as corroboration. In this case I looked into the record and I find that there was sufficient evidence of general repute to justify the order which has been passed. I accordingly dismiss this application.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 133—Principal and surety—Variance in contract—Discharge of surety.

A suit to recover a sum of money was compromised on the terms that the amount in suit should be paid by the defendant by certain instalments and that meanwhile an attachment order made against the property of the defendant in the course of the suit should remain in force until the terms of the compromise had been complied with. One F became surety for the performance of the terms by the defendants. Subsequently, the Court, without the knowledge or consent of the surety, gave the defendant liberty to sell the attached property privately on certain conditions. The surety, thereupon, applied to the Court to be discharged from his obligation:

Held, (1) that the attachment order itself carried with it power in the Court to order a sale of the property attached; and that, therefore, the order giving liberty to the defendant to sell did not amount to a variance of the contract between the principal and the creditor; [p. 354, col. 1.]

(2) that in any case the order giving the defendant liberty to sell not having been acted upon, amounted at most to an agreement to vary the contract and did not amount to an actual variance of its terms; [p. 354, col. 1.]

(3) that, therefore, on neither ground could the surety claim to be discharged from his obligation. [p. 354, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The relevant facts in this case are these:—An action to enforce a debt was fixed for hearing on the 7th October 1920. On that date the parties appeared in Court together with one Fateh Muhammad, and there entered into an agreement to compromise the suit. The terms of the agreement were that the indebtedness in question should be discharged by certain instalments, and that, meanwhile, an attachment order made against the property of the defendant in the course of the suit should remain in force until the terms of the compromise had been complied with. On the same date a decree was made in accordance with this compromise and again on the same day an order was made giving the judgment-debtor liberty to sell the property attached. The property was subject to a mortgage and the order of sale provided that it should not be sold for less than the amount of the mortgage, and further ordered that the sum realised in excess of the mortgage by the sale should be lodged in Court. The only material issue of fact was, whether or not the order giving liberty to sell was made with the knowledge and approval of the surety. The judgment-creditor contends that the compromise, the order giving liberty to sell, and the decree in terms of the compromise, were recorded in the above order, and that the surety was present during the whole of the time and was fully cognisant of all that took place. The surety, on the other hand, contends that, though he was present when the compromise was entered into and when the decree was made on foot of that compromise, he was not present when the order was made giving liberty to sell and knew nothing about this order.

Upon these facts three questions arise for determination,—

(1) Was there a variance in the compromise to which the surety had subscribed?

(2) If so, was that variation made with the knowledge and consent of the surety?

(3) Has the variation the effect of discharging the surety?

So far as question (2) is concerned, the issue of fact has been inferred both in the inferior Court and before the Single Judge on appeal in favour of the surety without investigation. It would rather appear from the various orders made that the surety was cognisant of the order for liberty to sell. However, it may be assumed for the purposes of this appeal, that the surety was not so cognisant. It remains then to be considered whether the order giving liberty to sell amounts to a variance in the terms of the compromise, and, if so, whether such variance discharges the surety from all liability as from that date. The compromise decree constitutes the contract between the principal and the creditor. It is clear on the fact of the compromise decree that the surety was aware of the attachment order and approved of its continuance. The attachment order itself carries with it power in the Court to order a sale of the property attached. How, then, can it be said that a further order giving liberty to sell under the Court is a variance of the contract between the principal and the creditor?

BALKRISHNA DAJI v. COLLECTOR "BOMBAY SUBURBAN."

Even if the order giving liberty to sell did in fact alter the contractual relations between the parties as embodied in the decree, this order was never acted upon. It may at the most amount to an agreement to vary the contract, but it certainly does not amount to an actual variance of its terms. We, therefore, hold that, upon the facts of this case, as they appear before us, there has been no variance in the terms of the compromise and accordingly the surety is not entitled to be discharged.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the objections of the surety stand dismissed. The parties to pay their own costs.

Civil Extraordinary Application against an order passed by the Collector declining to refer a case under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. S. Pathar, Government Pleader, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—Certain lands situated in the District of Thana were notified for acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act. Notice was served by the Collector on Mr. P. N. Gupte, in whose name the lands stood in the Government records.

On May 5, 1920, Mr. P. N. Gupte put in a claim for compensation under section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act. Mr. B. D. Gupte, his uncle, who was present, stated that he and Mr. P. N. Gupte, his nephew, were interested in the same land.

After the award was made, Mr. B. D. Gupte wrote, on July 8, 1922, to the Salsette Development Officer stating that he was the owner of one-half of the land, and had appeared before the Collector to make a demand for compensation. He complained that, without any further intimation to him, a cheque for the full value of the land had been ordered to issue to his nephew, Mr. P. N. Gupte, and in spite of his protest made when he appeared again on June 30, the cheque was handed over to Mr. P. N. Gupte. He, therefore, made an application under section 18 that the matter might be referred to the District Judge of Thana for settling the apportionment of payment. On that letter a note was made that nothing could be done by the Collector as Mr. P. N. Gupte only had been recognised as the claimant.

On July 14, Mr. B. D. Gupte wrote that he might be furnished with a true copy of the award made in respect of the land and he was informed that the land which he said stood in the name of his late father, Daji Govind Gupte, never so stood in his name. He was also informed that no land acquired for the protection of Vehar Lake stood in the name of Daji Govind. If he referred to the land in which he claimed half a share, he knew already that the land stood in the name of Mr. P. N. Gupte.

An appeal was made to the Commissioner. In August 1922 the Commissioner for the Bombay Suburban Division replied that he was unable to ask the Collector to make a reference to the District Court as desired by him. The applicant was referred to the Civil Court.

We are now requested by the petitioner to interfere under the powers given us by section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first question that arises is, whether the Collector, acting under the powers given him by the Land Acquisition Act, is a 'Court,' and, then, if he is a 'Court,' whether it is subordinate to the High Court. What constitutes a 'Court' does not appear to have been defined by any Act of Legislature but it may be presumed that an officer to be a 'Court' must be competent to make a judicial decision. But even if the Collector is a 'Court' when an application is made to him to make a reference under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, can he be said to be subordinate to the High Court? Under section 107 of the Government of India Act each of the High Courts has superintendence over all Courts for the time being subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and may do the various things mentioned in the section. So it may be presumed, in the absence of any statutory direction to the contrary, that unless the High Court has appellate jurisdiction over a Court, that Court will not be subordinate to the High Court.

In Sayed Mohamed Husen v. City Survey Officer [(1919) Civil Extraordinary Application No. 165 of 1918, decided on July 29, 1919, by Macleod, C. J., and Heaton, J., (unreported)] this Court was asked to interfere in revision with an order passed by the City Survey Officer of Broach who has been directed to acquire certain land for the Broach Municipality. The petitioner, after an award had been made by the City Survey Officer, made an application that the case should be referred to the Court, and the City Survey Officer passed an order that the application was time-barred. The judgment of the High Court said: "The first question is whether we can interfere with the decision of the City Survey Officer under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and we are clearly of opinion that the City Survey Officer was not 'a Court' within the meaning of that section."

Again, in Bibi Sardarbibi v. The Land Acquisition Officer, Ahmedabad [(1922) Civil Extraordinary Application No. 282 of 1921, decided on April 10, 1922 by Macleod, C. J., and Shah, J., (unreported)] the petitioner prayed that the order passed by the Land Acquisition Officer on the applicant's application for making a reference to the District Court of Ahmedabad under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act should be set aside. Following the decision in the previous case, it was held that the Land Acquisition Officer was not 'a Court' within the meaning of section 115 of the Code, although it was said that if there had been any merits in the case, the Court would have expressed an opinion that the petitioner's request should be treated with some consideration at the hands of Government.

We have been referred to the decision in Parameswara Iyer v. Land Acquisition Collector, Palghat (1). In that case an application had been made to the Collector to refer the matter of compensation to the Court. An order was made on the application that the applicants did not appear to be the accredited representatives of the devaswom. The petition was, therefore, rejected. It was held that the act of the Collector in refusing to make a reference under section 19 was a judicial act. It could not be denied that the proceedings under Part III of the Land Acquisition Act which resulted in an award of the Court were judicial proceedings, and by virtue of section 54 the Court was subordinate to the High Court. Sections 18 and 19 provided for the procedure to be adopted to initiate those proceedings. Ordinarily, a proceeding is commenced in a Court of Law by the presentation of a plaint or a petition to it; but the Land Acquisition Act had adopted a somewhat different method, viz., the presentation of the application to the Collector. If the requirements of section 18 were complied with, the Collector had no option but to make the reference and, in doing so, in addition to the statement to be sent by him under section 19, clause (1), he had to attach a Schedule of the particulars of the notice served and of the statements made by the parties. It seemed clear, therefore, that the proceedings which culminated in the Court's award commenced with the filing of the application under section 18. As soon as it was filed the matter of the amount of proper compensation assumed a litigious form and became a contentious proceeding between the owner and the Collector. It followed, therefore, that if the Collector decided to reject it or passed any orders regarding it, he did so judicially and not administratively; for a judicial proceeding once commenced could not be affected by administrative action. The view that the Collector was a 'Court' seems to have been adopted, as stated by Mr. Justice Krishnan at page 235*, because it was consistent with the language and scheme of the Act, and because, if the High Court did not do so, there would be no proper and adequate remedy to prevent a misuse of power by the Land Acquisition Collector who, by adopting the simple expedient of refusing to refer, might prevent an enquiry by the Court into the correctness of his own award, at any rate in all cases arising outside the Presidency towns. The remedy by 'mandamus' under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act was available only within the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts and not outside it.

With all due respect, I cannot agree with this reasoning. I can quite understand that if the Collector refuses to do an act which is incumbent upon him under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, Part III, there should be some remedy available to the party aggrieved. But it does not follow that the refusal of the Collector to his duty is a judicial act, or that, even if it is a judicial act, it is a judicial act of a Court subordinate to the High Court. In this case I admit there seem to have been no reasonable grounds for the refusal of the Collector, or the Commissioner to refer to the Court the question of the apportionment of the compensation awarded, though, at the same time, there is nothing to prevent the present petitioner filing a suit against his nephew for the division of the compensation money. As far as I can see, the High Court has not been given the power to interfere with the proceedings of the Collector, so that if he refuses to do what seems incumbent upon him under the provisions of section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, we cannot direct him to make a reference, and the proper remedy is either for the Legislature to give us powers of superintendence over the Collector's proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, or for the Government to draw the attention of their officers to the provisions of the Act, and lay down rules for their guidance, if they have not already done so.

No doubt, as the expression "person interested" in section 3 (b) of the Land Acquisition Act includes "all persons claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of the acquisition of land under this Act," and as, under section 18, clause (1), "any person interested who has not accepted the award may, by written application to the Collector, require that the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court, whether his objection be to the measurement of the land, the amount of the compensation, the persons to whom it is payable, or the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested," the Collector, provided he does not consider the application as time-barred, is bound to make a reference. But if he fails in the duty imposed upon him by that section, in my opinion, this Court has no power to direct him to perform it. I think, therefore, that the Rule must be discharged with costs.

Crump, J.—The question for our decision in this case is, whether we have power to interfere with an order of the Collector refusing to refer to the Court the question of apportionment of compensation. That the petitioner here was a person interested cannot be denied, for he was a person claiming an interest in compensation made on account of the acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act, and he, therefore, fell within the definition of section 3 (b).

SARUP SINGH V. PAL SINGH.

The real question is, whether the Collector refusing to make a reference under section 18 is a 'Court,' and as such subject to our powers of revision or superintendence. Now, it is clear from the decision in Ezra v. Secretary of State for India (2) that the functions of the Collector in making an award are administrative and not judicial. In that case the Lordships of the Privy Council say (page 425):—

"The objection is based and depends upon the theory that the enquiry by the Collector was a judicial proceeding, and that the rules of judicial proceedings apply. The argument of the appellant starts from the word 'award' (which is used to describe the conclusion of the Collector), and has nothing else to support it. When the sections relating to this matter are read together, it will be found that the proceedings resulting in this 'award' are administrative and not judicial; that the 'award' in which the enquiry results is merely a decision (binding only on the Collector) as to what sum shall be tendered to the owner of the land; and that, if the judicial ascertainment of value is desired by the owner, he can obtain it by requiring the matter to be referred by the Collector to the Court. The sections directly relevant (besides the 9th already set out are) the 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 18th."

It is clear, therefore, that, up to the time when the petitioner made his written application to the Collector requiring the matter to be referred the determination of the Court, the Collector was acting administratively only, and speaking for myself I can find nothing in sections 18 and 19 to lead me to hold that the Collector at that stage of the proceedings became 'a Court.' In the absence of any definition of 'Court,' the question would be whether the Collector was clothed with any judicial functions; that is to say, had he power to hear and determine any question between conflicting parties?

Now, apart from the power to decide the question of limitation, which is dealt with by the proviso to section 18, a matter with which we are not concerned with the present case, all that the Collector had to do was, on receipt of the application, to take the steps set out in section 19. I cannot say that he had power to determine anything. He was bound to proceed, and as his refusal to proceed was contrary to the plain duty imposed upon him by the Statute, it seems to me a contradiction in terms to say that in refusing to do that which he was bound to do he was acting judicially.

These, shortly, are the reasons for which I hold that the Collector acting under section 18 of the Act cannot be held to be 'a Court,' and if that is so, it necessarily follows that we have no power to interfere with his order in this case. That there is a hardship is plain. But that is not, in my opinion, a reason for placing upon the words of the Statute an interpretation which they do not reasonably bear. That is a matter for consideration of the Executive Government or for the Legislature, and one with which we have no concern. I agree, therefore, that this Rule should be discharged with costs.

Mr. B. D. Qureshi, for Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Kahan Chand for Pandit Bindra Ban, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs-respondents sued for possession of 142 kanals 8 marlas of land sold by their grandfather, Dula Singh, to Jai Singh, Daya Singh and Sarup Singh on the 9th June 1887. The present defendants-appellants are the representatives-in-interest of the original vendees. Dula Singh died two or three years before the Punjab Act, I of 1900, came into force. Daswandha Singh, plaintiff's father, did not challenge the alienation and is said not to have been heard of for ten years before the institution of the suit. Plaintiffs asked the Court to presume his death as they would have no locus standi to sue for possession were he still alive. Daswandha Singh's death has been presumed and it was held by the District Judge that, out of the consideration, only Rs. 593 were raised for necessity. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim upon payment of the said sum. The defendants have filed a second appeal to this Court and it is contended on their behalf that the suit is barred by time.

Mr. Qureshi began his arguments by urging that Punjab Act I of 1900 governed the case. It was, however, held in Sahib Dad v. Rahmat (1) that the Punjab Limitation Act, I of 1900, does not affect any prescriptive right or title which had accrued or been acquired before the Act came into operation. Now, under the old law plaintiff's father had 12 years from the date of Dula Singh's death within which to sue for possession of the land in suit. According to the Full Bench ruling, therefore, as Act I of 1900 was passed subsequent to his death it did not affect his right to sue within 12 years which had accrued to him before the Act came into operation. This was followed in Tulsi v. Madho Ram (2) and again in the case of Arur Singh v. Solakhan Singh (3). We, therefore, hold that the present suit is governed by the Indian Limitation Act and not by Punjab Act, I of 1900.

It was next contended by Mr. Qureshi that time having begun to run against plaintiff's father upon the death of Dula Singh the plaintiff's suit is barred, having been instituted more than 12 years after the death of the alienor. To this respondents' Counsel replies by quoting Sundar v. Salig Ram (4) in which it was held, following the principle underlying Roda v. Harnam (5), that the claim was not barred under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, 1908, inasmuch as the plaintiff's right to sue for possession was not derived from or through B (the nearest reversioner), and, consequently, the defendant's possession, though adverse to B, could not be adverse to the plaintiffs until after his death, when their right to possession accrued. Now, the plaintiffs' right to possession did not accrue until the death of their father, and it is not contended that he died more than 12 years before the institution of the suit. The case reported as Arur Singh v. Solakhan Singh (3) is exactly on all fours with the present case.

The Judges in their judgment in that case referred to the Full Bench decision reported as Sundar v. Salig Ram (4) wherein it was pointed out that a collateral governed by the Customary Law of the Punjab does not derive his right to sue from or through his father but from or through the common ancestor who owned the land. The plaintiffs in the present case, therefore, did not derive their right to sue from or through their father, Daswandha Singh, but from or through Dula Singh who alienated the land. Under these circumstances, we are clear that the possession of the defendants-appellants did not become adverse to them until the death of their father. As pointed out in Arur Singh v. Solakhan Singh (3), the terminus a quo under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act is the date when the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiff. We, therefore, hold that the present suit is within time.

Mr. Qureshi also sought to contest the finding as to the question of necessity arrived at by the District Judge, but as it was clearly one of fact we did not allow him to argue it.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

GAJADHAR PRASAD SAHU—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Encumbrance—Lease, whether encumbrance.

Apart from dealings such as mortgages, which create a charge upon land, there are other dealings which amount to an encumbrance. Anything which interferes with the unrestricted rights of the proprietor is an encumbrance, for instance, the granting of a lease of zerai lands. A lease of such lands granted to an occupier in circumstances which would give him a right of occupancy over the land, amounts to an encumbrance. [p. 360, col. 2; p. 361, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 2nd May 1921, passed in Execution Case No. 13 of 1920.

Messrs. K. Sahai, S. C. Mitter and S. S. Bose, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Ahmed and R. T. N. Sahai, for the Respondent.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated the 2nd May 1921, dismissing the appellant's application for execution of a decree. The suit was instituted by the appellant Babu Mahadeo Prasad Sahu against the respondent Gajadhar Prasad Sahu, his uncle, and others claiming partition of family property. The decree of which execution is sought was passed on the 24th July 1908 and was the result of a compromise between the parties. In the present execution case various points were raised and determined by the learned Judge against the appellant. In order to understand how these points arise it is necessary, shortly, to state the history of the case. In the year 1901 it appears that a previous suit for partition was instituted by the appellant against the same defendants or their predecessors and in that suit a compromise was arrived at and a decree was passed in April 1901 dividing the family property in the terms of the compromise. Subsequently, the appellant sued the respondent and other parties claiming to set aside the compromise and have a fresh partition. The suit was decreed in the lower Court; there was an appeal and in the Appellate Court, after a further compromise, a decree was passed, as I have already said, on the 24th July 1908. The question for determination in that appeal depends principally upon the construction of the compromise decree passed on the 24th July 1908 in the High Court. Some of the properties which had been awarded to the appellant under the previous decree were exchanged for properties which had been awarded by that decree to the respondent Gajadhar Prasad Sahu, each of them exchanging the properties which they had received by the previous decree. Under the third clause of the decree it was provided that, instead of certain properties mentioned in Schedule I, part 1, of the present decree, which had been allotted to the plaintiff under the decree of 1901 the properties mentioned in Schedule III, part 1, of the present decree with all outstanding and accruing rents and profits except the amount covered by the decrees which the defendant Gajadhar had already obtained against any tenant be allotted to the plaintiff. Then farther provision is made with respect to other properties with which we are not concerned and clause 4 says that the interchange of the properties between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1, that is to say, the present appellant and the respondent, be subject to the following condition, that any holdings purchased from raiyats on account of arrears of rent or other dues to remain with the parties who would themselves be entitled to the villages according to this decree subject to one party paying to the other the purchase-money as stated in the sale certificates; that the interchange of allotments be regarded to have taken place from the 1st Assar of the current Fasli year 1315; (that is, June, 1908) agreeing with the 1st Assar 1316 of the agricultural year; that the village papers, kabuliyats, etc., of the properties exchanged between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 be delivered to each other within 3 months of the date of the decree. Then the 5th clause provides for the delivery of possession of the interchanged properties and holdings within two weeks from the date of the decree. The 7th clause which is the only other that we have been referred to provides that if the plaintiff or the defendant No. 1 has sold at a time when he was in possession under the decree of the 17th April 1901 any of the said properties respectively allotted to him he has to pay to the other party the consideration money received by such sale and if any property had been mortgaged or otherwise encumbered the party mortgaging or encumbering it do redeem the property or otherwise indemnify the other party for any loss that the latter may sustain.

The first question which arises is, as to the properties mentioned in Schedules I, 2 and 3 of the plaintiff's petition. Those mentioned in the First Schedule are zerait lands which between the time of the decree of 1901 and the decree in the present suit in 1908 were granted as brahmottar by the respondent Gajadhar Prasad to a Kabiraj Jaisri Bhat Misra in consideration of certain medical services rendered by him to the respondent's family. That was granted rent-free. The property in the Second Schedule was zerait lands which had been permanently settled by the respondent under patta and kabuliyat with certain tenants and the property mentioned in the Third Schedule was zerait lands settled by the respondents under Adhkati receipts and jamabandi situated within certain of the villages which had to be handed over to the appellant. The question with regard to these properties is, whether the disposition of them made by the respondent was an encumbrance in respect of which, under the terms of the decree which I have read, there would be a liability upon the respondent to indemnify the appellant. The learned Judge took the view that the mere grant of lands rent-free or the grant of the landlord's zerait land to a tenant for the purpose of cultivation could not be regarded in the nature of an encumbrance. In my opinion, in arriving at this decision, he was wrong. In the ordinary acceptation of the term, it seems to me that, apart from mere dealings such as mortgages which create a charge upon the land, you may well have other dealings which amount to an encumbrance. Anything, in my opinion, which interferes with the unresstricted rights of the proprietors as they then existed would be an encumbrance upon the land, even the granting of a lease of zerai lands, that is to say, the lands which the landlord is entitled to hold in direct possession and to cultivate for his own purposes. A lease of such lands granted to an occupier in circumstances which would give him a right of occupancy over the land would, in my opinion, amount to an encumbrance. Therefore, in so far as the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the properties mentioned in Schedules 1, 2 and 3 had not been encumbered I think he was wrong. Upon this part of the appeal the case must go back to him to determine the amount which the appellant is entitled to recover from the respondent as compensation or indemnity for the encumbrances created. That is a question of fact which will depend upon the evidence produced.

The next point which was raised before us was, that the respondent had cut down certain trees standing upon the villages which had to be transferred to the appellants. The learned Judge considered that, even if there had been a breach of the terms of the compromise, or the implied terms of the compromise, by reason of the cutting down of the trees, that was not a matter in respect of which the appellant could claim any relief in execution of the decree but he would have to bring a separate action in order to enforce his claim; in my opinion, in arriving at that decision, he was wrong, but the appellant has claimed compensation not only for any trees which may have been cut down after the date of the decree but also for all those which were cut down between the date of the first decree in 1901 and the date of the present decree. His right to compensation depends again upon the terms of the decree itself. It is perfectly clear, to my mind, that the appellant has no right to any compensation for trees which may have been cut down before the date of the present decree. Up to that time the parties knew exactly what the condition of the properties was. The appellant was claiming these particular properties in lieu of those which had been awarded to him under the previous decree and he cannot complain if those properties turn out eventually to have less trees upon them than he imagined they had at the date when the decree was passed. But the decree having once been passed the respondent was bound under the terms thereof to hand over property as it then existed in accordance with the terms of the decree to the appellant and if, before doing, so he chose to cut down trees and appropriate them to his own use, then he was acting in breach of the obligation he was under by reason of the decree and was in fact committing a breach of trust. From that time he was only in possession of the property in a fiduciary capacity and for the purpose of handing it over to the appellant. I think, therefore, that, in so far as it can be shewn that any trees were cut down after the time when the appellant became entitled to possession of the properties, the respondent will have to pay their value. I may point out, however, that in the petition no distinction is made between the trees which were cut down before the date of the decree and those which were cut down afterwards. Nor, indeed, is it in terms alleged that any of the trees were cut down after the date of the decree. What is claimed is a lump sum in respect of trees according to the different villages. I think that the learned Judge, when this case goes back to him, should insist upon the appellant giving full particulars, as far as he is able, of the trees which he alleges were cut down since the date of the decree, their value and their situation, that is to say, the villages in which they are alleged to have been. The respondent will then be in a position to know, exactly, what case he has to meet, whereas under Schedule IV, as it at present appears, it would be impossible for him to do so. Any particulars which the respondents may require with regard to the nature and situation of these trees, I also think ought to be furnished by the appellant.

The next point relates to the recovery of a sum of money amounting to Rs. 2,055 the value of a 5 annas 6 gandas share in Yaqubpur, one of the villages which had to be handed over to the appellant. The appellant contends that, although he recovered a sum of Rs. 320 in a previous execution as the sale-proceeds of this village in accordance with his rights under the decree, in fact he is entitled altogether in respect of that village to a sum of Rs. 2,375, after giving credit for that which he has already received. The position with regard to this village is somewhat peculiar. It appears that, between the date of the previous decree and the date of the present decree, that village was sold by the respondent in execution of a money-decree obtained against him by Abdul Rahman for a sum of Rs. 320. That sale took place on the 22nd April 1908 very shortly before the decree was passed. When the appellant applied for execution of the decree in 1908 he raised the point that this sale to Abdur Rahman, the auction-purchaser who held a decree against the respondent, was a purely collusive affair, that Abdur Rahman never in fact had any legal claim against the respondent, that the suit was allowed to go by default and that the property was sold to Abdur Rahman merely as the creature of the respondent, and that, although the sum of Rs. 320 was named as the sale price, in fact the property never passed out of the possession of the respondent although nominally Abdur Rahman was put in possession. It appeared further that on some day in August of the same year the purchaser sold the property to one Shamsuddin for a sum of Rs. 367-8-0. The appellants' contention was that this also was merely another attempt on the part of Gajadhar to defeat the appellants' claim by pretending to have the property transferred not only once but a second time from the original purchaser to a third party, whereas, in truth, it remained all along the property of the respondent. When this matter was raised before the learned Judge in execution, he, on the 24th September, 1908, said that the appellant must either accept the purchase-money which was admittedly Rs. 320 recovered by the respondent, or he must claim and prove that the property had never in fact passed out of the possession of the respondent. What action the appellant actually took is not very clear, but we do know that on the 4th March 1909, in the same execution proceedings, he put in a petition claiming that possession of this property, 5-annas 6 gandas share in Yaqubpur, should be given to him. That application was apparently refused, the learned Judge of the Executing Court considering that the petition, as he stated thereon, had no connection with the execution case. What his reasons for arriving at that conclusion were one cannot, from the materials before us, positively state. It may be that he thought that the appellant was only entitled to get the actual sale-proceeds. It may be that he thought the appellant could not in that execution case ask that the property which had been sold should be handed over to him but must first seek to have the sale set aside or to pursue the property in the hands of the purchasers. However that may be, no further action was taken upon the decision of the learned Judge of the Executing Court. There was no appeal from his decision, and there the matter rested until the 31st March 1911 when the decree-holder took out of Court the sum of Rs. 320 which had been paid in as the purchase price of this property. It is said that he took it out of Court under protest but we have not seen any document which shows that that was so. However that may be, whether he took it under protest or not, the fact remains that the decision of the Court having been against him, he subsequently took no action to try and get that decision set aside and he did eventually take out this sum of Rs. 320. In the present application he is asking that this matter should be re-opened and he alleges, and it is not disputed that, on the 9th November 1911, Shamsuddin, the purchaser from Abdur Rahman, sold this very property back again to Gajadhar for a sum of Rs. 400. The appellant again says that this was a purely fictitious transaction, Gajadhar having been the owner all along, and that, subsequently, in August 1918, Gajadhar sold this property, this time apparently a genuine transaction, for Rs. 2,375. The appellant in his present petition claims that the property never really having passed out of the hands of Gajadhar he was entitled to it under the decree and that that property or, at all events, its real value which he says was Rs. 2,375, should be handed over to him. It seems to me that the appellant has put it out of his power to ask us now to re-open this question. The matter was one which was sub judice in the year 1908. It was decided against the appellant and he accepted that decision.

MAHADEO PRASAD SAHU V. GAJADHAR PRASAD SAHU.

He was given the option either of accepting the sale-proceeds or of proving that the sale in fact was merely a bogus transaction. He eventually elected to accept the sale-proceeds and I do not think that it makes his case any better, even if it be a fact as he states, that he took the sale-proceeds out under protest. He elected the course that he would pursue and he cannot afterwards turn round, merely because Gajadhar has bought back the property and sold it for a greater price, and be heard to say that the matter should now be re-opened. So far as this question is concerned, I think that the learned Judge's decision, although he arrived at it upon a different consideration, must be upheld.

The next point for our consideration is one which arises under Schedule 6 of the application and relates to the arrears of rent which were due at the time when the decree was passed. It will be remembered that by the terms of the decree the properties to which the appellant was entitled were to be handed over with all outstanding and accruing rents and profits except the amounts covered by decrees which the respondents had already obtained against the tenants, and delivery of possession was to be given within two weeks. The appellant's case is that the arrears of rent due at that time were something over Rs. 21,000, that the actual rents which appeared to have been still outstanding and not recovered at the date when he got possession were Rs. 10,680 leaving a balance of something over Rs. 10,500. He, therefore, claims that the respondent should refund him this amount. He alleges in his petition that, soon after the passing of the decree in the High Court, the respondent fraudulently and illegally got a considerable amount of the arrears of rent realised from the tenants of the villages which were allotted to the appellant and after remitting portions of the rent got entries made ante-dated in the Staha in respect of the same and issued receipts, also ante-dated, with the result that the actual amount of rent shown to be still outstanding at the date of the decree was only roughly about half of what it ought to be. Of course, if the appellant could make out this case he will undoubtedly be entitled to recover the balance from the respondent to the extent to which the respondent has himself improperly collected these rents. When I say improperly collected the rents, what I mean is, not that he was not entitled to collect but that if he did he must hold them as trustee for the benefit of the appellant. There was only a short time between the date of the decree and the actual date when the appellant got possession and whether it was necessary to collect any rents during that time for the purpose of saving limitation or for any other reason we do not know nor is it material. But if the appellant can make out his case then it is quite clear that any arrears of rent which were collected in fact during that period must be handed over to the appellant. It was contended again with regard to this part of the case that the question was not one which could be dealt with in this execution but that a fresh suit must be brought to establish the appellant's claim. I am unable to accept this view. It seems to me that, under the decree itself, the arrears of rent were clearly due to the appellant and if the land was handed over, the rent having been already collected, then the respondent who collected them is clearly responsible under the decree to hand them over to the appellant.

A further point with regard to this part of the case was taken, namely, that in stating the actual amount which was due the appellant in his application for execution did not properly state how the amount of arrears of rent improperly collected was made up. This is quite true. The manner in which he has done it is certainly no basis upon which a decision upon this part of the case can be based. Nor does it afford the Court any assistance in arriving at the proper amount, if any, which is due under this head. What the appellant has done is this. He says in respect to the properties which I had to exchange with you, the respondent, there was a sum of a little over Rs. 21,000 due for arrears of rent. You told me that the arrears of rent of the property which you had to hand over to me were about the same sum. Therefore, he puts down that sum as the proper sum to be received. He deducts the arrears which in fact had been left uncollected, namely, Rs. 10,680 which shows a balance of Rs. 10,554 and this he says is the sum due. That, of course, is not the proper way to arrive at it. What the appellant will have to show will be the actual amount that he has collected for arrears since he got possession of the property, that is to say, arrears due at the date of the decree and the actual amount of arrears which were, in fact, then due and which have been improperly collected by the respondent.

In my opinion the appeal must be allowed, the decision of the District Judge is set aside except as to the question arising under Schedule V with regard to Mauza Yaqubpur and the case will be sent back to the lower Court to dispose of this application for execution after enquiry into the evidence in accordance with the directions which appear in this judgment. I ought to add that it will be open to the judgment-debtor to raise any of the points which he raised in his objection and which have not already been disposed of in this appeal. There was also a question raised as to the Court-fee, but that does not seem to us to arise at the present juncture. I think that the appellant is entitled to his costs of this appeal to the extent to which he has succeeded.

Jwala Prasad, J.—I agree to the order proposed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 22—Pre-emption, suit for—One of several vendees impleaded after expiry of limitation, effect of.

In a suit for pre-emption one of several vendees was, owing to the negligence and carelessness of the plaintiff's next friend, not impleaded as defendant till after the expiry of the period of limitation for the suit:

Held, that the suit had become barred by time and the mere fact that the plaintiff was a minor was no ground for condoning the negligence and carelessness of his next friend. [p. 365, col. 2.]

Second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 25th January 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhelum, dated the 27th April 1921.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. D. Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 11th November 1919 one Hashmat Khan sold 53 kanals 19 marlas including his share in the shamilât and his rights in a further 1 kanal 18 marlas of shamilat to Niaz Ali Khan and five others, including a minor named Riasat Khan, son of Faiz Talib Khan. The deed was duly registered. On the 27th August 1920 a minor named Muhammad Fazil, nephew of Hashmat Khan, vendor, acting through his mother, Musammât Gauhar Begam, instituted a suit claiming possession of the land sold by Hashmat Khan by pre-emption. The first hearing of the case took place on the 6th November 1920 when it was found that the defendants had not been served. The plaintiff was told to furnish the necessary addresses and on the same date filed in an application giving particulars. In this application the name of Riasat Khan, son of Faiz Talib Khan, was mentioned. On the 10th December 1920 the defendants appeared and pointed out that Riasat

MOTILAL SATYANARAYAN v. HARNARAYAN PREMSUKH.

Khan was one of the vendees but had not been impleaded in the plaint. In spite of this omission having been brought to the notice of the plaintiff, no steps were taken to bring Riasat Khan on to the record until the 24th January 1921, when the Court returned the plaint for amendment owing to the omission of Riasat Khan's name, directing the plaintiff to cause the necessary amendment to be made. Riasat Khan's name was entered in the plaint on the same day.

It should be noted that in the original plaint amongst the defendants' names was that of Feroz Khan, son of Imam Ali Khan, a person who was not a vendee and had nothing whatever to do with the case. On the 4th January 1921 an application was made on behalf of the plaintiff asking that his name be struck off, yet no steps were taken in regard to Riasat Khan. The defendants pleaded that, inasmuch as Riasat Khan had been impleaded after the expiry of one year from the date of sale, the suit was barred by limitation. The Trial Court held that the omission of Riasat Khan's name was due to a mistake but that this did not excuse the plaintiff, and the suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Court and the learned District Judge, while recognizing the extreme carelessness of the plaintiff's next friend, considered that the mistake made should be condoned. He, therefore, accepted the appeal and remanded the case for trial on the merits. Against this order of remand this second appeal has been preferred on behalf of the vendees-defendants through Mr. Anant Ram and I have heard Mr. Kuresbi on behalf of the plaintiff.

It has been contended by Mr. Kureshi that, as a matter of fact, Riasat Khan's name (should be regarded as having been entered in the plaint from the outset, inasmuch as instead of his name that of Feroz Khan was inadvertently entered. Seeing that the fathers of these two persons are different and that Feroz Khan was a major while Riasat Khan was a minor this contention has, in my opinion, no force.

It was next contended that it was not necessary under the present Code to enter the names of all persons against whom a relief is claimed in a plaint. Here, again, I am unable to agree.

Next, it was urged that Riasat Khan had been added by order of the Court and that, therefore, on the authority of Fakera Pasban v. Bibi Azimunnissa (1), no question of limitation arose. I am unable to agree that the name of Riasat Khan was added at the instance of the Court. It seems to me that the circumstances disclose extreme carelessness on the part of the plaintiff's next friend and advisers. The deed was a registered one and the suit was not filed for some nine months after its execution. It may be considered a little hard to penalise a minor plaintiff for the gross neglect of his guardian. At the same time, it has to be borne in mind that Riasat Khan, one of the vendees, is also a minor and that his interests have also to be considered. By the negligence disclosed in this case this minor, Riasat Khan, has secured a valuable right, and I am unable to see any justification to deprive him of that right for the simple reason that the plaintiff in the case is also a minor. It has not been contended that Art. 10 of the Limitation Act did not apply.

I accordingly accept this appeal and, setting aside the order of remand, restore the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

MOTILAL SATYANARAYAN V. HARNARAYAN PREMSUKH.

An action for damages for malicious prosecution being personal to the plaintiff does not survive beyond his lifetime, and the action, so far as it relates to the expense incurred by the deceased plaintiff in defending himself against the prosecution, cannot be transmitted to his personal representatives. Second appeal against the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Dhulia, in Suit No. 417 of 1920.

Mr. B. G. Rao, for the Appellant.—My Lord, the lower Court is wrong in rejecting the application of the heirs of the deceased plaintiff, to bring them on record. I submit, the right to sue for malicious prosecution does survive to the heirs within the meaning of O. XXII, r. 1 of the Code of the Civil Procedure. The law on the subject is codified in section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act. The suit for damages for malicious prosecution falls within the general words of the section and not within the exception. The exception excludes the cases of assault, defamation and the other personal injuries not causing the death of the party. The expression "personal injury" refers to physical or bodily injury only and this only is the class of injuries connected by that expression. This view of the interpretation is fortified by the illustration to the section. To bring the case of malicious prosecution under the exception is to strain the language of the section.

[Macleod, C. J.—How is assault defined in the Penal Code?]

The word 'assault' may be taken in its ordinary and natural acceptance of the sense, meaning personal and physical injury. I rely upon the case in Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (1).

[Cramp, J.—The Full Bench decision in Rustomji Dorabji v. Nurse (2) is against your contention.]

(2) 62 Ind. Cas. 260; 44 M. 357; 40 M. L. J. 173; (1921) M. W. N. 121; 29 M. L. T. 121; 14 L. W. 200 (F. B.).

Second point I wish to urge before your Lordships is this. Conceding that the action does not survive to the heirs, according to the Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court, the action to sue for pecuniary loss caused to the estate of the deceased plaintiff does survive. The plaintiff has to defend himself against the criminal prosecution and had to incur heavy expenses. The heirs are at least entitled to this portion of the relief. To that extent the injury had been caused to the estates and the cause of action survives. I rely upon the underlying principle in Twycross v. Grant (3).

Mr. B. J. Desai (with him Mr. H. B. Gummaste), for the Respondents—The second point urged by Mr. Rao is considered in London v. London Road Car Company (4). These are losses merely incident to the personal injuries. As to Twycross v. Grant (3) it is not an action for injuries to the person but for pecuniary damage arising from a wrongful act of another kind.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Satyanarayan Dhanjishet brought a suit against the defendants to recover damages for malicious prosecution. Before the suit came on for hearing the plaintiff died and his heirs sought to continue the action. Their application to be placed on record as heirs of the original plaintiff was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge; and the appellants in their arguments before us rely mainly on the decision in Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), where it was held by a Full Bench that a suit for malicious prosecution falls within the general words of section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act, and not within any of the exceptions.

In Rustomji Dorabji v. Nurse (2) the learned Judges dissented from the decision in Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), holding that "the expression 'personal injuries not causing the death of the party' in section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act, does not mean injuries to the body merely but all injuries which do not necessarily cause damage to the estate of the person wronged."

(3) (1878) 4 C. P. D. 40 at p. 51; 48 L. J. C. P. 1; 39 L. T. 618; 27 W. R. 87.

We prefer to agree with that decision, as otherwise we would have to read into the section the words "physical" or "to the body." It has been argued that the expression "other personal injuries" must refer to injuries ejusdem generis as the injuries referred to in the preceding sentences, namely, "assault" as defined in the Indian Penal Code. When we refer to section 351 for the definition of the word "assault" in the Indian Penal Code, we find that the offence of assault, does not involve physical injury, but merely a threat to cause physical injury. Therefore, the exception includes cause of action for the defamation and assault neither of which cause physical injury; and then includes "all other personal injuries" except those which cause the death of the party. We think the intention of the section was to express in a statutory form the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona. Accordingly, an action for malicious prosecution does not survive beyond the lifetime of the plaintiff.

But it was argued, on the strength of the decision in Twycross v. Grant (3), that the action so far as it related to the expenses incurred by the deceased plaintiff in defending himself against a prosecution could be transmitted to the personal representatives. That case was considered in London v. London Road Car Company (4) which was a case against a defendant for damages for personal injuries caused by an accident. The plaintiff had claimed as consequential damages £ 75 for loss of earnings, and various sums for medical expenses. The plaintiff died before the action was heard. An application had been made on the part of the administratrix, asking to be allowed to continue the action for these parts of the claim, which was refused by the Judge at Chambers. In appeal from that order Lord Coleridge said: "The action was for personal injuries—that is for injuries to the person—and the heads of damage relied upon (except as to the damage to the coat) resulted directly from these personal injuries. As to Twycross v. Grant (3), it was not an action for injuries to the person, but for pecuniary damage arising from wrongful acts of another nature. No case showed that an action for personal injuries causing pecuniary loss could be continued after the death of the party injured; and the case of Pulling v. Great Eastern Railway Company (5) showed just the contrary."

In this case the injury caused to the plaintiff by wrongful prosecution was personal just as much as if he had been injured in Railway accident. Consequently, his representatives cannot continue the action to recover the pecuniary loss which he suffered owing to his having had to defend himself against the prosecution. We think, therefore, the decision of the Court below was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HARNAM V. GANPAT.

JUDGMENT.—One Neki was adjudicated an insolvent, and when his property came to be dealt with a certain enclosure was attached with a view to sale. An objection was presented by Harnam on the 8th August 1919, and dismissed the same day. The enclosure was sold on the 25th January 1920, and an objection was put in by the same man Harnam on 19th January 1920, which was dismissed by an order of the 10th May 1920. On 15th May 1920, Harnam and two others instituted the present suit stating their cause of action to be the order of the 10th May 1920, and prayed for a declaration that the property belonged to them. This suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that O. XXI, r. 92, barred such a suit and that their only remedy, or rather the only remedy of Harnam, was by way of appeal. Harnam appealed to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal, holding that under O. XXI, r. 92 (3) the suit did not lie, and he also pointed out that the question of whether Hardu or Kanhaya could bring the suit was not before him inasmuch as Harnam only had appealed to him. From this order the present appeal has been lodged and the position taken up by Counsel is that the chapter of the Civil Procedure Code regarding execution does not apply to insolvency proceedings and that, if it does, his suit would have been within time had he shown the dismissal of his application during attachment as the cause of action instead of the dismissal of the application lodged subsequent to the auction-sale. The respondent on the other side contends that the suit as lodged must be disposed of, that the Code applies in virtue of section 47 of Act III of 1907, and that, any how, the suit should now be dismissed because the auction-purchaser has not been impleaded. The appellant relies mainly upon a recent ruling Ram Piyara v. Bhana Mal (1) in which the question of the competency of a regular suit to establish title after attachment in insolvency was decided. It was apparently not even urged that the Code of Civil Procedure governed the proceedings under the Insolvency Act and the only possibilities which were contemplated were that such proceedings were governed by the Provincial Insolvency Act or the Punjab Laws Act. Had it been possible to apply the Code of Civil Procedure no difficulty would have arisen in that case or in the many cases decided by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts on the same point, for r. 63 would have made it quite clear that the suit did lie. It is, therefore, I think, clearly established that the Code does not apply and both the lower Courts have wrongly decided that the suit is barred by r. 92. Even if the suit as instituted were barred and the provisions of the Code applied it would be very arguable under the circumstances, the plaintiff being clearly entitled under r. 63 to prove his title as the year of limitation has not as yet expired, whether the mere fact that he made his cause of action the second order of dismissal and not the first should debar him from obtaining any relief.

Finding, therefore, that the suit lies I accept the appeal and return the case for decision on the merits. The question of whether the auction-purchaser is to be impleaded or can be impleaded at this stage will have to be decided as soon as it is raised in the lower Court.

The costs will follow the result, and the order of remand being under O. XII, r. 23 the stamp on appeal will be refunded.

Appeal accepted;

Where, in the case of a division of property among members of a Hindu joint family, there is evidence sufficient to show that the parties intended to sever, any property which is not divided by metes and bounds will be considered to be held by them as tenants-in-common, unless there is an express agreement between the parties that they should treat that property as belonging to them as joint tenants. They will then be joint tenants, not as members of the joint family which no longer exists, but under a special agreement made after the severance.

Second appeal against the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., Nasik, in Appeal No. 44 of 1921.

Mr. D. A. Tulzapurkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. R. Patwardhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to obtain possession of the properties described in paragraph 1 of the plaint and for an injunction against the defendants, alleging that the lands were the ancestral property of her deceased husband, Nana, and his brothers, defendants No. 1 and 2, that they were divided after the family became separate and enjoyed separately by each member.

The defendants contended that the lands were ancestral and jointly acquired; that they were in possession, and that there had been no partition as alleged by the plaintiff. It has been proved that there was a division of the greater part of the family property, and also that the three brothers commenced to live separate. That would indicate an intention of the members of the family to sever in interest. In Ramalinga Annavi v. Narayana Annavi (1) their Lordships said, after expressing disapproval of the argument that the joint family status was not dis-severed until a decree for partition was passed, "This view is opposed to the laws laid down in the case of Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (2), where it was held expressly, that under the Law of the Mitakshara to which the parties... are subject, an unambiguous and definite intimation of intention on the part of one member of the family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty has the effect of creating a division of the interest which, until then, he had held in jointness. This intention was clearly intimated to the co-partners when the plaintiff Narayan served on them the notice Exhibit II, on July 30th 1909. That notice effected a separation so far as his branch of the family was concerned, and no obligation rested on the joint family in respect of his sons' marriages."

If, then, a mere notice served upon the rest of the family by one of the members is sufficient to create a severance of interest, it is obvious in this case, that the evidence which is referred to by the learned Appellate Judge was sufficient to put an end to the joint family status. The fact then that two lands were left undivided would not affect the interests of the parties in these lands which would thenceforth be held by them as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants.

We have been referred to the decision in Gaurishankar v. Atmaram (3) where the Chief Justice said: "The circumstance that there had been a partition in 1876-77 would not, in the absence of any special agreement between the parties, alter their rights as to the property still undivided, as to which they would continue to stand to one another in the relation of members of an undivided Hindu family, and no such agreement amounting to a partition of the fields in question is alleged by the plaintiffs" with all respect, I should say that the effect of the decision in that case was, undoubtedly undermined by the decision of the Privy Council to which I have just referred. Once there is evidence sufficient to satisfy the Court that the parties intended to sever when the joint family status is put an end to, and with regard to, any of the property which had hitherto been joint and has not been divided by metes and bounds there will have to be an express agreement between the parties that they should treat that property as belonging to them as joint tenants. They will then be joint tenants, not as members of the joint family which no longer exists but under a special agreement made after the severance. There is no evidence here of any such special agreement. The learned Judge thought the reasons given by the plaintiff for saying that these lands had been kept undivided were substantially correct. It would certainly require very strong evidence that properties held by the parties as tenants-in-common at the date of the severance as the result of the severance were thereafter held as joint tenant. My opinion is that if that was attempted to be done, it would amount to a transfer of an interest in immoveable property. I think the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(1) 68 Ind. Cas. 451; 24 Bom. L. R. 1209; 30 M. L. T. 255; (1922) M. W. N. 399; 45 M. 489; 26 C. W. N. 929; (1922) A. I. R. (P. C.) 201; 43 M. L. J. 428; 16 L. W. 639; 20 A. L. J. 839; 37 C. L. J. 15 (P. C.).

Crump, J.—I agree that in the present case the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge should be upheld. It has been found by him as a question of fact that there was a division of the family property, and that certain specific lands were allotted to the share of the plaintiff's husband. The only doubt which can be suggested is as to those lands which were left joint at this partition and upon that point the decision in Gauri-shankar v. Atma Ram (3) has been relied upon as showing that, in the absence of any special agreement, the members of the family would stand to one another as members of an undivided family after the date of partition. As to that I agree with the view expressed by my Lord the Chief Justice that the decision in the Privy Council in Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (2) makes it difficult to accept the previous decision of this Court in its entirety. Once it is held that there has been partition, I should myself be inclined to hold that the presumption must be that as regards that portion of the estate which remained undivided, the members of the family would hold as tenants-in-common unless and until a special agreement to hold as joint tenant is proved. I agree, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 59—Occupancy tenancy—Joint tenants—Survivorship—Separation of shares—Partition.

The principle to be followed in cases of succession to an occupancy holding, as against the landlord, is that joint tenants of a holding, even though it was not held by their common ancestor, are to be regarded as a single tenant, and as long as any of them, or the descendants of any of them, survive, the landlord cannot claim in the share of any tenant whose line has died out. [p. 371, col. 2.]

Mohru v. Mutsaddi, 109 P.R. 1894 (F. B.), relied on.

The division of a joint occupancy holding for purposes of cultivation or in order to enable the co-sharers to raise money by mortgaging their shares in the holding does not indicate that the holding has, as a matter of fact, been finally partitioned. [p. 371, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 30th April 1918, reversing that of the Honorary Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 20th August 1917 and remanding the case to the lower Court under O. XXI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for disposal on the merits.

AMIR KHAN v. MINH MAL.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Har Gopal, for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs, claiming to be the successors of the two original co-sharers in an occupancy holding, sued to redeem certain fields of that holding which one of the two said co-sharers, now dead, had mortgaged to the landlords themselves. The facts bearing on the points argued before us are briefly as below:—

One Chanda Singh was originally the sole tenant of the occupancy holding in question but he associated with himself in the tenancy his collateral Labh Singh, the father of the plaintiffs, and consequently both were entered in the Revenue Records as joint tenants in equal shares. However, though the holding remained joint, they separated in cultivation so that some fields were cultivated by one and some by the other and they both individually as well as jointly affected several mortgages by which some of the fields were mortgaged from time to time. Chanda Singh mortgaged much more than his own share. The mortgage in question is one of the mortgages effected by Chanda Singh. Labh Singh died first and was succeeded by his sons, the plaintiffs. On the death of Chanda Singh, the plaintiffs were entered in the Revenue Records as tenants of the entire holding. Thus they claimed to have succeeded by right of survivorship to Chanda Singh's share in the holding and to have become entitled in this way to redeem the mortgage effected by him. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that Chanda Singh and Labh Singh were not joint tenants even if they were tenants-in-common, that, as a matter of fact, the holding had been partitioned as evidenced by separate possession and mortgages, and that this being so the rule of succession by survivorship was not applicable in this case. It was further contended that before suing for redemption the plaintiffs should have obtained a decree from a Revenue Court declaring that they were occupancy tenants as successors to the share of Chanda Singh.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit on arriving at the conclusion that the holding had been partitioned. On appeal the learned District Judge decided that separation in cultivation and alienations made by the co-sharers were not sufficient to establish final partition of the holding, and that the holding having remained joint, the plaintiffs were at present tenants of the whole of it and so could not sue to redeem the fields that had been mortgaged by Chanda Singh.

The landlords appeal, and their Counsel has strenuously urged before us the pleas referred to above, but we are of opinion that his arguments carry no force. To take the last point first the plaintiffs were recognised by the Revenue Authorities as lawful successors of Chanda Singh. As stated above, according to the mutation sanctioned on the death of Chanda Singh they are recorded to be the occupancy tenants of the entire holding. Therefore, no Revenue Court's decree is needed to declare them occupancy tenants of Chanda Singh's share in the holding.

As regards the main contention that there was no joint tenancy, the argument is based on the assumption that joint tenancy which the Punjab Custom recognises is the same as the estate known as joint tenancy to English conveyancers. In Mohru v. Mutsaddi (1) it was explained that the principle to be followed "as regards the landlord, is that the joint tenants of a holding, even though it was not held by their common ancestor, are to be regarded as a single tenant, and that as long as any of them, or the descendants or any of them, survive, the landlord cannot claim the share or any tenant whose line has died out." This being the guiding principle, it cannot be gainsaid with any show of reason that the plaintiffs being the survivors of the two joint tenants Labh Singh and Chanda Singh now represent the entire estate and have occupancy rights in the entire holding.

The contention that the holding had been partitioned can be of no avail because, obviously, what the joint tenants did was to divide the holding for purposes of cultivation or in order to raise money, but this does not indicate that the holding had, as a matter of fact, been finally partitioned.

Estoppel—Pre-emption suit—Vendee, right of, to prove real nature of transaction.

It is open to the vendee in a pre-emption suit to prove the real nature of the transaction against a third party.

In order to maintain a plea of estoppel in a pre-emption suit, it must be proved that the plaintiff believed the representation made to him, and brought his suit on the basis of it.

Nawab Begam v. Hamid Ali, 11 O. C. 176. relied on.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 22nd March 1922, upholding that of the Munsif, Sandila at Hardoi, dated the 4th April 1921.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and M. B. Qidwai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Prasad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—These are two connected appeals arising out of two pre-emption suits. The property sold was grove-land and it has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the vendor had no proprietary right in the land but only the interest of a grove-holder. Two points are pressed in appeal,—

(1) that it was not open to the vendees to take this plea, and

(2) the question of costs.

It can hardly be contended at this time of day that it is not open to a vendee to prove the real nature of the transaction against a third party in a pre-emption suit. There have, for instance, been a number of cases in which it has been held that what was sold was not an actual proprietary interest but merely a share in a law suit. There is, moreover, the case, Nawab Begam v. Hamid Ali (1) relied on by both the Courts below, in which it was pointed that in order to maintain a plea of estoppel in a pre-emption suit it must be proved that the plaintiff believed the representation made and brought his suit on the basis of it. There is no evidence of this, and in fact the plaintiffs-appellants in the two suits were respectively the superior and under proprietors in the village and, therefore, were in a good position to know the true facts. The fact that the plaintiffs for the purpose of these proceedings did not wish to assert their proprietary right cannot affect the case.

On the question of costs it is urged that the plaintiffs were bound to bring these suits in view of the description of the right as proprietary in the sale-deed. The sale-deed is in this respect inconsistent with itself. In one place it does definitely state that the area of the grove was possessed and owned by the vendor; in another place it states equally clearly that right was only that of a muafidar. A transaction to which the plaintiff was no party could not affect his proprietary right and indeed the opinion of the Court below was that the plaintiffs took advantage of the wording of the deed to try to get hold of the grove to which they were not entitled. On the whole, I see no reason to disturb the order of the Court below as to costs.

The appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Where a suit is dismissed under r. 2, O. XVII of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff's remedy is by way of an application to set aside the dismissal under O. IX, r. 9 of the Code, and if that application is dismissed he has a right of appeal against the order of dismissal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (c) of the Code. When a suit is dismissed under r. 3 of O. XVII, of the Code the plaintiff has a right of appeal against the decree passed in the case.

In neither case does a revision lie against the order of dismissal.

Application against an order, dated the 28th April 1922, passed by the First Munsif at Patna.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Petitioner.
Messrs. Shiveshwar Dyal and Brijkishore Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—On the 28th April 1922 the defendant in the suit, out of which this application arises, was present, but the plaintiff was not present in person and his Pleader filed a petition for time to adduce evidence. The plaintiff's application was rejected and the Pleader thereupon said that he had no further instructions. The Court then proceeded to hear the case and allowed the defendant to file a petition for the amendment of issues and to tender the certified copy of a decision in the previous application under O. IX r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, which related to the case. The Court, after considering this decision and hearing the defendant's Pleader, found that the suit was barred by res judicata and he accordingly made a decree of dismissal. In making this order the Court was careful to note that it was acting under provisions of r. 3 of O. XVII, Civil Procedure Code.

Now, whether or not the Court was right in disposing of the case under O. XVII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, or whether it should have acted under r. 2 of that Order is not a point which appears to be material for the decision of the present application before us. Here the plaintiff applies to us to exercise our revisional jurisdiction under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, in respect of the order of the 28th April 1922 on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it under O. XVII.

He contends that by reason of r. 2 of that Order the Court should have proceeded under O. IX and, therefore, any decree purporting to have been passed under r. 3 was made without jurisdiction. Now section 115, Civil Procedure Code, clearly lays down that the High Court cannot interfere in revision if there is an appeal against the order complained of. Whether we view the order of the 28th April as an order properly made under r. 3 of O. XVII or as an order under O. IX, r. 8, the plaintiff had a right of appeal. In the former case he had an appeal against the decree and in the latter case it was open to him to apply under O. IX, r. 9 and in the event of being unsuccessful, he had a right of appeal under O. XLIII against the decision under O. IX, r. 9. He did in fact apply under O. IX, r. 9, and that application was rejected. No appeal was filed against that order of rejection and there is no application for the revision of that order before us. It is clear that the present application is not maintainable.

The result is that the application is dismissed with costs; hearing fee one gold mohur.

The Court's power to interfere with a sale held by the Official Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act is not limited to cases where there has been some mala fides on the part of the Receiver, or purchaser. Where the action of the Receiver is irregular and has prejudiced the general interests of creditors, the Court can set aside the Receiver's order. [p. 375, col. 1.]

Thiruvengkatachiar v. Thangayi Ammal, 29 Ind. Cas. 294; 39 M. 479; 17 M. L. T. 432; 29 M. L. J. 755, followed.

Ex parte Lloyd, In re Peters, (1883) 47 L. T. 64, distinguished.

Appeal against an order of the District Court of Trichinopoly, dated the 21st of February 1921, and made in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 773 of 1919, in I. P. No. 20 of 1917 on its file.

FACTS.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Court setting aside a sale by the Official Receiver in favour of the appellant on a petition by some of the creditors of the insolvent.

Notice of sale stated the sale was to be between 7-9 A. M. on 8th August 1919. The highest bid was Rs. 2,000. The Official Receiver thought it too low. Hence he stopped it and advertised for fresh auction on 13th October 1919 stating the auction was to begin at 7 A. M. There were certain anonymous petitions stating that the date had been changed to 12th. The Official Receiver still proceeded with the sale on 13th October 1919 and concluded it for Rs. 1,500, on these facts the creditors petitioned within the 21 days provided by section 66 of Act V of 1920. The District Judge set it aside. The appeal is against this order. It may be stated that a fresh sale had subsequently taken place for Rs. 2,300.

Mr. Tyagaraja Iyer for Mr. S. Doraswamy Iyer, for the Appellant. The order setting aside the sale is wrong. The Official Receiver having reserved to himself the right to stop the auction if he pleased and he not having thought fit to do so, the Court ought not to have set it aside.

On the analogy of O. XXI, r. 90, admittedly no fraud or illegality or misconduct has been alleged upon which alone an ordinary contract could be set aside. The jurisdiction of a Court to set aside a contract duly concluded by its officers is not absolute nor can it be rested on mere considerations on what a more prudent Receiver would have done. Lastly, owing to the procedure adopted by the District Judge, the appellant had no opportunity to meet the case as stated in the affidavit.

Further, the Official Receiver who appears here by Counsel concluded this contract with me and is bound to stand by me and support me.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Respondent.—On the last point as to the position of the Official Receiver for whom I appear, the Official Receiver is an officer of Court and acts under its instructions. His acts and decisions are subject to the advice and review by Court. (See section 68, apart from his general position as officer of Court). The first sale conducted by me was not confirmed by Court and I no longer stand by it. I have in fact concluded a fresh sale.

There is a difficulty which faces the other side in this appeal. The subsequent sale has not been attacked. It has been confirmed without objection and there is no appeal against it. The purchaser is not a party here in appeal and there can be no effective order at all in this appeal.

It is too late in the day to question the jurisdiction of Insolvency Court to confirm, modify, reverse the act of Official Receiver under section 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The creditors for interference are very general. Discretion of the Court is absolute and practically unfettered and is not confined to fraud or mala fides. The matter is concluded by authority Thiruvengkatachiar v. Thangayi Ammal (1) and also Ex parte Lloyd, In re Peters (2) cited and explained therein. The Receiver is a trustee for creditors. The acts of Official Receiver are only of conditional validity. The Insolvent Court has inherent powers of supervision over the conduct of its officers. There is no analogy between section 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code and the matter is settled by the course of authorities. The judgment of the lower Court is correct.

(1) 29 Ind. Cas. 294; 39 M. 479; 17 M. L. T. 432; 29 M. L. J. 755.

DAUDBHAI V. G. I. P. RAILWAY.

JUDGMENT.—It is contended that the Court's power to interfere with a sale held by an Official Receiver is limited to cases where there has been some mala fides on the part of the Receiver or of the purchaser.

Reliance is placed on the case of Ex parte Lloyd, In re Peters (2) where the Master of the Rolls observed that the Court would not interfere unless the trustee did that which was so utterly unreasonable and absurd that no reasonable man would so act. The same objection was taken in Thiruvengkatachiar v. Thangayi Ammal (1) and overruled. It was then observed: "It [the case of Ex parte Lloyd, In re Peters (2)] is not an authority for the proposition that where proper reasons are given by a Court for holding that the action of the Receiver was irregular and has prejudiced the general interests of the creditors, it should not set aside the order passed by the Receiver". We adopt these observations in dealing with the present case where the Receiver's act was certainly irregular and prejudicial to the creditors in accepting a far lower bid at the second sale.

The suggestion that the appellant had no opportunity to file a counter-affidavit in the District Court is not acceptable in view of the entries in the B. diary which show that arguments were heard on three different days. The appeal is dismissed with costs. The costs in the District Court after the remand by the High Court will be borne by the Official Receiver whose act occasioned the Court's interference. The costs of the appeal on the previous occasion are provided for in the lower Court's order and we allow the order to stand in that respect.

A Railway Company in order that it may claim an exemption from a liability to pay damages by virtue of a Risk-note executed in their favour by a consignee must prove that the goods consigned have been lost or destroyed, that is to say, that they are no longer in the possession of the Company and that they are not lying about in their premises or that some kind of search for them was made by the Company. It is not sufficient merely to prove that the goods were not found at an intermediate station and that they are untraceable, in the absence of any evidence that they were loaded at the station of consignment. Mr. S. B. Gokhale for the Applicant.

Mr. P. Lobo, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a sequel to Civil Revision No. 231 of 1921. The law on the subject accepted by Dhobley, A. J. C. in that case has now been affirmed by a Bench of this Court in Civil Revision No. 258 of 1921. The opinion of the Bench in that case must be read together with the order referring the case to the Bench. The Railway Company has now been given an opportunity of proving that the five bags of sugar are lost, that is to say, that they are no longer in the possession of the Company, and that they are not lying about in their premises, or at least that some kind of search has been made for them. The goods were consigned from Kidderpur to Betul. All that was pleaded by the defendant Company was that the five bags "were either lost in transit or stolen or dropped." It was also stated that the waggon left Jubbulpore on 1st December 1919 at 18-30 and was received at Itarsi direct on 2nd December 1919 where one side seal was found deficient. The evidence adduced by the Company after remand is very meagre on this point, though they have proved that Risk-notes were executed. The evidence of a Guard shows that at Itarsi a seal on the waggon was broken and five bags out of the total consignment were missing there and of course they were also missing at Betul. He also stated that the loss was reported to the Police and to the sending and receiving stations, with the result that the bags are still untraceable. He does not state that he has any personal knowledge as to what efforts were made to find the bags. The Official who gave the Railway Receipt at Kidderpur says Mr. Bose loaded the goods, but Mr. Bose is not a witness. There is no evidence whatever that bags were not duly received at Jubbulpur or that they were in the waggon when it started from Jubbulpur. For all we can tell from the evidence, the five bags may have been unloaded at Jubbulpore, and still be in the Company's possession there, or they may have been wrongly sent to some other destination. The Company, if the bags were really lost, could probably have merely proved in what condition the seals of the waggon were on its arrival at Jubbulpore, and whether the missing bags were or were not in the waggon when it left Jubbulpore, but for some reason the Company appear to have taken no trouble to collect the requisite evidence in the case, and have failed to prove that the bags are really lost, that is to say, no longer in the possession of the Company. It seems unfortunate that more care is not devoted by the Company for the management of its civil suits up-country. The circumstances in which the Company can rely on the Risk-note have, therefore, not been proved. To quote the words of the Bench, the Company have filed "to prove that the circumstances in which the Risk-note is intended to operate and exempt them from liability have occurred, or in other words the goods have in this case been lost or destroyed."

In these circumstances, the plaintiff is entitled to damages, and the case is remanded to the Court of Small Causes to ascertain and decree the amount of those damages. Costs in this Court, in which Rs. 15 will be allowed as Pleader's fees, will be costs in the suit.

The grant of a melcharth in Kovilagam properties itself does not of itself terminate the interest of a previous mortgagee. That interest is terminated not solely on account of the grant of the melcharth but only if and when the melcharthdar also finds money for redemption and pays it to the previous mortgagee. Therefore, where a melcharth is granted in property previously mortgaged by a person who has not the authority to do so, there is no bar to the same being ratified under section 200 of the Contract Act by the person who is really competent to grant the melcharth. KOZHIKOT PATINJARE KOVILAGATH THAMBATHI THAMBURATHI v. SANKARA MENON.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.—Assuming that by reason of Exhibit XI first plaintiff has the right to manage the Kovilagam affairs or to execute any melcharth in respect of the Kavilagam properties and that she was not restored to management by Exhibit F, still the third plaintiff's statement in the First Court that the melcharth executed by first plaintiff in second plaintiff's favour was beneficent to the Kavilagam and agreeing to a decree being passed on its basis in second plaintiff's favour amounts to a ratification of the execution of the melcharth and validates the same.

Further, the third plaintiff's legal representative cannot in the same proceedings take up a contrary attitude to that taken up by the third plaintiff in his pleadings. See Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Akram Ali (1) and Rangasami Gounden v. Nachappa Gounden (2).

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and D. A. Krishna Varlar, for the Respondents.—First plaintiff when she executed the melcharth executed it expressly stating that she was the person entitled to execute it. She did not purport to execute it on behalf of anybody else. So no ratification is possible. (See section 196, Indian Contract Act).

Moreover, third plaintiff was not the seniormost male member at the date of Exhibit B. At any particular time, it is the seniormost male member and he alone can execute a melcharth in respect of tarwad properties.

If at all first plaintiff purported to execute it on behalf of anybody else, it must be on behalf of the seniormost male member and as there was no ratification to him before his death it cannot be ratified by anybody else.

A melcharth by a person who is not, but who claims to be, entitled to execute it is also a void document and hence it cannot be ratified. Again, no ratification is possible if the interest of a third party will be affected as that of the prior tenant here. See section 200, Indian Contract Act, and Illustration thereto. In any case, as the present seniormost male member, the representative of the third plaintiff, contests the validity of Exhibit B no decree can be passed on its basis, now.

JUDGMENT.—The facts, so far as they are necessary for the arguments which we propose to consider, are that the second plaintiff, here one of the appellants, is a melcharthaar under a melcharth given by the first plaintiff, the senior lady of a Kovilagam. Third plaintiff was the senior male member of the Kovilagam. Many years back, the first plaintiff's predecessor had been removed from management under Exhibit XI. Subsequently, the first plaintiff, as she contends, was restored to management by Exhibit F executed by the senior male member, who had in due course succeeded the person who took office under Exhibit XI. The suit is for redemption of a previous kanom of the Kovilagam property, and the main question raised is whether the first plaintiff had authority to give the melcharth, Exhibit B. There is a subsidiary question as to whether, if she had no authority to give Exhibit B, that was made good by the ratification of her action in doing so, constituted by the third plaintiff's pleadings. And, lastly, there is a question as to the effect of the proceedings and the conduct of the third plaintiff in the lower Appellate Court and of his death during their pendency in this Court and the refusal of his legal representative to follow his original pleadings.

Dealing first with the two points last mentioned, we have the conduct of the third plaintiff in the Appellate Court described in paragraph 5 of that Court's judgment. Third plaintiff's connection with the case began, when he applied to be made a plaintiff in the Court of first instance, stating in his affidavit that he approved of Exhibit B and that a decree for redemption of Exhibit B might be given to the second plaintiff. In the lower Appellate Court, the

Pleader for the third plaintiff as stated in paragraph 5 of the judgment under appeal, represented that he did not ask for a decree on the strength of title. The language of the lower Appellate Court is not felicitous. But we understand it to have meant that the third plaintiff did not ask for a decree in favour of the Kovilagam or himself, not that he in any way withdrew his support of the second plaintiff or his suggestion that a decree should be passed in the second plaintiff's favour. So far, we cannot see how the third plaintiff did anything which in any way detracted from the effect of his previous affidavit as a ratification of the plaintiff's act in giving Exhibit B; whether it did effect a ratification of that act we shall consider in the sequel.

Next, the legal representative of the third plaintiff in this Court was really joined as the legal representative of the second defendant although he does not now rely on that character and has appeared before us only as representing the third plaintiff. His claim to do so is not being disputed by any of the other parties. Mr. Krishna Varior on his behalf states that he desired to oppose the second plaintiff's claim and to repudiate the action of the third plaintiff, in so far as it approved or ratified the grant of Exhibit B. We are not able to understand how this can be justified by O. XXII r. 4, clause 2, or how that provision can be applied to the case of a legal representative whose predecessor never made or could have made a defence at all. In Brendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Akram Ali (1) and Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2) it was laid down as settled law that "he who has the right to complain must do so when the right of action is properly open to him and he knows the facts." We are not able to understand how the present legal representative of the third plaintiff has any different legal character from the third plaintiff himself or any which would enable him to abandon the third plaintiff's contentions in the present proceedings, with which alone we are concerned.

As regards his right to take other proceedings we of course express no opinion. We accordingly deal with the question of ratification as between the first and the third plaintiffs. Third plaintiff in his affidavit referred to, said that on an examination of the records in the case he has satisfied himself that the melkanom deed included in them and this suit are proper, beneficial and profitable to the Kovilagam and that all the reliefs asked for in the plaint might be granted to the second plaintiff. There is no doubt that, unless some objection on that ground can be made good, this language constitutes a clear ratification of the first plaintiff's action in giving Exhibit B. It is urged that it does not constitute such a ratification with reference to section 200, Indian Contract Act, on the ground that the grant of a melcharth, such as this, would have the effect of terminating a right or interest of third persons, the defendants. We are unable to follow this argument. The grant of a melcharth in itself does not terminate the interest of the prior mortgagee. That interest is terminated, not solely on account of the grant of melcharth but only if and when the melcharthdar also finds money for redemption and pays it to the previous mortgagee.

This failing, we have been referred to section 196, Indian Contract Act, the argument being that there is no ratification, because the first plaintiff did not purport to grant Exhibit B as the agent of any one competent to grant it; and in connection with this argument it has been urged further that the grant of Exhibit B was simply void and on that account could not in any case be the subject of ratification. Exhibit B purports to be granted by the first plaintiff as Valia Tamburathy, the title which she enjoys as the senior lady of the Kovilagam who would in the absence of any other arrangement be competent to grant melcharth. The properties, the subject of the document, are described as belonging in the jennu to the lady's Kovllagam, and the document recites that the melcharth amount has been received by her for the welfare of the Kovllagam. We think that Exhibit B must be read as executed by the first plaintiff in the capacity of the person who was competent to represent the Kovllagam and as such to deal with its properties. What is said is that there can be no representation of the Kovllagam in the ordinary sense except by the person appointed under Exhibit XI who would correspond with the karnavan of a tarwad; and that on behalf of such a person first plaintiff could not act, because he could not delegate his own delegated authority to her. The fallacy in this argument is that it regards first plaintiff's action as founded only on Exhibit F and not on the ratification which third plaintiff's pleadings afford. Shortly, she can and does plead that she acted not on behalf of, but instead of the person empowered by Exhibit XI and that she acted on behalf of the members of the Kovilagam, who third plaintiff now represents, or his predecessor could have acted for; and we can see no objection to her doing so or, after third plaintiff's ratifications of her acts, to their acceptance as valid. It is clearly useless to criticise the argument founded on ratification on the ground that the third plaintiff had no legal right to act on behalf of the Kovilagam. For that is exactly the reason why the doctrine of ratification is invoked. It has been urged that the doctrine cannot be invoked where the act generally is in itself void. But the granting of the melcharth by a person who is entitled to deal with the mortgaged property is not in itself void. We have been shown no instances in which an act has been held void for the present purpose where the only objection to the validity of the act is derived from its being done without proper authority. In these circumstances, we hold that the grant of Exhibit B. by the first plaintiff was ratified by the third plaintiff and that nothing has occurred since his ratification, which can deprive it of effect.

The result, is the second appeal is allowed, the lower Appellate Court's decision being set aside and the appeal being remanded for disposal according to law with reference to the other issues framed already. Costs to date in the lower Appellate Court and here will be costs in the appeal and be provided for in the lower Appellate Court's decree. The stamp-value on second appeal will be refunded on application. The question of costs at the trial in the Court of first instance will be dealt with by the lower Appellate Court on re-hearing with reference to the result thereof.

Insolvency—Assignment of prospective surplus—Assignee, rights of.

An insolvent can assign any prospective surplus that may remain over after his estate has been fully administered in insolvency, such assignment is of a contingent interest and does not give the assignee the right to intervene until it is ascertained whether or not there is a surplus. [p. 381, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Poona, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 17 of 1921.

Sir Thomas Strangman (with him Mr. J. R. Gharapur), for the Appellant.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Balkrishana Vishnu Ghole was adjudged an insolvent on 6th September 1919 by the Joint First Class Subordinate Judge, Poona, in Insolvency Application No. 9 of 1917. On 12th February 1921 he presented an application to the First Class Subordinate Judge asking that the adjudication might be annulled. That application was dismissed on 21st February 1921. It was first claimed that the petitioner ought not to have been adjudicated an insolvent. But the Court held that he had been rightly adjudicated. Then it was urged that it had been proved that the debts of the insolvent had been paid in full, but it was held that he was not entitled to an order of annulment on that ground. The Judge said:—

"There is no evidence on the point. Neither the petitioner nor the creditors appeared in the witness-box. The petition admits that the mortgage-debts are not paid and that some personal debts are not paid. The petitioner asks the Court to receive a sum of Rs. 1,728 to pay these unpaid debts. That, too, under protest, and he does not admit a creditor's claim for Rs. 1,213 out of it. The Court has no business to accept the sum and to disburse it. There is no authority for it. Any how, it clearly shows that the insolvent has not paid his debts in full. To proceed with the petition, it says that a purchaser has been found to purchase the land at Bhamburda for Rs. 38,999 out of which he has paid money or personal debts. But it does not say how much and to whom. It is silent as regards mortgages. At the same time, it says that the insolvent is going to save his house. It is not known whether the insolvent is going to pay mortgages or the purchaser whose name is kept in dark as also identity which is transparent." The Judge, then, after considering the general circumstances surrounding the petition, said: "If the petition be carefully read, it is an attempt to deprive the Receiver of his fees about Rs. 2,400 and to give away in gift 3 acres of land worth Rs. 10,000 to Mr. Patwardhan and his friend and, lastly, to keep in tact the mortgages in order to deprive eventually the insolvent and his sons of all property." Therefore, the petition was dismissed with costs.

An appeal was filed by the insolvent against the order of Mr. Rego, but it was eventually withdrawn. While it was pending an application was made by the present applicant that he should be made a party to the appeal, but that application was dismissed, and we think rightly. After the insolvent had withdrawn his appeal, the applicant applied on his own account for an annulment of the adjudication order. The learned Trial Judge said: "The applicant wants to agitate again the questions that had already been raised and decided on the insolvent's application made under section 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920. In the judgment elaborately endorsed on that application this Court held (1) that the insolvent was rightly adjudicated insolvent, and (2) that he had not paid his debts in full. The applicant took the transfer long after the adjudication order was passed and the transfer prima facie appears to be illegal under section 55 of the Insolvency Act. The proper time, therefore, to adjudicate whether the applicant has acquired any rights under the transfer relied on by him would be after the sale-proceeds came in Court for the benefit of the creditors."

Now, it is possible for an insolvent to assign to a purchaser the prospective surplus that may remain over after his estate has been administered in insolvency. In Bird v. Philpott (1) Mr. Justice Farwell said:—"It has been said that Ex parte Sheffield, In re Austin (2) and In re Leadbitter (3), decided that a bankrupt cannot deal with the possibility of surplus until all the debts in the first bankruptcy have been paid and the surplus has been ascertained. I do not think that these decisions decided anything to that effect at all. If they did, they would have overruled prior decisions—of the Lord Chancellor amongst others—which were not referred to and they would be, in my opinion, contrary to the whole spirit and principles on which the Bankruptcy Act is now built. As I read the Bankruptcy Act, the trustee takes all the bankrupt's property for an absolute estate in law, but for limited purposes, namely, for the payment of the creditors under that bankruptcy, and that bankruptcy only—payment of principal and interest, and all the costs of the bankruptcy. Subject to that, he is a trustee for the bankrupt of the surplus. He as a trustee is in a better position than an ordinary trustee to the extent pointed out in Ex parte Sheffield, In re Austin (2), and In re Leadbitter (3), that is to say, the bankrupt has not the ordinary right of a cestui que trust to intervene until the surplus has been ascertained to exist, and all the creditors and interest and costs have been paid. He cannot trouble the trustee by taxing the bill of costs or interfere with the administration of the estate in any way, but, subject to that and subject to his non-interference with the administration and with the management of the trustee during the bankruptcy in the due course of the execution of his duty, he can, in my opinion, demand the surplus, and he has a right to the surplus—a right which he can dispose of by Will or deed or otherwise during the pendency of the first bankruptcy, even before the surplus is ascertained, although such disposition will, of course, be ineffectual unless in the event there prove to be a surplus upon which it can operate."

It is quite clear, therefore, that even if the insolvent in this case had purported to assign the surplus which might remain over when his estate had been fully administered in bankruptcy, his assignee could not interfere with the administration of the estate by virtue of such assignment. It would be an assignment of a contingent interest which could give no right to the assignee to intervene until it was ascertained whether or not there was a surplus. Whatever arrangement, therefore, was made between the insolvent and the applicant, the sale of the Bhamburda property was absolutely void. Since, after the property became vested in the Receiver, the insolvent could not deal with it so as to give any title to a purchaser. It seems to us that Mr. Rego's judgment dismissing the insolvent's application for the annulment of the adjudication order was perfectly correct. The insolvent having withdrawn his appeal the present applicant has attempted to obtain a review of Mr. Rego's decision by making a fresh application, but whether it was competent or not he could not satisfy the Court that the insolvent's debts had been paid in full. In appeal he again failed and in view of the decisions of the lower Court it would be difficult for us to interfere in second appeal. In our opinion, the whole of the record shows that the conduct of the insolvent and the applicant has not been beyond suspicion, and it is not an unfair inference that there has been an attempt made to defeat the provisions of the Insolvency Act. We think, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

All applications and appeals which are akin to it must also be dismissed.

Hindu Law—Charitable endowment—Temple site purchased in name of one member of joint family—Other members, right of, to joint trusteeship—Family God installed in new temple—Original founder of worship, position of—Usage of institution, evidential value of.

The mere fact that a site was purchased in the name of one of the members of a Hindu joint family and a temple was subsequently built on that site does not show that that member was the founder of the temple and that his descendants alone, to the exclusion of those of other members, are entitled to the trusteeship of the temple. [p. 383, col. 2; p. 384, col. 1.]

The site of a temple was purchased in the name of one of the members of one of three branches of a Hindu family and a temple was built on it. There was no evidence to show whether that member acted for his branch only or for the whole joint family consisting of all the three branches, or whether they were divided from one another at that period; nor was there any definite evidence as to how the money for the purchase of the site and for the building of the temple was found. Prior to the building of the temple the common ancestor of all the three branches had a place of worship in a temple-house for a deity which was afterwards installed in the suit temple. There was also an effigy in the temple of the original common ancestor. Several temporary arrangements had been made in which one branch recognised the right of the other branches to manage:

Held, that in view of these facts all the three branches were equally entitled to the trusteeship of the suit temple either because the original ancestor was accepted as the real founder or because the member in whose name the site was purchased was acting on behalf of all the three branches of the family. [p. 386, col. 2; p. 387, col. 1.]

Where a family God that is worshipped in a temple-house belonging to a person is afterwards installed in a newly built temple, the new temple must be regarded only as an enlargement of the original institution in the temple house and the latter must be taken as the original foundation and its founder as the founder of the new temple. Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1917.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar, C. S. Venkatachariar, E. Duraiswami Iyer and T. R. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga in Original Suit No. 5 of 1917. The suit refers to the hukdarship or trusteeship of a temple in Ariyakudy in the District of Ramnad, called the Thiruvengadam Udayan temple. Plaintiffs claim that they and defendants Nos. 5 to 11 are the hereditary trustees and sue to recover the temple and its properties and for other subsidiary reliefs. The Subordinate Judge having substantially decreed the plaintiffs' claim, defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have appealed to us and have contended that the suit should have been dismissed.

The relationship of the parties is explained by the genealogical tree attached to the judgment which the Subordinate Judge says in paragraph 8 of his judgment he has prepared from the evidence of the 5th plaintiff. It has been accepted as substantially correct by both the parties; and we shall adopt it for the purposes of this appeal and refer to the various individuals in it in the same manner as the Subordinate Judge has done. It will be seen from it that the original ancestor of the family was one Murugappa. He had among others two sons, Santhappa and Sevuga I, Santhappa's branch does not come into this suit as none of its members is a party here. Sevuga I had 4 sons Murugappa II, Alagiavanna I, and Venkatachala I and one Arunachala who was adopted away from the family, and with him and his branch we are not concerned. The other 3 sons have all left descendants. First to 3rd plaintiffs represent the first branch of Murugappa II. The 1st to 4th defendants and defendants Nos. 5 and 6 represent the second branch of Alagiavanna I; but the position of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 depends upon the validity of the adoption of the 1st defendant to Alagiavanna II by his widow; 4th to 6th plaintiffs, 8th, 10th and 11th defendants represent the third branch of Venkatachala I. The original 7th and 9th defendants were subsequently transposed as 5th and 6th plaintiffs and so they do not appear among the defendants.

Plaintiffs disputed the adoption of the 1st defendant and treated him and his descendants, defendants Nos. 2 to 4, in their plaint as not being members of the second branch. The Subordinate Judge has, however, held the adoption to be true and valid and though a memorandum of objections has been filed against that finding the adoption was not seriously disputed before us and we have no doubt that the finding of the Subordinate Judge is right. The adoption was over 40 years ago and it was not disputed till 1901; the Subordinate Judge has referred to the numerous documents wherein the adoption has been recognised from 1874 onwards. He has also accepted the oral evidence of the defence witnesses Nos. 1, 3, 7, and 10, who speak to the adoption and we see no reason to discredit them in appeal. We attach no weight to the non-production of Isaipidimanam and Muri in this case in the face of the evidence on the defendants' side. Accepting the finding that the 1st defendant's adoption is true and valid, we treat defendants Nos. 1 to 4 as proper members of the second branch.

On the main question raised, the plaintiffs' case in the plaint is that the site for the plaint temple was purchased by the "forefathers" of plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 5 to 11 and that the temple was built and consecrated by them and that they endowed the temple and were carrying on the management; subsequently, the major members among plaintiffs and defendants were managing as hukdarson behalf of all the descendants of the original man Sevuga Chattiari, i.e., Sevuga I. They claim that all the three branches are entitled to the hukdarship and they asked that the amicable arrangement made under Exhibit A in 1914 by the three branches jointly by which two representatives of each branch, in all six persons, were to manage the temple affairs in rotation each managing for a year at a time should be confirmed. The case of the defendants Nos. 1 to 6, on the other hand, is that the hukdarship is confined to their branch alone as the temple was founded by Sevuga II of their branch on behalf of himself and his two brothers.

The Subordinate Judge held, on a consideration of all the evidence, and relying to a large extent on the way in which the parties interested acted with reference to this institution for the last 50 years, or more, that Sevuga I, was its founder and, therefore, all his descendants were entitled to the hukdarship. The finding has been attacked before us by the appellants mainly on the ground that the sale-deed, Exhibit I (d), of 1828 for the site of the plaint temple in favour of Sevuga II, was wrongly discredited by the lower Court. Though the observations of the Subordinate Judge with reference to it are not without force, we think he has not correctly appreciated the effect of Exhibit XXVI with reference to it. That was a written statement filed in Original Suit No. 138 of 1903 by a number of members of this family; it is signed among others by the 5th plaintiff and the fathers of plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 6, and as 3rd plaintiff's father died soon after, the 3rd plaintiff has adopted it. In it they refer to a sale by the mahajanams 75 years before now (that is 1828) of the temple site to one Savuga Chetti. This by itself no doubt does not fix the reference to be to Exhibit I (d) though the description in it so far as it goes applied to it exactly. In that suit Exhibit I (d) was filed on the very day the written statement was put in as appears from the endorsement on it and it is now produced in the present suit from the file of the District Munsif in that Suit No. 138 of 1903. There can be hardly a doubt that the written statement was referring to Exhibit I (d). That it was the same document that was filed in 1877 is shown by the endorsement on it about the collection of penalty in January 1878. Exhibit XXVI, therefore, does seem to contain an admission on the plaintiffs' side about the truth of Exhibit I (d). The reference in it to Sevuga Chetty is thus clearly Sevuga II. We are, therefore, inclined to think that, in spite of the adverse criticism of the Subordinate Judge, Exhibit I (d) is a genuine document and that the site on which the plaint temple stands was purchased in Sevuga II's name. The temple was subsequently built on that site.

The question then is, "Does it follow from these two facts that Sevuga II, was the founder of the temple, and only his descendants are entitled to the hukdarship?" We do not think so. To draw such an inference several assumptions will have to be made for which there is no warranty. There is no deed of foundation in this case. To give exclusive rights to his descendants, we will have to assume that Sevuga II, himself paid his own moneys for buying the site and for building the temple; that he got it consecrated as a new institution and not as the continuation of an existing one, and that he acted for himself in all these matters and that he left no rules or instructions to regulate the succession to the trusteeship. We cannot assume all these things without evidence particularly as such an assumption is inconsistent with the conduct of the parties which we shall refer to presently. In the first place, it is not the appellants' case that Sevuga II, acted entirely for himself in getting the temple established, for they say that he acted on behalf of himself and his brothers, Arunachala II and Ramasami VII. In Exhibit I (d) there is not a word about the purchase being on behalf of any others or as the manager of any joint family. Whether that joint family consisted of Sevuga II and his two brothers only or of the members of all the three branches there is no direct evidence to show. Exhibit I (d) is, therefore, quite inconclusive about the nature of the foundation and the rights of the partition in the hukdarship.

The 5th plaintiff, who seems to be well acquainted with the family, has given an account of this foundation from which it would appear that it was originally a kovil vidu or temple house where Sevuga I used to carry on the worship of the family deity. This kovil vidu is referred to in Exhibit XXVI. He says that Sevuga I used to go to Tirupati, another famous temple in Southern India dedicated to the same god, to hand over the money offerings he received in his kovil to the deity there and that on a certain occasion an Archaka in Tirupati who had an inspiration told him that thereafter it was the Tirupati god's wish that a temple should be built for him in Aiyakudi and that from it the idea of building the plaint temple originated. He also says that Sevuga I died before the plaint temple was built out of subscriptions collected by the members of the family. The same family god that was worshipped in the kovil vidu was installed in the new temple. If this is true, and there is nothing to contradict it, it would seem that the new temple was only an enlargement of the original institution in the kovil vidu and, according to Mahomed Ismail Ariff v. Ahmed Moolla Dawood (1), the kovil vidu of Sevuga I, should be taken as the original foundation and he as the founder. We think, however, it would be safer to take this case as one in which there is no direct evidence of who the founder is and what the rules of succession to the trusteeship are and we must, therefore, infer them from the practice of the institution and the conduct of the parties.

The earliest document after Exhibit I (d) is Exhibit VII, a deed of purchase of certain lands for the temple in 1855 by Arunachala II, the brother of Sevuga II, from Venkatachella VII. The identity of the parties appears from the oral evidence. This deed shows that by that time Arunachala had apparently become the manager of the temple but in what right he so became, we do not know whether as the seniormost of the second branch or of all the three branches put together. That this purchase was from the funds of the temple appears from the extracts from the nam register Exhibit XXVIII (c) paragraph II; and also from Exhibit XXVIII which shows that the lands were purchased for the temple in the names of Srinivasa Iyengar and Arunachala Chetty, both described as servants of the temple. Exhibit XXVIII (a) shows that as early as 1849 an endowment was made to the temple by one Sathappa Chetty. See paragraph 5 in it. The lands purchased from temple funds for the temple will naturally be in the name of the manager or hukdar and Exhibit VII, therefore, merely shows that Arunachalam II, had probably succeeded Sevuga II, in the management. The next documents, the extracts from the nam register, have already been referred to.

The next piece of evidence we have is Exhibit K series. Exhibit K is a plaint filed by Arunachala II, and in it is joined as 2nd plaintiff Sevagu III of the third branch and he is described as hukdar. It is dated 1866. The suit was on a mortgage executed to the 1st plaintiff, probably on behalf of the temple, and it is very significant that in that suit a member of the third branch, described as a hukdar in the same manner as Arunachala, was added. Exhibit K-2 is the judgment and in it the same description appears. Exhibits K-3, K-4 and K-5 refer to another suit of a similar kind of 1870 where Sevuga III is again the 2nd plaintiff and he is described in it also as hukdar. There is no reasonable explanation why Sevuga III of the third branch was added as a party and described as the hukdar if, as defendants contend, the hukdarship was confined to their second branch. These proceedings in Court clearly show that Sevuga III was recognised as a hukdar so early as 1866.

We have also about this time, in January 1871, a sale-deed in favour of Arunachala II, Sevuga III, and Ramasami IV; representatives of all the three branches, Exhibit M-1, wherein they are all described as hukdars (according to the correct translation of the deed) for some lands bought for the temple. Again, in Exhibit M Venkatachala VII is described as hukdar.

Now it is argued that Arunachala II's action in joining the other branches should not be given much weight because in 1874 in his Will, Exhibit I (d), he repudiated their rights and that he tried also in the same year to bring in the members of Sathappa's branch as well, who, according to both plaintiffs and defendants, have no rights in the pointed out disputes arose between the parties in 1872 as Exhibit G indicated. Any action of Arunachala after that against the other two branches cannot be treated as of much weight or as affecting his previous admissions. In Exhibit G itself Sevuga III was admitted as a party to the suit as a hukdar though the 2nd petitioner Ramasami IV of the first branch was not. As the Subordinate Judge notices Exhibit

NARAYANAN CHETTY v. ELAYAPERUMAL.

M-1 was not apparently filed in that suit; if it has been possibly Ramasami IV may also have been added as a party.

Now it appears from Exhibit H-2 to H-4 of 1872 that Sevuga III and Ramasami IV tried to resist the opposition of the second branch to their rights to hukdarship in the temple by getting the *raiya*s on to their side and by collecting the rents due for the temple lands; they tried also to exclude the second branch from management altogether as the Subordinate Judge explains in paragraph 19 of his judgment.

At this time in 1874 Arunachala II died and left the Will, Exhibit I (b), already referred to. In it he asserted that Sevuga II consecrated the plaint temple and that he was the darmakartha of the trustee and after his death his son Ramasami (No. 8) should be the darmakartha. We have already dealt with the value of this document as a piece of evidence. After Arunachala's death Ramasami VIII applied for succession certificate in 1875 for outstandings due to the temple, vide Exhibit R-13. Sevuga III and Ramasami IV and Viravan of Sattappa's branch were made counter-petitioners and though these opposed the grant of the certificate to the petitioner, the District Judge held that as Ramasami VIII was admitted to be the heir and personal representative of the deceased while two of the counter-petitioners were divided cousins and the third a yet more distant dayadi, the certificate should go to the petitioner. He did not consider the question of hukdarship of the temple at all as the proceeding before him was a summary one. In fact, the certificate was given to collect "debts due to the estate of said Arunachala Chetty, deceased," and not statedly of the temple, Vide Exhibit VI-a. This order cannot be treated as of much value against the first and third branches as there was no adjudication in it even in a summary way as to the rights of hukdarship.

In 1876 Venkatachala VII and Sevukan III, describing themselves as hukdars, brought a suit, Original Suit No. 570 of 1876, on the mortgage, Exhibit M, and similarly they and Ramasami IV brought Second Civil Suit 1892 of 1876 excluding the second branch. Under Exhibits M-12 and K-10 and we also find Sevugan III executing a Will, Exhibit N, in the same year asserting that the temple site was bought by the ancestors of his family, he and his elder brother and his son built the temple and endowed it. He gives the hukdarship to his adopted son Lakshamana. Similarly, in 1879 Ramasami VIII also executed a Will, Exhibit I (c). Except as evidence of assertions of right, these Wills are of little value in this case.

The disputes went on between the parties, as fully explained by the Subordinate Judge in paragraphs 21 to 29 of his judgment, it is hardly necessary to repeat what each party did in detail again. In the meanwhile, we find several properties of considerable value purchased and endowed to the temple by the first and third branches, Exhibits M-2 of 1873, and M-3 to M-11 from 1875 to 1888. Suits were brought sometimes by 1 and 3 branches alone and sometimes by all the three and sometimes by strangers against them. See Exhibit R series as an example of the last where only 1 and 3 branches were added. In 1886 a criminal complaint was filed by a servant of Srinivasan Chetty, the 5th defendant, against the 5th plaintiff, Ramanathan Chetty, and his men and in that case the Magistrate found that the possession of the temple properties were with Ramanathan. The disputes culminated in a regular suit brought by the 1st defendant through his agent, Original Suit No. 14 of 1901, Exhibit XI for rent in which he asserted Sevakan II was the man who purchased the temple site and built the temple. Soon after, fearing a breach of the peace on account of these disputes, the Magistrate interfered under the Criminal Procedure Code to prevent it and locked up the doors of the temple so that no puja could be done there. When matters came to such a pass, the parties seem to have come to an amicable arrangement by Exhibit XII in June 1901 at the mediation of the important members of their community. It is signed by 1st plaintiff, and by the father of 3rd plaintiff of the first branch, by the first defendant for himself and as guardian of Ramasami IX by his agent, Vengusami Iyengar, and the 5th defendant of the second branch and by the 5th plaintiff and father of 6th plaintiff of the third branch. They are all admitted to be hukdars. By it they appointed three strangers as trustees to take charge of the temple and its properties.

NARAYANAN CHETTY V. ELAYAPERUMAL.

and carry on the worship till they could all unite together and take over the management themselves. The suit, Original Suit No. 14 of 1907, was to be withdrawn and the key of the temple to be obtained from the Magistrate and Ramasami IX was to refund Rs. 2,800 collected by him. This arrangement, however, was declared invalid by the Courts as it amounted to an alienation of the trusteeship to 3rd parties. Nevertheless, the acknowledgment by the representatives of all the three branches of the right of hukdarship in the other branches in a solemn deed loses none of its force.

As the transaction fell through, the third branch brought Original Suit No. 58 of 1911 to recover the properties from the three stranger trustees, vide Exhibit XVI and in it the members of the first and second branches were made parties. The suit was based on the existence of the rights of hukdarship in all the branches which was expressly asserted and yet the members of the second branch did not care to deny it and allowed the case to go ex parte. The decree, Exhibit B, was in favour of all the branches jointly but it was executed and possession obtained by the third branch.

Then, in 1914, the parties again met together and made an arrangement, Exhibit A, for the management of the temple affairs temporarily. The nature of the arrangement has already been referred to. Though the scheme they adopted was a temporary one till a proper scheme was settled by Court, still Exhibit A is based on an admission as to the rights of hukdarship of all three branches.

We have now referred to all the important documents in connection with the management of this temple. The appellants have adduced some oral evidence of the temple servants and others to show that in spite of all disputes the members of their second branch always continued in management. The Subordinate Judge has refused to accept this evidence or attach importance to it in the face of the documentary evidence showing that each party was trying to assert its rights ever since 1871 when the quarrel began; and we agree with him. There is further a series of his receipts for temple lands all in the name of the 5th plaintiff of the third branch, Exhibit O series.

To sum up the evidence, we have the sale-deed for the site of the temple in the name of Sevuga II and the temple was built on it during his time. Admittedly, he acted on behalf of himself and others but there is no direct evidence to show whether he so acted only for his branch or for the whole joint family consisting of all the three branches. There is no evidence that the three branches had become divided from one another at that remote period. The earliest reference we have to any division is in Exhibit VI (b) of 1875. There is also no definite evidence as to how the money for the purchase of the site and for the building of the temple was found. There is some evidence that, prior to the building of the plaint temple, Sevuga I, the common ancestor of all the three branches, had a place of worship for the same deity as was afterwards installed in the plaint temple in a kovil veedu or temple house and that the idea of building the new temple probably arose with him though he was not able to carry it out and it is not unlikely that the new temple was treated as an enlargement of the old institution. The fact that there is an effigy of Sevuga I in the temple while there is none of any other ancestor of Sevuga II has some significance in this connection.

It is, however, clear on the evidence that the rights of hukdarship in the first and third branches were recognised by Arunachala II of the 2nd branch, so long ago as 1866 and this state of affairs continued till at least 1871, when quarrels began and each side tried to oust the other. During that period we find numerous documents where the rights of 1 and 3 branches were asserted. The quarrels were once settled by Exhibit XII each branch recognising the right of the other branches but, unfortunately, the arrangement fell through. Again, a settlement was made on a singular footing, Exhibit A, and though it was a temporary one it is still in force and will continue so till the Court frames a scheme.

Now on all this evidence we are inclined to hold that the plaintiffs have established their case that they and the defendants are all equally entitled to the hukdarship of the plaint temple either because Sevuga I was accepted as the real founder as the Subordinate Judge has found or because Sevugan II was acting on behalf of all the three branches of the family.

The learned Vakil for the appellants contended that the second alternative was not put forward in the plaint and if it is to be allowed to be raised he should have an opportunity of meeting that case. The plaintiffs merely stated in their plaint that their "forefathers" purchased the land and built the temple and consecrated it and that subsequently all the descendants of Sevugan I were managing the temple affairs as hukdars under hereditary right. They did not confine their case to proving that Sevugan I bought the site and built the temple. In the written statement, though it is asserted that Sevugan II bought the land and built the temple, the issue framed, viz., the first part of Issue No. 1 is quite general in its terms; it is "whether plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 7 to 11 are hereditary trustees" no doubt the Subordinate Judge says in his judgment that the question turns upon whether the temple was founded by Sevugan I or II. As he was finding that Sevugan I was the founder there was no other question for him to consider. Though we are not dissenting from his finding we have considered that the case might be put on the alternative ground also, namely, that if Sevugan II was to be treated as the founder he was acting on behalf of not only his brothers but all the members of the three branches who apparently were then a joint family. The case was made in the lower Court and is not a new case; for otherwise there would have been no need to adduce the volume of evidence that has been adduced regarding the conduct and admissions of the parties. It is not suggested by the appellants that there are any new documents or other evidence which they could have produced but did not meet the alternative case. We think the objection is unsubstantial and we overrule it.

We agree with the Subordinate Judge in his finding that plaintiffs and defendants are all entitled to his hukdarship of the plaint temple.

The learned Vakil for the appellants did not argue any other point before us but the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs argued that the question of the right to the trusteeship of the plaint temple was res judicata between the second and third branches by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 58 of 1911. In the view we have taken of the case, it is not necessary to decide this question. We have already dealt with the question raised in the memorandum of objections. In the result, the appeal and the memorandum of objections both fail and are dismissed with costs of 1st and 4th plaintiffs in the appeal and of the defendants No. 1 to 4 in the memorandum of objections.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 177, 181—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Appeal—Death of defendant—Failure to apply within time for substitution—Abatement—Failure to object, effect of.

Where no application is made within the time prescribed by law for bringing the legal representatives of a deceased respondent on the record, the appeal abates, and no failure by the persons concerned to object to action taken on an application presented after expiry of the time limited by law would alter the fact of abatement. [p. 389, col. 2.]

Article 177 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act has no applicability to an application for bringing on record the legal representatives of a deceased person who was not a defendant or respondent on the date of his death. Such an application is governed by Art. 181 of Sch. I to the Act. [p. 390, col. 1.]

WAHID BAKHSH v. LALTA PARSHAD.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal is the outcome of a suit instituted so long ago as the 13th August 1912 by Wahid Bakhsh and others against Lalta Parshad. In 1907 Lalta Parshad purchased a plot of one kanal one marla field No. 6781 in Taraf Mubarak, a suburb of Multan, and proceeded to build a house. Wahid Bakhsh and others based their suit on the allegation that Lalta Parshad had encroached to the extent of 16 marlas on the adjoining field No. 751 of Taraf Ismail of which they asserted themselves to be the proprietors. They asked for a decree for possession of those 16 marlas and for an injunction requiring Lalta Parshad to demolish his structures erected upon a portion of the encroachment and restraining him from building upon the rest of it.

Lalta Parshad pleaded that he was not in possession of any land which did not belong to him, and issues were framed, (1) whether the land in suit belongs to the plaintiffs and has been taken possession of unlawfully by the defendant, and (2) whether the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction.

The first Court decreed the claim. Lalta Parshad appealed to the District Judge, Sheikh Amir Ali, and in that Court the following statement was made on his behalf:—

"The defendant is willing that a decree may be passed in plaintiffs' favour for possession of 16 marlas more or less, by demolition of the buildings, if necessary, which may be found in the possession of defendant out of Khasra No. 1751 in Taraf Ismail. This will be decided by actual measurements through a Revenue Officer in execution proceedings."

The plaintiffs-respondents agreed and the District Judge passed a decree accordingly.

The Executing Court appointed a Naib Tahsildar to take measurements who reported an encroachment by the defendant of 4 or 5 marlas. As the result of a personal visit to the spot with two patwaris, each of which arrived at a different estimate of the measure of the encroachment, the Munsif eventually ordered the plaintiffs to be placed in possession of 16 marlas. The defendant appealed to the District Judge (Mr. Coldstream) who also visited the scene, found the problem an exceedingly ly difficult one to unravel, and reduced the area to be given to the plaintiffs to 12 marlas.

The plaintiffs came to the High Court on second appeal and Lalta Parshad lodged cross-objections which pointed to an opinion expressed by the District Judge that the decree of his predecessor was not a decree at all and urged that this opinion was correct and that the so-called decree should be held incapable of execution. A Single Judge held that in the decree there was no adjudication which determined conclusively the rights of the parties with regard to any of the matters in controversy before him, that it was not a decree at all, that it was not based on a compromise within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, since the so-called agreement between the parties did not result in the adjustment of the suit either in whole or in part, and that the agreement should not have been recorded. The learned Judge accepted the appeal, set aside the whole proceedings in execution and rejected the plaintiffs' application for execution. He added "the effect of this order will be that the order of Sheikh Nasir Ali, Munsif, of the 28th April 1915 (the original Trial Court) will remain in force and that the appeal lodged against that order in the Court of the District Judge will be considered still pending and must be decided by that Officer." This judgment was upheld on Letters Patent Appeal by a Division Bench.

A third District Judge (Lala Ganga Ram) proceeded to decide the appeal afresh. He declared the points for decision to be, (1) whether Lalta Parshad had encroached upon the land of field No. 1751, and if so to what extent, and (2) whether the plaintiffs are owners of the land which is found to have been encroached upon.

On the first point he issued a commission to the Revenue Assistant and in accordance with his report decided that the defendant had encroachment on 16 marlas of fields No. 1751. On the record he held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they are owners of the land encroached upon. The appeal was accepted and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed.

The plaintiffs have again preferred a second appeal to this Court and urge (1) that owing to the death of Mohammad Zaman, one of the plaintiffs, on 16th October 1918 and the failure by the defendant-appellant to apply within the time limited by law for the substitution of his legal representative, the appeal has abated, and (2) that Lala Ganga Ram had no business to go into the question of the ownership of field No. 1751 and the right of the plaintiffs to obtain a decree against the defendant for any portion of it found in his possession, since this had never been contested by the defendant and had, moreover, been waived expressly by him in the plaintiff's favour before Sheikh Amir Ali.

As regards the point of abatement the facts are these:

Sheikh Amir Ali's decree which has been declared to be no decree was passed on 8th November 1916. The Munsif's order in execution was passed on 4th June 1918. Mr. Coldstream's order in appeal is dated 14th April 1919. The Single Bench decision of this Court is dated 4th February 1920, and that of the Letters Patent Appeal Bench 13th November 1920. Muhammad Zaman was reported by a process-server on 4th November 1918 to have died and it is not disputed that he was dead on that date. O. XXII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, is by rule 12 of the same Order not applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree and no application was made for bringing Muhammad Zaman's legal representative on the record of those proceedings. In the memorandum of second appeal to this Court against Mr. Coldstream's order it was contended, though wrongly, that the Court below had had no jurisdiction to decide the case without bringing Muhammad Zaman's representative on the record, and the Single Judge did not touch the point.

In the Letters Patent Appeal judgment it was remarked that the fact of Muhammad Zaman's death had been brought to the notice of the Court, that the question of abatement did not require decision then, and that it could be agitated before the Appellate Court in the ordinary course.

On 2nd June 1920 between the dates of the two High Court judgments, and well within six months of the Single Bench decision, Lalta Prashad applied to the District Judge under O. XXII, r. 4 for the legal representatives of Muhammad Zaman to be made a party. No order was passed on the application as the record was in the High Court. On 10th March 1921, after the return of the record, Lalta Prashad repeated the application which was granted and the Court ordered notices to issue to Ghulam Yasin and others the representatives named. The notices were served and these persons appeared before the District Judge through Counsel, who consented to the issue of the commission to the Revenue Assistant and does not appear at any stage of the appeal to have raised the objection of abatement. The question now for decision is simple, and is whether, within the time limited by law, application was made under O. XXII, r. 4 (1) for the legal representative or representatives of Muhammad Zaman to be made a party or parties. If no such application was made, the appeal abated, and no failure by the persons concerned to object to action taken on application presented after expiry of the time limited by law would alter the fact of abatement.

An application was made, as already stated, by Lalta Prashad on the 20th June 1920. Muhammad Zaman died not later than 4th November 1918 and, according to Art. 177 of the Limitation Act, in its form previous to 1st January 1921, an application for making the legal representative of a deceased defendant or respondent a party had to be made within six months of the date of the death of the deceased defendant or respondent. Muhammad Zaman, however, was not a deceased defendant or respondent either on the date of his death or on any date within six months of that occurrence. It is true that this Court ordered on 4th February 1920 (and the order undoubtedly is final) that the appeal against the original decree of the Munsif should be considered still pending, but this does not alter the hard fact that Muhammad Zaman was not a respondent to any appeal when he died. I cannot accept for a moment the argument put forward with much confidence by Mr. Dalip Singh for the plaintiffs-appellants that this Court's order, whether right or wrong, rendered abatement an inevitable result of Muhammad Zaman's death. If an application had been presented to the Courts below within six months of Muhammad Zaman's death for the substitution of his legal representatives as parties in his place to the proceedings then in progress, namely, proceedings in execution of a decree, the application would not have been one under O. XXII, r. 4 (1) for that rule does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. Art. 177, therefore, does not govern the case and the only other Article which can apply is Art. 181 which allows a period of three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. It is unnecessary to determine whether that date was the date of Muhammad Zaman's death or the date of the High Court's order setting aside the execution proceedings and declaring that the appeal was to be considered as still pending, since the 20th June 1920 is within 3 years of either date.

The learned Counsel for the present respondent and appellant in the Court below, Lalat Parshad, has two alternative arguments which need not now be considered, namely, (1) that if the appeal abated, the order of the District Judge making the representatives of Muhammad Zaman parties read with the facts that abatement was alleged in both appeals to the High Court, that no further objection was made to the District Judge, and that the latter proceeded with the appeal and decided it must be taken to be an order setting aside the abatement passed under O. XXII r. 9, and (2) that the District Judge's order continuing the appeal with these persons as parties was not appealable under section 105, Civil Procedure Code.

The second point urged in appeal that by consent of the parties the question did not arise before Lala Ganga Ram of the plaintiffs' ownership rights in the portion of field No. 1751 encroached upon by the defendant is also without force. In his original pleadings the defendant denied that the plaintiffs were owners in Taraf Ismail and the question was distinctly put in issue whether they were owners of the land in suit. In his statement before Sheikh Amir Ali the defendant agreed to a decree being passed in the plaintiff's favour for any portion of field No. 1751 that he might be found in possession of in execution proceedings but that admission was made for a special purpose to shorten proceedings and avoid further litigation and it cannot be held to be binding in the face of the finding by the High Court that the agreement before Sheikh Amir Ali was not an agreement within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 3, and did not adjust the suit either wholly or in part.

Nor does it operate as an estoppel, since it is not shown to have caused the plaintiffs to act upon the belief that their ownership of the whole of field No. 1751 had been recognized. The terms of Lala Ganga Ram's judgment make it clear that the question was argued on its merits before him by both sides, and that waiver and estoppel were not alleged by the plaintiffs. The statement before Sheikh Amir Ali was at the most an admission which could constitute a fresh piece of evidence coming up for consideration for the first time in the Appellate Court. There is nothing on the record to show that it was formally produced and admitted under O. XLI, r. 27, but, if it was, it must have been considered, for the statement is reproduced in extenso in Lala Ganga Ram's judgment.

A final plea is taken by the plaintiffs-appellants that Lala Ganga Ram has drawn wrong inferences from the facts and should have presumed that the appellants were entitled to possession because the land is recorded as abadi deh and is, therefore, Shamilat of Taraf Ismail, and because the appellants are owners in that Shamilat. It was held, however, on a consideration of all the evidence, that the appellants were owners only of certain portions of field No. 1751, which were acquired by them separately in three groups and which did not include the land encroached upon, and that their ownership rights were confined to those portions. This finding of fact cannot be touched in second appeal.

When the proceedings before Sheikh Amir Ali had been declared null and void, the defendant was fully entitled to adhere to his original position which was that, even if he had encroached upon field No. 1751, the plaintiffs could not turn him out without proving that they had a better right to the land encroached upon than he had.

The appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Atkinson.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 8th July 1919, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which reversed a decree, dated the 2nd April 1917, of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court of the 24-Parganas.

The main question for decision in the appeal is whether or not a sale of a revenue-paying estate purporting to have been carved out under the Bengal Revenue Sales Act, XI 1859, in respect of unpaid arrears of revenue, and purchased by the appellant, Satish Chandra Chatterji, (now dead), was good and valid. The Subordinate Judge before whom the case was tried decided this question in the affirmative;

the High Court decided it in the negative and made the decree hereafter mentioned.

For convenience sake, the several parties to the suit may be thus denoted: the appellant by his first name, Satish; the first four respondents by their family name of Roy; the fifth respondent by the name of Akshoy; the sixth by that of Sitanath; and the formal respondent by the name of Kali Dasi.

The facts out of which the appeal has arisen are somewhat complicated. They may be stated as briefly as is needful as follows. The estate purported to be sold was the Towzi No. 2402. It was entered on the Roll of the Collector of the 24-Parganas as subject to the payment to the Government of an annual revenue of
Rs. 398-9. It comprised two villages, Atpur and Panditnagar. It was held jointly by one Hemada Kantha Roy, the father of the formal respondent, and the Roys. The estate had never been formally or legally partitioned nor the entire revenue apportioned, but the co-owners arranged among themselves to pay to the Government separately their respective appropriate shares of the revenue. Hemada paid separately one-third, and the Roys together two-thirds.
Hemada had, some years before the sale complained of, mortgaged his one undivided third of this zemindari to a certain shebait, living in the vicinity, who subsequently assigned this mortgage to the Roys, the members of that family thus becoming owners of two undivided thirds of the Towzi and mortgagees of the remaining undivided one-third. At the date of the alleged sale a sum of Rs. 3,655 odd was due upon this mortgage. In the month of January 1915, if not for some time earlier, Hemada was very ill. In the early days of that month he was confined to bed, and died on the 10th day of it. Hemada for some considerable time had had in his employment as manager of his estate Sitanath, the sixth respondent. This manager—not from want of funds, that is not suggested—left unpaid the instalment, due in the month of September 1915, of the revenue payable in respect of his employer's share. This instalment only amounted to the paltry sum

of Rs. 26-4-8. It is charged that Sitanath withheld the payment of this instalment deliberately with the design of bringing about a sale by the Government of the whole Towzi, the revenue never having been apportioned, with the result that the mortgage held by the Roys would, if the sale took place, be annulled, to their great pecuniary loss. The revenue being thus in arrear, the Collector, acting under the powers conferred upon him by the provisions of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act, XI 1859, on the 8th January 1915, put up for sale the interests of all the joint co-owners in the entire Towzi, and sold it to Satish, who was apparently the highest bidder at the auction for a sum of Rs. 9,200. The Roys immediately appealed from the order of the Collector, declaring Satish the purchaser, to the Commissioner. It is said that they based their application to have the sale set aside on the ground of fraud as well as of irregularity in the mode in which the sale was constituted and conducted. No evidence has, however, been given to establish this, nor have the Board been referred to any authority to show that the Commissioner would have had jurisdiction to inquire into such a charge, and the terms of the order made by the Commissioner on the 1st June 1915, strongly indicate that no question of fraud was raised before him. The crucial part of the order runs as follows:—

"It does not appear that there was any irregularity in this case which would justify me in annulling the sale, under section 25 of Act XI of 1859. It also appears from the Collector's report, No. C 257-6-5, dated the 21st May 1915, that there is no ground of hardship or injustice on which I could recommend annulment of the sale under section 26. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

"F. J. MONAHAN,
"The 1st June 1915." Commissioner."

It appears to their Lordships to be very strange indeed that no reference is made to the charge of fraud if it had, in fact, been put forward.

On the 18th August 1915 the Roys accordingly instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. They made the following persons defendants: Satish, No. 1;

Akshoy, No. 2; Sitarathi No. 3; and Kali Das No. 4, as a formal defendant.

The causes of action set forth in the plaint are substantially the following, that the Mouzah Atpur, being situated on the bank of the River Hoogly, afforded good sites for Jute Mills, that it was, in its then state, worth Rs. 15,000 that it was worth much more than Rs. 9,200, that Sitanath, with the object of inflicting pecuniary loss upon the plaintiffs and serving his own pecuniary interests, in violation of his duty to his employer, entered into a conspiracy with Akshoy (an enemy of the plaintiffs with whom they had been engaged in litigation) and Satish to purchase the aforesaid Towzi at the auction-sale for the benefit of Sitanath, Satish and Akshoy; that with this end in view and to effect this purpose Sitanath abstained from depositing with the proper officer the sum of Rs. 26-4-8; that in further pursuance of this conspiracy these three co-conspirators caused the notices and proclamations of the sale proper to be given and made in such sales to be suppressed and false returns to be filed, thereby preventing the gomasta of the plaintiffs and also the general public from knowing anything about the wilful withholding of the aforesaid instalment of the Government revenue or of the impending sale by auction, by reason whereof no local purchasers attended the sale, and the zemindari was sold at an undervalue—Rs. 9,200. The relief claimed was: (1) that the sale should be set aside as invalid; (2) that if in the opinion of the Court the sale was not liable to be set aside that a decree might be passed ordering the defendant Satish to convey to the plaintiffs and to the daughter and heiress of Hemada the taluk sold at the auction sale; (3) that an ad interim injunction might be granted restraining the taking possession of the taluk by the purchaser and for general relief.

These are serious and damaging charges. It appears to their Lordships difficult to understand how any man, even with the feeblest feeling of honour or sense of shame, could, if he were innocent, abstain from filing a defence to such accusations and at the earliest moment availing himself of the opportunity of going into Court to meet his accusers face to face. Well, in this plaint Sitanath did not file any written statement or give any evidence. Akshoy, a man of wealth, as he has admitted to be, did not file any written statement, and he and his two sons only gave evidence when, by the wise and peremptory action of the High Court, they were forced to do so.

Satish, on the 10th January 1916, did, four months all but eight days from the filing of the plaint, file a written statement. The evidence which he contrived to have substituted for testimony in open Court, in the presence of his accusers, will be presently referred to. In this statement he traverses all the allegations of fraud contained in the plaint, denied that he is related in any way to Akshoy as therein alleged, and alleges that the property purchased by him was not worth more than Rs. 9,200 that he purchased it for his own use and benefit without any connection with Akshoy or Sitānath. On the 15th January 1916 issues, eight in number, were settled on these pleadings. Of these only four seem of importance at this stage. They are: (1) Have the plaintiffs any cause of action, and does the plaint disclose any cause of action against the defendant No. 1 (i.e., Satish)? (2) Is the suit, in its present form, maintainable? (3) Was the revenue sale brought about by collusion and fraud on the part of defendants? (4) Is the sale liable to be set aside as illegal and ultra vires? The trial did not come on till the 28th February 1917 over thirteen months after the issues had been settled. Satish was in no hurry to vindicate his character. On his behalf three adjournments were obtained for the filing of his own written statement. On the 21st June 1916 an order, signed I. G. Goswami S. J. was made which runs thus:—

"I think the defendant should not be compelled to attend Court for deposing as he has got a big hydrocele from which watery substance comes, and he is not in a position to move to a distance from his house. It will be for the Presiding Officer of this Court to consider whether it would be possible for him to examine the witness at his house or to issue a commission for his examination. The learned Pleader for the plaintiffs urges strenuously for the examination of the witness before the Court in the interests of justice. That is the reason why the order is passed in the form given above."

On the 12th December 1916 a definite order is made directing a commission. It runs thus:—

"I have again heard the Pleaders on both sides. The defendant has been suffering from an ugly disease. He has got an unmanageable secreting tumour, and the medical certificate shows that he is unable to come to Court to give evidence here. There is nothing to controvert the fact. I should, therefore, confirm the order of my predecessor. On the 5th December 1916 a Commissioner is appointed and directed to submit his report before the 19th December 1916."

The date of the medical certificate mentioned in this order of the 2nd December is not given. No such document is to be found in the printed book, but in the list of omitted exhibits at p. XX is to be found this description: "Medical certificate given Satish Chandra Chatterji, dated 19th July 1916." The trial commenced on the 28th February 1917, and the Commissioner only sent in his report on the 15th February the evidence having been taken on the 21st and 27th January, and 4th and 5th February, 1917, previous.

The plaintiffs filed a petition objecting to the reading of this deposition. The objection came on the 23rd March 1917 when it was read in evidence. Nothing could be more unsatisfactory than this mode of procedure. The principal defendant gives his evidence before the plaintiffs' case has been opened or the evidence of their witnesses given. The Court which has to decide has no opportunity of judging of the veracity of the witness from his conduct and demeanour. All the advantage of confronting a witness accused of a fraud, such as Satish is accused of, with his accusers is lost. Evidence taken on commission should only be permitted to be used where the witness is proved to be too ill to give his evidence in Court or is absent for other sufficient reason. If Satish went to the Court he could, and presumably would, have been accommodated with a seat. Moreover, unless several of the witnesses who have been examined are utterly mistaken Satish at this time was quite able to drive about and walk from his carriage into houses. The whole procedure in this matter strongly suggests that it was his aversion to undergo the ordeal of an examination in open Court, in the presence of those who knew him, rather than ill-health, which kept him from the witness-box.

Charges of fraud and collusion like those contained in the plaint in this case must, no doubt, be proved by those who make them—proved by established facts or inferences legitimately drawn from those facts taken together as a whole. Suspicious and surmises and conjecture are not permissible substitutes for those facts or those inferences but that by no means requires that every puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by one accused of fraud must necessarily be completely unravelled and cleared up and made plain before a verdict can be properly found against him. If this were not so, many a clever and dexterous knave would escape. Turning to the evidence given before the Subordinate Judge, the first witness of the plaintiffs, Satinda Chandra Bose, does not give any evidence of importance. The same may be said of the second witness, Kalibar Mitter, save that he gives a description of Sitanath and Akshoy, mentions their respective residences and says that the market-value of the property sold was Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000. The fifth witness, Hriday Nath Ghose, only gives evidence as to the service of the notices and proclamations of the sale. The sixth witness, Uguundra Nath Sarkar, merely tells what Panchanan Mitter told him. (Why he was allowed to give this evidence is strange). He says that after the auction Panchanan Mitter told him that Sitanath fraudulently caused the sale to be held by not paying the arrears of revenue; that Akshoy, Sitanath and Satish jointly purchased the taluk. He said Panchanan did not tell him the shares which they bought, but gave the dates of the purchase and the price. The witness said he did not inquire who supplied the purchase-money, and that Panchanan did not give him any information on the subject. The eighth and ninth witnesses examined for the plaintiffs only dealt with the service of the notices of sale. The tenth gives no evidence touching the formation of the alleged conspiracy, nor the alleged joining in it by Satish or the occurrences at the sale.

The eleventh witness, Rajendra, the twelfth Ashutosh, and the Maharaja Sir Pradyot Kumar Tagore only deal with the admission of Satish made after the sale; and Sarat Chandra Roy, the thirteenth witness, only with the absence of notices and proclamations of the sale. It is obvious, therefore, from this analysis of the evidence of the witnesses, other than Panchanan Mitter and Pray Nath Ghose, that it affords no proof whatever of the formation of any conspiracy between Sitanath and Akshoy touching any subject. But both the Subordinate Judge and the High Court have found that there was a collusive arrangement between Akshoy and Sitanath to injure the plaintiffs and that in order to effect this end they agreed that Akshoy should bid at the sale by auction of the aforesaid Towzi in his own name, and that, if declared the purchaser, he (Akshoy) would convey a half-share of the property purchased in favour of Hemada, that Akshoy did bid at the sale, that he was outbidden by Satish, and that the nefarious plan hatched by these two defendants thus failed. The High Court in reference to the same matter said, "that it was indisputable that the default in the payment of the instalment of Hemada's share of the Government revenue with the object of injuring the plaintiff was, as the Subordinate Judge has found, deliberately made by Sitanath and that this step was taken in collusion with Akshoy, who it was agreed should purchase the zemindari at the auction free from encumbrances." The High Court proceeded: "There is some discrepancy as to the exact proportions in which the spoil was to be divided amongst the conspirators, but the details of the proposed distribution are not very material for present purposes;" they (the Court) need only observe that the story seems very plausible; that the third defendant Sitanath looked forward to a share for himself and another for his master; that the complicity of the second defendant, Akshoy, in what the Subordinate Judge described as a nefarious plan, was proved beyond challenging. Thus there are, in effect, two concurrent findings of these two Courts upon an issue of fact, namely, the formation of the corrupt and fraudulent conspiracy between Sitanath and

SATISH CHANDRA CHATTERJI V. KUMAR SATISH KANTHA ROY.

Akshoy of the character and with the aims described. But the only evidence given on behalf of the plaintiffs to sustain these concurrent findings is that of the two witnesses passed over in the above analysis, namely, Panchanan Mitter and Prya Nath Ghose. Neither the Subordinate Judge nor the High Court had any other evidence upon which either could have found as they have found, and it is quite obvious that they could not have based the conclusion at which they have arrived on the evidence of these witnesses unless they believed that quoad the matters on which they so found, these witnesses were truthful and reliable. Panchanan, however, in his evidence goes beyond these matters. He brings Satish into touch with the alleged conspiracy, proves that he entered into it, and deliberately assisted the other conspirators in the carrying out of the objects of their conspiracy. His evidence may be divided into two parts.

The first deals with what occurred up to the time they left Akshoy's house on the evening of the 7th January, and the second with what occurred from that time till after the sale. The High Court accepted both parts of Panchanan's evidence. The Subordinate Judge accepted the first part of it, but, for reasons which will be shown to be quite inadequate, rejected the second part of it. As it is this second part which implicates the appellant, Satish, it is necessary to deal with all Panchanan's evidence at length.

Panchanan Mitter was examined on the 2nd and 3rd March 1917; he deposed that he was 38 years of age, was, and for two years had been, clerk to a Jessore Pleader named Babu Nibaran Chandra Bose (who happens to be the Pleader of the plaintiffs) and was for 14 or 15 years previously the suddar of Hemada, deceased; that he remained in the latter's service up to his death; that Sitanath was Hemada's manager up to that time, that he, the witness, used to write out and send the revenue payable by Hemada by money-order to the Collector; that Sitanath calculated the dues on the land; that Hemada had one-third of the Atpur Panditnager Estate; that the plaintiffs had the remaining two-thirds; that there was ill-feeling between Hemada and the plaintiffs, as they had many law suits between them; that before Hemada's death his taluk was sold by auction by arrears of revenue; that Sitanath, the manager, caused it to be sold by refraining from paying the instalment of the revenue which fell due in respect of the September revenue for 1914, and deliberately withheld it; that Hemada had mortgaged his interest in his share to the shebait of Dashmahab'dya for Rs. 2,000; that this mortgage was purchased by and assigned to the plaintiffs; that on inquiry from Sitanath the latter told him that he would take steps to suppress the publication of the necessary processes (i.e.), presumably, notices and proclamations) in the Mufassil preparatory to the sale; that Sitanath and he were present at the Atpur Collector's at the time of the sale; that Prya Nath was the Karjyakarak of Akshoy; that Sitanath told the witness he had relations with Prya Nath (i.e.), presumably, was related to Prya Nath; that Sitanath came from Jessore to Calcutta four or five days before the auction-sale; that some two days before the sale he, the witness, came to Calcutta, met Sitanath there and stayed with him at the Sealdah Hotel; that Hemada was then in Calcutta on his death-bed; that Sitanath told the witness that his, Sitanath's son-in-law would not give security for bidding at the sale, so that the two must go to Akshoy for the purchase-money; that the day before the sale the two went, between 9 and 10 A.M., to Akshoy's house, 112, Amherst Street, Calcutta, but found he was away, from home at Puri; that they met Prya Nath and Akshoy's two sons, Taradas Babu and Shyamadas Babu; that it was not then settled who was to bid at the auction-sale, but that it was arranged to telegraph to Akshoy in Puri to ascertain his views; that a telegram was accordingly sent and a reply received that was as follows:—

“ AKSHOY KUMAR CHATTERJI, Sagarika, Puri.

“ Kumar's Satish Khiroda Hemada are joint proprietors of Towzi No. 2402 mahal Atpur 24-Parganas on Ganges near Kidlerpore. Hemada did not pay revenue and will cause the sixteen annas mahal to be sold tomorrow. Hemada represents total income as Rs. 1,200 and requests us to buy the same in auction within ten thousand rupees and sell half to him; going out to ascertain facts. Wire permission.

"TARADAS CHATTERJI."

"112, Amherst Street, Calcutta"

"May bid less or more amount if income is as you represent."

"AKSHOY."

The telegram was received at 13-30 and the reply received at 16-40.

The witness then stated that Sitanath and he returned to Akshoy's house in the afternoon; that Sitanath suggested that the property should be purchased benami; that one-half of it should remain with Akshoy and the other half be transferred to Hemada (the dying man) in benami of Sitanath by a kobala without any condition; that the whole purchase-money should be paid on behalf of Akshoy, that Akshoy had several holdings under the plaintiffs and that there were several litigations between them and him, and that, therefore, the property should be purchased benami of Sitanath. The witness further stated that Sitanath, Prya Nath, Shyamadas and he himself went then to Satish's house. He corrects this in his cross-examination. In this statement the witness is in error, and says that Prya Nath only went half-way and then descended from the carriage and went to do some other business. The witness states that when they went to Satish's house the latter was informed that, under the circumstances mentioned, which were stated to him, the property should be purchased in his benami; that Satish replied that a share should be given to him; that Sitanath agreed to this, and that it was settled that Sitanath, Satish and Akshoy should each get a third share; that the property should be bid at the sale up to Rs. 12,000, and that Sitanath said that the price offered should at least be Rs. 9,000; that in that state of things Sitanath, Panchanan and Shyamadas started for Satish's house to interview him; that Prya Nath accompanied them—not, however, with any intention of going to see Satish—half-way, then descended from the vehicle they were in and went off on some business of his own. Though Prya Nath corroborates Panchanan substantially in the latter's description of what occurred up to his separation from the three persons named en route to Satish's house, there are some trifling but immaterial discrepancies between these stories, but they are discrepancies of the character that strengthen rather than weaken the evidence of witnesses, since the diversity repels the idea of concocted uniformity.

But Panchanan is corroborated and his evidence strengthened in other ways in addition. He is corroborated by the telegram already referred to with the reply to it. He is corroborated by the silence of Sitanath, by the silence of Akshoy's two sons, Taradas and Shyamadas, until they were, by the insistence of the High Court, forced into the witness chair. All the three were accused of being involved in the deliberate commission of a base and contemptible fraud. The elder of the two is a legal practitioner, the younger an engineer and contractor, educated at the Government Industrial College; presumably each an intelligent man. Their silence might have been wise if they were guilty and ashamed of what they had done, apprehensive of disgrace and punishment. It was idiotic and cowardly if they were innocent. When Shyamadas does appear he commences by swearing what is absolutely incredible, namely, that he did not know in connection with what suit he was summoned as a witness. He made no allusion to the alleged meeting at his father's house; never denied it had taken place there, or the making of the arrangement there deposed to by Panchanan and Prya Nath.

He denied, no doubt, that he visited Satish's house the night before the sale. He is asked if he knows Satish, and his reply is rather peculiar. He answers "No; I never had any connection with him before," but that statement is followed by two others which are also incredible. He says he did not know he had a rival bidder at the sale and did not ask who the other bidder was, but he pretends to tell all this rival bidder did, though he never asked his name.

Well, Taradas, when produced, begins by refusing to admit that he sent a telegram, the copy of which is produced to him. He says he has no cause of doubt or any cause of belief he did. He does not deny that Sitanath was at his father's house before he sent the telegram or that both were present there later in the evening. He says that Prya Nath Ghose was not there, that the Chandra Raja estate officer, i.e., Sitanath, was there, that he asked them to sell half of the property, but nothing was settled about the price; that he, Sitanath, asked the witness, Taradas, to send a telegram like that produced; that no arrangement was made as to the purchase-money to be paid to his father for the sale of the half share; that this officer stated to him what the income was and he stated that in the telegram. He says he does not know Satish. He was then asked if, to his knowledge, his father was served, as defendant in this suit, with a copy of the writ. His reply is that his gomasta told him that a summons had been left with him with a copy of the plaint. He is then asked if he meant to suggest that this gomasta did not show it to him within a reasonable time. His reply was he does not understand reasonable time, not that very day nor the next day, he might have shown it months or days after. He is asked if the signature on the summons is in his father's handwriting, and he replied it looks like it but is in pencil, and is not exactly like his; some portion of it is written in the hand of a lady which he never writes.

He is then asked if it is inaccurate to say he got a copy of the summons. And his reply is:—

"It may have been served on him (i.e., his father) but I got this (i.e., the summons) some time later, and I thought I ought not to take any steps. I did not consult my father regarding it. I might have said to him 'you have been made a party.' I do not remember whether I said anything or not. I might or I might not have said anything. I refer only important matters to him. I did not consider this matter to be important, because we had no connection with this property. I thought we should do nothing."

He is then asked, did he think it was important that his father should be charged with fraud and that he should be defended, and his reply was, "I did not think so at that time." He is then asked, "You thought that connection with the property was all important?" and his reply is, "Yes, I do not remember any charge of fraud."

Taradas added that he did not know Satish. He is asked what instructions he gave his brother, Shamadas, about the auction-purchase. His answer is, "Probably I gave him the same instructions I received from my father." Then he was asked, "Was your instruction merely reading out the telegram you received from your father?" His answer is, "No; I gave him more instructions." Then he is asked what was it. And he replied, "I do not remember, he might not understand the telegram fully. I might have told him to go and bid up to Rs. 12,000." Then he is asked, "How much money did you send with your brother Shyamadas?" His reply was, "I do not remember; it might be one-fourth of the amount." Then the question is put to him, "That is one-fourth of Rs. 12,000, equals Rs. 3,000." He is then asked when his brother came back from the sale, "Did you put it to him that if somebody bid higher than your brother why he did not ask permission to bid still higher?" and his answer was, "I do not remember whether I asked him."

It appears to their Lordships strange that any legal practitioner could suppose that clumsy, stupid and transparent prevarication such as this witness indulged in could impose upon any legal Tribunal worthy of the name, much less upon one of the ability and distinction of the High Court of Calcutta. In their Lordships' view this man's testimony is utterly unreliable, and the evidence of Panchanan is quite unshaken by it. The Subordinate Judge, however, held that this latter witness's evidence is rendered unreliable by another particular matter. It is this. On his direct evidence this witness Panchanan undoubtedly swore that Prya Nath accompanied the rest of the party to Satish's house on the evening before the sale. On cross-examination he corrected that, and stated that Prya Nath only came with the others half the distance, then descended from the vehicle in which they were and went away on other business. On the face of it, this correction looks quite innocent, the mistake being one which a man might well make at night under the circumstances deposed to, but the learned Subordinate Judge, though Panchanan was not asked a single question touching the alteration in his evidence, considered that it showed a dishonest attempt on the witness's part to alter his evidence so as to reconcile it with Prya Nath's, and, therefore, deprived him of all credit. In their Lordships' view that he is not a reasonable construction of the incident, and they concur with the High Court in thinking that Panchanan's evidence is not shaken by it and that he is, notwithstanding it, worthy of credit on this as on the antecedent parts of his testimony.

In the second part of his evidence Panchanan says that he himself, Prya Nath, Satish, Shyamadas and a durwan of Akshoy attended the sale; that a bid was made in the name of Satish, that Rs. 2,300 were deposited in Court that day; that the money was with Prya Nath, who paid it to Shyamadas, and Satish deposited it with the Collector. He said that Hemada owed some money to Sitanath and that if the property was transferred to Sitananth by Akshoy, the money due to him would be realised; that this was the second object of causing the property to be sold. Shyamadas, he said, paid the purchase-money to Satish in notes and gold. He does not remember to whom Satish paid it. Shyamadas bid on behalf of Akshoy; that Satish and Shyamadas stood there side by side. He was not present when the chalan for the money was written. He does not remember whether Satish said to the Collector, "I have not now with me more than Rs. 1,000, and may I be given time for the balance?" That he came downstairs as soon as the sale was over, and waited there for half an hour; that one-fourth of the purchase-money was deposited with the Collector; that it was settled that Satish should pay half the purchase-money in order that he might get a one-third share of the property; that according to the arrangement made Akshoy was to advance the whole of the purchase-money in the first instance, and Satish was to pay him back half of it when it was settled. It is obvious that the ultimate pecuniary benefit to Satish under this arrangement would be the same as if he advanced the entire amount of the purchase-money in the first instance and Akshoy paid back half. This latter mode of procedure would, doubtless, look to the officials more as if Satish was the real purchaser than the other, and in either case Satish could say with equal truth, as is sworn he did say to the Maharaja, that he had co-sharers in the property, and that Akshoy was one of them.

The mere fact that Satish found in the first instance the money to pay the purchase-money is not at all, therefore, such a crucial fact as Mr. DeGruyther contended it was. Akshoy could, doubtless, re-pay him half the money at any time. The witness then explained and excused with fair success, their Lordships think, the part he had taken in the business.

Some unfavourable comment was made upon this witness's evidence owing to the fact that he did not enumerate the particular sums which, together, made up the sum (Rs. 2,300) deposited, but treated it as having been deposited in one sum. That, no doubt, is so, but if that be a discrediting incident, he shares the discredit with Satish himself, who in his cross-examination said:—

"On the day of the sale, having put in notes to the amount of Rs. 2,500 into the Collectorate, I took a refund of Rs. 200 and thus deposited Rs. 2,300 only; this sum of Rs. 2,500 was in notes of the value of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 500 only. I borrowed those notes from the house of Tarak, my cousin." No mention whatever is made of the Rs. 1,000 it is now alleged he brought with him to the sale, and he represented that the borrowing of the Rs. 2,500 was one transaction. Tarak Nath Banerji, the money-lender, says precisely the same. He said "some two or two and a half years ago, in January he borrowed from me Rs. 2,500 in two hand-notes, one hand-note for Rs. 1,000, the other for Rs. 2,500. The amount of the first remains due, the other was paid. Satish owes money to me, my mother and my sisters also. I have no accounts of my loan transactions. I did not enter the payment of Rs. 2,500 to Satish Babu as debts."

Prya Nath's evidence as to what occurred at the sale is not so full as Panchanan's, but it is quite consistent with the latter's. He mentions two important matters. He says that it was thought that the relationship with Satish would not be easily ascertained, and so he was chosen to be a fit person to bid at the sale and purchase the property. (It is not very clear what this means.) He also said that he went to Kulna three days after the sale and saw the entry of the purchase-money in the rokar after coming back.

SATISH CHANDRA CHATTERJI v. KUMAR SATISH KANTHA ROY.

Now, who and what was Satish? He was a feeble invalid, afflicted with painful and unpleasant disease. Up to seven or eight months before he was given to drink, and since then, by way of information, had become an opium-eater. That is the description he gave of himself. He was asked at the end of his cross-examination if he was addicted to intoxicants. His reply was

"Yes, formerly. I gave up the habit seven or eight months ago." (He was speaking on the 11th February 1917.) "I have drunk wine up to the value of Rs. 13-8 per bottle. I never drank anything costlier than that; the price of the same bottle to-day is Rs. 30 to Rs. 32. I have poured out to the goddess of drink Rs. 50,000 or Rs. 60,000. I eat opium twice a day now. As I have got the rheumatism, one bola of opium lasts me 14 or 15 days, eating twice a day."

For the last twenty-three years, he said he had been purchasing taluks at revenue sales, certificate sales and Civil Court sales. He said he did not know Sitanath or Akshoy and never had any conversation with either of them. His debts, he said at the time he was examined, amounted to Rs. 18,000 or Rs. 19,000. Before buying this property, he said, he did not ascertain even where the property was situated or make any inquiries about it. After the institution of the suit he made no inquiry as to the extent of Hemada's share in the property or as to whether he had an officer called Sitanath, or as to the truth of the charges made against him or whether any officer of Hemada's fraudulently or otherwise, caused the zemin-dari to be sold by auction by withholding the revenue. Nor did he make any inquiry as to who Akshoy was. On seeing the bid sheet two or three hours after the sale, for the first time, he never knew Akshoy's name. He said he never made up his mind to purchase the property till after he had seen the bid sheet. He did not know Taradas nor Kaledas, sons of Akshoy; that he never went to Akshoy's house up to the day he spoke, 4th February, 1917, and never inquired what are the quantities of lakraz lands or mal lands in the taluk. The excuse he made for this amazing indifference and ignorance was that he did not send his officers there to make inquiries touching these matters because there was a criminal case once and if he sent them to inquire there might be another criminal case, which would cost money. He then added:—

"Therefore, I am waiting till the case is over. I am not in very affluent circumstances, you, yourself, see. I have purchased property by borrowing money. How can I then say I am in affluent circumstances?"

The plaint was filed on the 18th August 1915; Satish was examined on the 21st, 27th and 28th January 1917. It seems to their Lordships quite incredible that for one year and four months he would have abstained from making any inquiries touching a property which he, an embarrassed man, alleged he bought, or have ignored so completely the charges made against him. His conduct as to the property might not be unnatural if he was merely a sham bidder put forward by Akshoy, but it certainly is inexplicable if he was the real purchaser.

Akshoy was examined on the 7th May 1919, he states that his income is about Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000 per annum, that he had houses in Calcutta and elsewhere, and about a lakh of rupees in Government Promissory-Notes, most of it made by his own enterprise and speculation; that he had known the Chandra Rajas (i.e., the plaintiffs) since he was at school; that they were the landlords of his family at Khulna; that there were lots of law suits between his family and the Rajas, about a portion of their property, which ended about a year previous, i.e., in 1917. He said he heard before he got the summons to give evidence that a suit was going on with the Chandra Raja about properties sold for arrears of Government revenue; that somebody had purchased it; that the suit was going on in the Alipur Court; that this was all he knew. He did not know who the purchaser was; that he was not aware he was a defendant in the suit to set aside the purchase till the day before yesterday (i.e., till the 7th May 1917), when he heard; that he first heard of the institution of the suit to set aside the sale from Satish's gomasta. He had no information about the property he bid for except his son's telegram. After the sale he had some information. He was asked whether on receipt of the telegram from his son he thought it a bona fide, honest proposition, and he answered:—

"I never thought whether it was reasonable or not, or whether it was proper or not for me to bid at the sale; as the property was going to be sold by auction. I thought as a business matter I could enter it. Whether it was right or wrong I did not think at the time, because the revenue was not paid and the property was going to be sold. The only thing was that I had to sell half to him."

He was then asked did he buy any other property in auction-sale, and he answered "of course, I bought the tenants' holdings. When they failed to pay the rent they (presumably the holdings) were sold by auction."

He admitted he had a talk with the gomasta of Satish soon after the litigation was instituted; that the gomasta told him they were going to apply to set aside the sale. This man did not tell the witness at that time that he was a defendant in the suit; "that between Satish and ourselves (i.e., Akshoy and his people) a suit was pending, and he used to come from time to time in reference to this matter, but he never told me I was a defendant in this suit, though I had occasional talks with him." He said his sons told him that they had not purchased at the auction; that they wrote about it; that they did not tell him who it was who purchased it; that since then he had come to know that Satish purchased it. At that time he did not care to know the name. His sons might have mentioned the name of Satish the first time or afterwards. He denies that he is helping Satish to buy the property. This witness appears to their Lordships to be quite unreliable. He was a defendant in the suit out of which this appeal arises. He was charged with fraud. Service of the plaint must have been effected upon him, and yet, he says, he was never told the nature of the suit. That appears to their Lordships to be quite incredible. They think, judging from all the probabilities, he must have been told of these things; but being resolved not to play the part of an innocent man and come boldly into Court and defend himself, he thought it wiser to lie low and remain silent, and is now professing this ignorance to excuse his conduct.

Mr. Dunne, in his argument on behalf of the respondents, criticised in detail the evidence of the appellants as to the persons from whom and the mode by which he found the purchase-money of the property he purchased. Damaging as that criticism was, their Lordships prefer to rest their conclusions in the main on the somewhat broader aspects of the case, including the relative positions of the two most interested men, Satish and Akshoy. The latter, a very wealthy man, so anxious to acquire, though he should have to part with half of it, yet trusting to the information contained in the telegram which Sitanath must have supplied. Himself a tenant of the Roys, yet ready to join in their undoing by forwarding this auction-sale provided only this could be effected without his co-operation being disclosed. And on the other side one has a diseased, intemperate and crippled man, accustomed to attend revenue and other sales by auction, but apparently at this time without an anna of his own available to pay for anything he might buy, obliged in this case to borrow every rupee of the purchase-money (Rs. 9,200), in some instances at high rates of interest; and further obliged, according to his own story, to pledge to a relative the anticipated compensation which he might receive for the compulsory purchase of some of his property in order to raise Rs. 8,500. If Akshoy had desired to procure the service of a tool to buy for him this property at this auction, giving him, however, an interest in the property bought as a reward, and with the help of Shyamadas giving to a sham competition at the auction the appearance of reality, he could scarcely have found a person more qualified to fill the role than Satish. The question is, did he fill that role or a role something like it, or did he buy this property entirely for himself, for his own use and benefit. There is available evidence which, in their Lordships' view, is much more consistent with his having filled the first of these roles than the second. It is the following: Rajindra Nath Banerji, the Nalb on the estate of the Maharaja Pradyot Tagore named Mulajore, who says that this estate lies to the south of the Roys' estate of Atpur; that he knows the district well, including the taluk in dispute; that in 1915 Satish had purchased it at an auction-sale, that his employer, the Maharaja, was anxious to purchase it; that he, the witness, went to Satish's house to propose to buy it on behalf of his master; that he met Satish and had a talk with him on the subject; that Satish said that he was not in a position to say whether he could sell the taluk; that he, the witness, then brought Satish to the Maharaja's house in Calcutta; that Satish there gave no final answer but said that he would have to consult one or two persons who had an interest in the property purchased. He did not mention the names; that he, the witness, pressed him very much in the matter; that Satish then took him to the house of another person named Chatterji; that Satish entered the house, remained there for some time while the witness remained outside in the carriage; that after an interval Satish returned and said he could not sell the property; that Chatterji was unwilling to part with it. (The full name of Akshoy is Akshoy Kumar Chatterji.)

The Maharaja Sir Prodyot Kumar Tagore was examined on commission. He says he knows the villages of Atpur and Mulpore; that he is a zemindar; that after the auction he heard of the sale; that had he known before it took place that it was about to take place he would have attempted to purchase it. He heard from his amlas that the value of the property was from Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 30,000. He heard the name of the person who purchased the property at the auction. He tried to purchase it from him and sent word of that to Satish by Rajindra, the officer of this debuttar estate. After that interview, Satish had a talk with witness at his, the witness's, own house. The witness was asked "what did he say to their proposal" and he replied: Satish said he had a partner named Akshoy, and other partners too, and that he was unable to say anything without consulting them; that conversation took place in August or the beginning of September 1915, as well as he could recollect. The negotiations progressed no further; his officer told him it would not come off. The witness said that he had not seen Satish before; he had no personal knowledge of him. The witness was asked to describe the man he spoke to; he said he was about 45 years of age, rather stout, of dark complexion; stood rather uncomfortably, and spoke to him, the witness, in Bengali.

A number of quite irrelevant questions were put to the Maharaja which may be passed by.

The next witness is Ashutosh Bhattacharji. He was examined on the 7th March 1917. He states that he was only Superintendent of the Raja Kishori Lal Gossain of Serampur; that his head office is at Serampur; that his master was a member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Bengal; that he himself is an undergraduate, an Honorary Magistrate of the Bhatpara Bench, and a Municipal Commissioner of Bhatpara Municipality; that he has served as Superintendent for twelve years. He knows Atpur. He knows the Taluk No. 2402; that he knew of the sale of it in Baisakh from middle of April to middle of May 1915. Had he known of it before it took place he would have tried to acquire it for his master; that on his master's behalf he tried to purchase it several times from Satish. First he sent Mukhtar Tarpadi Dutta, to the knowledge of his master, on two or three occasions to Satish. After that he, witness, went in the middle of May. He said the case for setting aside the auction-sale was then pending before the Commissioner, and that he must consult Akshoy. The witness then went to the house of Akshoy Chatterji on three or four occasions in July or August. He went to Satish for the last time in October 1915. After the disposal of the case he, Satish, said he could sell the property for Rs. 50,000. The witness says he then offered him Rs. 25,000. On cross-examination, the witness said that he, Satish, had a mind to sell as far as he understood him. He said he stayed at Satish's house about ten or fifteen minutes; that he did not know Akshoy before he went to his house in connection with this matter; that Satish gave him Akshoy's address; that he did not do or say anything to induce Satish to sell the property. On the first day he, the witness, saw Akshoy he expressed his willingness to sell the property. He saw him when the appeal before the Commissioner was over and he then demanded Rs. 50,000.

The learned Subordinate Judge has criticised unfavourably the Maharaja's evidance, but he bases his criticism on the most surprising error; "He says the conversation with the Maharaja took place, according to Rajendra, in Jaishtha, i.e., which means from the middle of May to the middle of June; that there was an appeal to the Commissioner pending, which was disposed of on the 1st July; that the present suit was instituted on the 18th August 1915; that Satish is an astute man of business; that it is highly improbable that he would make such admissions of fraud on his part when in the appeal to the Commissioner his complicity with defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was distinctly alleged and the matter was being fought out between them." It has not been shown to this Board that the charge of fraud was made before or could be entertained by the Commissioner. He gave no decision whatever upon such a charge if made. His decision is entirely confined to the irregularity of the sale, but it is strange that the learned Subordinate Judge did not take the trouble to verify his dates before he made such a charge as this against such a person as this Maharaja, based entirely on the assumed fact that the Commissioner's judgment was delivered on the 1st July. Had he done so, he would have found that the Commissioner delivered his judgment not on the first July 1915, as he assumes, but one month earlier, namely, the 1st June 1915. The criticism based upon this blunder, therefore, falls to the ground.

Now, if Satish and Akshoy had admitted that they had had these interviews with the persons named, but that these latter had mistaken what they said; or that they were so pressed to sell that they said what they were alleged to have said as an excuse to get rid of the pressure, there might be something to say on their behalf. But they do nothing of the kind; they say these interviews never took place; that the whole thing is a myth, a work, it is to be supposed, of the perverted and diseased imagination of these three witnesses. Their Lordships are as unable as the High Court are to take that view. They think, on the contrary, that these three witnesses are reliable and their evidence most convincing. They believe that if this large sum of Rs. 25,000 or Rs. 30,000 was within the reach of this needy man Satish, then in debt to the extent of Rs. 15,000 to Rs. 18,000, he would have eagerly grasped at and gladly sold the property he purchased in order to procure it. The fact that he did not do this can only be accounted for on the assumption that he was not the absolute owner of this property, free to dispose of it as he might, but that his action was dominated and controlled by the wealthy co-owner he named to whom gains of Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 20,000, had not such a strong attraction. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the respondents-plaintiffs, have established the cause of action in which they sued, and that the appeal fails. The appeal having been dismissed, it is not necessary to discuss the matter further, as there is no cross-appeal. The respondents are apparently content with the decree which has been pronounced by the High Court, and as their Lordships think it does substantial justice between the parties in the circumstances of the case, they will merely humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Decree against father.

DADA JINAPPA VAGIANI V. YESU bin SAKHOBA UGARE.

Family property sold in execution—Sons, position of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Decree against father of Hindu joint family—Suit to make son's interest liable, maintainability of—Suit, whether maintainable.

In the absence of any objection by any member of a Hindu joint family, when joint family property is put up for sale in execution of a decree against the manager, it may be inferred that the intention was to pass the interest of all the members in the family, though it may be open to other members of the family to dispute that intention and to satisfy the Court either that the alienation was not binding on them or that the debt incurred by their father was not binding on them or that in any way possible their interest in the family property had not passed to the auction-purchaser.

Where in the case of a Hindu joint family consisting of a father and his sons, the family property is sold in execution of a decree against the father, the auction-purchaser can, if the sons contest his right, bring a separate suit for recovery of possession. Such a suit is not barred by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code as the sons cannot be considered to be the representatives of their father.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Satara In Appeal No. 405 of 1920.

Mr. K. N. Koyaji, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit is the brother of one Devendra, who obtained a decree in Suit No. 34 of 1905 against the 1st defendant. In execution of that decree the suit house was sold and purchased by Devendra. But no possession was obtained. Consequently, after Devendra's death, the plaintiff had to file this suit. The issues in the Trial Court with their answers were:—

(1) Does plaintiff prove the auction-purchase of 1st June 1907? Answer—Yes.

(2) Does he prove he succeeds Devendra? Answer—Yes.

(3) Does defendant No. 1 show that the transaction was not to be acted upon? Answer—No.

(4) Is plaintiff's suit barred by time? Answer—Yes.

The result was, that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the Trial Judge on the ground that section 47, Civil Procedure Code, was a bar to the suit, and though this suit could have been treated as an execution proceeding, execution was barred before the date of the suit. The learned Judge thought that the decision in Mahadu Sadashiv v. Narayan Vitthal (1) was directly in point. There, in execution of a redemption decree, the decree-holder (mortgagee) himself purchased the property at the Court-sale. After the confirmation of the sale the legal representatives of the decree-holder (mortgagee auction-purchaser) brought a suit to recover possession of the property so purchased. The defendants (representatives of the mortgagors judgment-debtors) contended that the question involved in the suit related to the execution of the decree, therefore, the suit was not maintainable under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. It was held that the suit was barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and that the decree-holder, by becoming a purchaser at a Court-sale, did not cease to be a party to the suit within the meaning of section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

But, although the plaintiff's brother by becoming the auction-purchaser in execution of his decree would not thereby cease to be a party to the suit, the question was, whether defendants Nos. 2 and 3, sons of the original defendant, were representatives of the 1st defendant in that suit. Their claim was, that their interest in the property was not affected by the plaintiff's brother's purchase, and although they were, up to a certain time, joint with their father, they were not representatives of their father, as they could not be treated as parties to the previous suit. The plaintiff, in order to get possession of the property, which his brother purchased at the auction-sale, could not take out execution proceedings making defendants Nos. 2 and 3 parties to those proceedings, as they were not parties to the suit, and they could not be placed on the record as representing any party. Therefore, a suit was necessary if the plaintiff wished to recover the property from defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The question is whether defendants Nos. 2 and 3 could resist on the contention that all that the vendor purchased was the interest of their father. The learned Judge seemed to consider that they were separated from their father, and that their shares were not affected by the decree. But when the decree was passed they were joint with their father, and, in certain circumstances, a decree against the head of a joint family governed by Mitakshara law would be binding upon his sons, though they might take proceedings to prove, in the case of an alienation by their father, that the alienation was not justified, or in the case of a suit for a debt, that the debt was not incurred for a proper purpose.

However, these questions do not arise here. The decree was passed on a mortgage effected by the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of Devendra. It has never been alleged that that mortgage was not for a proper purpose, or that it was not binding on the family property. No attempt has been made in this suit to suggest that defendant No. 1 had not properly pledged the family property. Therefore, it must follow in the ordinary course, when the decree was passed against defendant No. 1, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 raised no objection that it was not binding on them, that when the family property was put up for sale in execution of the decree the whole interest passed.

That was decided in Sripat Singh v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (2). The property of a joint Mitakshara family, consisting of a father and two sons, was sold in execution of a decree against the father, the order and notices providing for the sale of the "right, title and interest," of the judgment-debtor. It appeared from the circumstances in which the above words had been inserted, from the conduct of the sons, and from the price paid by the execution-creditor, who became the purchaser, that the intention was to sell the whole property over which the father had a disposing power. In a suit instituted by the sons to set aside the sale as to two-thirds of the property, both Courts in India held that the decrees were for debts binding upon the joint family. It was held by the Privy Council, that the substance, and not the technicalities, of the transaction should be regarded, and that the entire property passed to the purchaser.

Therefore, we deduce from that decision, that, in the absence of any objection by any member of the family, when joint family property is put up for sale in execution of a decree against a manager, it may be inferred that the intention was to pass the interest of all the members of the family in the property, though it may be open to other members of the family to dispute that intention, and to satisfy the Court either, that the alienation was not binding on them, or that the debt incurred by their father was not binding on them, or on any other ground, that their interests in the family property had not passed to the auction-purchaser. In this case no attempt has been made to prove any of the necessary facts which would entitle these defendants to succeed. They really attempted to rely entirely upon technicalities which, as their Lordships point out in the case we have just cited, could not be regarded.

The result is, that the appeal succeeds and plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the suit property with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

The word "defendant" in the proviso to section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code means "all the defendants" where there are more than one defendant in the suit. [p. 406, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, 24-Parganas.

Babu Charu Chandra Biswas (with him Babu Manindra Kumar Bose), for the Petitioners.—The defendant No. 3 is the petitioner. The matter arises out of a suit for specific performance of an agreement to grant a mining lease against four defendants. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are executors to the estate of Kundan Lal Kapur. The defendant No. 3 is the petitioner. I claimed to have obtained a lease from Kundan Lal. The defendant No. 4 is the widow of Kundan Lal and is the same as defendant No. 1. The Rule was ganted calling upon the opposite parties to show cause why a suit instituted at Alipore should not be transferred to Burdwan. The Alipore Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit. The defendant No. 1 only resides within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court. The rest of the defendants reside at Burdwan. The properties in suit also are situate at Burdwan. On the preliminary issue as to jurisdiction the learned Judge has held that the suit might be instituted in either Court. Refers to section 16 (d) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Here the property is not held by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Therefore, the proviso to section 16 does not apply. It is an admitted fact that the defendant No. 3 is in possession. The relief sought cannot be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Refers to Rangayya Goundan v. Nanjappa Rao (1); Narayana Kavirayan

Mr. N. U. Sen (with him Babus Probodh Kumar Das, Bireswar Bagchi and Khitish Chandra Chakraborty), for the Opposite Parties.—My point is whether the present application is maintainable under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The matter has not been finally decided. The application was first presented before Richardson and Suhrawardy, JJ. They directed an application to be filed for transfer of the case. Subsequently, they made an application to Chatterjee and Panton, JJ., and leave to withdraw was given with liberty to apply for transfer on the ground of jurisdiction. I submit the application was barred. My third point is that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to try the issue. The points now raised were not raised in the Court below. It is not a suit for land. It, therefore, comes under section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If you hold otherwise, then my point is that the suit comes under the proviso to section 16 of the Code. The cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court. Refers

It is not, therefore, a suit for land. I submit it is not a case under section 16 of the Code, but under section 20. This is not a case in which you could interfere under section 115 of the Code.

Babu Charau Chandra Biswas in reply—Section 20 does not apply. See Nalum Lakshimikantham v. Krishnasawmy Mudaliar (13); Keshav v. Vinayak (14).

JUDGMENT.—The opposite party No. 1 in this Rule instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipore for specific performance of a contract for lease of a certain property situated in the District of Burdwan. The contract is said to have been originally entered into by one Kundan Lal Kapur of Burdwan and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the opposite parties Nos. 2 and 3 in the present Rule, are the executors under the Will of Kundan Lal and took out Probate of his Will. It was alleged in the suit that, subsequent to the agreement of granting a lease in favour of the plaintiff, the defendant No. 1, on the 22nd August 1920, granted a lease to defendant No. 3 who took it with notice of the prior agreement in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff accordingly prayed for specific performance of the agreement to grant him the mining lease on declaration that the defendant No. 3 acquired no right, title or interest under the lease of 22nd August 1920.

The defendant No. 3 inter alia pleaded that the Alipore Court, where the suit was instituted, had no jurisdiction to entertain it. A preliminary objection was accordingly raised but it was decided in favour of the plaintiff and, therefore, this Rule was obtained by the defendant No. 3.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that as between the plaintiff and the principal defendants, by which we think he meant the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, there was no question of determination of any right to the property and that the main relief for specific performance of the contract could be obtained through the personal obedience of the defendants and as such the suit could be tried by the Alipore Court having regard to the proviso to section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code. Then the learned Subordinate Judge says: "The only point that can be urged against this view is that it is also prayed that defendant No. 3's right be declared to be a nullity. This point, however, arises incidentally in the case." But so far as the prayer against the defendant No. 3 is concerned, the case comes under section 16 of the Code and the proviso to that section cannot apply to defendant No. 3 as he does not reside within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court.

Then, again, the defendant No. 2 does not reside within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court as he is a resident of Burdwan. The proviso to section 16 uses the word "defendant" but that means "all the defendants" where there are more than one defendant in the suit (see Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubbeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub (10), a case under clause 12 of the Letters Patent. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-opposite party that the defendant No. 1 who resides within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court as one of the executors is entitled to act alone and that, therefore, it is immaterial whether or not the defendant No. 2 also resides within the jurisdiction of that Court. But the question whether one of the executors has power to act alone would depend upon the terms of the Will (see section 92 of the Probate Act). There was no suggestion in the lower Court that the defendant No. 1 alone was entitled to act and the suit for specific performance was directed against both the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The question was not gone into in the lower Court; because, as stated above, the plaintiff proceeded upon the footing that both the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were to perform the contract.

In these circumstances, we think that the proviso to section 16 of the Code does not apply to this case.

SARSUTI PRASAD V. EHTISHAM ALI.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-opposite party that section 20 of the Code is applicable because the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court.

But, in the first place, in the plaint the cause of action is stated to have arisen on the 22nd August 1920, which is the date on which the defendant No. 1 granted a mining lease to defendant No. 3, and there is no question that the lease was executed at Burdwan. In the next place, the cause of action may be said to have arisen within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court only in so far as it concerns the claim for specific performance against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. So far as defendant No. 3 is concerned, we do not see how the cause of action could be said to have arisen within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court. The property is situated in the District of Burdwan and the cause of action, so far as defendant No. 3 is concerned, arose at Burdwan.

We think, therefore, that the Alipore Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, as framed and that the order complained of must, therefore, be set aside and the plaint returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court and we direct accordingly.

The petitioner is entitled to costs of this Court. We assess the hearing fee at 2 gold mohurs.

ORDER.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in a suit which was brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the redemption of certain mortgages and deeds of further charge and for the recovery of the surplus profits. The value of the property in dispute, as assessed in the plaint, was Rs. 3,000. The amount of surplus claimed was not estimated but it was asserted that the entire mortgage money due on the said deeds had been paid up from the usufruct and that there was a large surplus to which the plaintiff was entitled.

The principal amount secured by the mortgages and the deeds of further charge was Rs. 2,073. The Trial Court held that the entire mortgage-money had been paid up from the usufruct and that a surplus of Rs. 9,012-12-8 was due to the plaintiff by the mortgagees. That Court accordingly awarded a decree for possession and for the recovery of that surplus amount. The defendants-mortgagees appealed claiming to be relieved of the sum of Rs. 9,012-12-8, awarded to the plaintiff on account of the said surplus, and further claiming a sum of Rs. 2,073 on account of the principal moneys secured by the mortgages and the deeds of further charge in question. They originally valued their appeal at Rs. 2,073 only; but on a report made by the office that the amount of surplus awarded to the plaintiff ought to be added to the valuation if the defendants wanted to get rid of their liability to pay that amount they paid the deficit Court-fee and agreed to the valuation being treated as amounting to Rs. 11,085-12-9. On the hearing of that appeal it was held by this Court that the plaintiff had no right to sue for redemption and on that ground the decree of the Trial Court was set aside. The plaintiff then went on appeal to His Majesty in Council, valuing his appeal at Rs. 11,085-12-9 being the total of the amount of the principal moneys he was claiming and the surplus profits, the liability to which defendants were contesting. Their Lordships of the Privy Council allowed the appeal and remanded the case to this Court for determination on the merits.

The matter first came up before two learned Judges of this Court who differed as to the order in which the surplus profits were to be credited towards different deeds and a reference was ultimately made to a third Judge, in accordance with whose opinion a decree was passed, allowing the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 7,910-11-7 on account of surplus profits. The effect of the decree of this Court was that the plaintiff became entitled to possession of the mortgaged property on redemption without any payment and to recover Rs. 7,910-11-7 on account of surplus profits from the defendants-mortgagees.

In their present petition of leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council the defendants-applicants value their appeal at Rs. 10,910-11-7; that amount consists of Rs. 7,910-11-7, being the surplus profits awarded to the plaintiff the liability to which is contested by the defendants, and a sum of Rs. 3,000, which is stated by the learned Counsel for the defendants-applicants to represent the value of the mortgaged property as originally laid in the plaint. In the memorandum of appeal the amount claimed by the defendants-applicants, on account of the deeds of mortgage and further charge in question, judged by the valuation of the appeal, was Rs. 2,073 and that being so, it is difficult to understand the valuation given in the present petition, which arises out of that appeal. The defendants-applicants are virtually reiterating their claim for Rs. 2,073 on account of the principal sums secured by the mortgage and the deeds of further charge and seeking to contest their liability for the surplus profits amounting to Rs. 7,910-11-7 awarded by this Court to the plaintiff. The valuation of the present appeal, therefore, stands at Rs. 9,983-11-7 which is clearly insufficient to justify us in granting leave to the defendants-applicants as a matter of right. The valuation of the mortgaged property cannot be taken into consideration, because the decree for possession is not challenged. The defendants-applicants virtually claim an amount described in their memorandum of appeal to this Court as Rs. 2,073 which has not been awarded to them by this Court or by the Court below, and seek to relieve themselves of a liability for surplus profits, which have been awarded against them. It is not alleged that the appeal affects indirectly a question relating to property exceeding Rs. 10,000 in value because the actual value of the property is not stated to be over Rs. 3,000. That being so, no leave to appeal can be granted under section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, although the decree of this Court varies the decree of the Court below.

It is further urged that there is a substantial question of law involved in the appeal, the determination of which would settle the method of accounting which ought to have been adopted in a case of this kind. The question is, however, one of interpretation of the terms of different deeds of mortgage and further charge to which effect has to be given in applying the surplus as it accrued due year after year; and, as held in Babu Udairaj Singh v. Raja Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh (1), mere questions of construction of particular documents cannot be treated as questions of general importance of substantial questions of law within the meaning of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, rr. 3, 4—Suit against minor—Guardian ad litem, appointment of—Officer of Court, when can be appointed—Notice to minor and natural guardian—Failure of guardian to produce evidence—Decree, whether binding on minor.

In respect of the appointment of a guardian for a minor defendant, O. XXXII, r. 4, of the Civil Procedure Code does not impose an obligation on the Court to insist on the plaintiff to produce an affidavit to the effect that there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit or to ascertain and exhaust the relatives of the minor defendant before appointing an officer of the Court. [p. 410, col. 2; p. 411, col. 1.]

Under O. XXXII, r. 4, of the Civil Procedure Code an officer of the Court can be appointed guardian when there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit. But the fulfilment of this condition must be considered with reference to the circumstances of each case. [p. 411, col. 1.]

O. XXXII, r. 3, clause (4) of the Civil Procedure Code does not require any notice of the proceedings to the minor; nor is separate notice of a proposal to appoint a Court guardian necessary to the father or other person in whose care the minor is, when such father, guardian or other person is a party to the proceedings and is aware of the proposal. The absence of such notice is, in any case, a mere irregularity, which does not affect the validity of the proceedings, in the absence of proof of fraud or gross negligence on the part of the person appointed. A decision obtained against a minor represented by a guardian cannot be set aside in the light of fresh evidence which was not produced at the previous trial unless it can be shown that the failure to produce such evidence was the result of gross negligence or fraud on the part of the guardian ad litem.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 66 of 1920 (Appeal Suit No. 71 of 1920 on the file of the District Court of Coimbatore) presented against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 992 of 1918.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant.—The second defendant who purchased in execution of the decree is the appellant. Plaintiffs now sue to set aside the decree itself on the ground that it is void against them. Both the lower Courts have decreed their claim. The findings are not clear as to whether the previous decree was void for improper representation or for fraud. There is a presumption in these cases that the appointment was proper. Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (1). There has been no evidence that the plaintiff in the previous suit was aware of the existence of the maternal uncle.

[Ramesam, J.—There was a recent judgment to which I was a party in which this point was discussed.]

In Appeal Suit No. 251 of 1920 which your Lordships Krishnan J., and Ramesam J., decided recently, the affidavit was found to be false because the defendant had knowledge of the existence of the maternal grandfather. It is not necessary that there should be a statement that there is no other next of kin, if the Court in the particular instance is satisfied about the propriety and necessity of a Court guardian being appointed. The father who refused to act never took the trouble to inform the plaintiff as to who was the proper man to safeguard his minor son's interests. There must be a limit to the extent of the enquiry into the next friends of minor defendants which it is legally obligatory upon a plaintiff.

[Ramesam, J.—In the majority of the cases it is the fraud of a deceitful father that brings about such situations.]

This is one such case. There is no proof of negligence on the part of the Court guardian. He engaged a High Court Vakil and cross-examined. It has not been shown what evidence then available on behalf of the minors was not let in.

RAMASWAMI CHETTY v. DORAISWAMI.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri, for Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The whole proceedings in the previous suit as regards the appointment of guardian was illegal. The provisions of O. XXXII were not complied with. Under the Civil Procedure Code, notice should go to the minors as well as to the natural guardian with whom the minors are living.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar.—Under the power vested in the High Court, the rule has been changed and no notice to the minor is now necessary so far as the Madras Presidency is concerned. R. 4 of O. XXXII was altered in 1917 by the Madras High Court itself to its present form long before the previous litigation.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri cited Nachiaypa Chetty v. Chunniah Ambalam (2) and contended the father ought to have had notice in this petition also. There were no materials properly placed before the Court for the appointment of a Court-guardian. There was sufficient in the case to put plaintiffs on enquiry. The findings of fact of the lower Court conclude the case against the appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises from a suit for partition by the plaintiffs against their father the first defendant the second and third defendants, second defendant being an alienee of certain property under a decree against the first defendant and the plaintiffs. The question is, whether that decree binds the plaintiffs inasmuch as it is said that it was obtained against them, when they were minors in circumstances which make it invalid. Those circumstances were set out in the plaint as being that the decree was obtained by fraud and was not binding on the minor plaintiffs.

The fraud in question was not further specified in the plaint. Primarily, however, we are concerned with the grounds, on which the lower Appellate Court has given judgment in the plaintiff's favour. Those grounds are not that there was generally any fraud in the obtaining by the third defendant of the decree or in the purchase by the second defendant at the subsequent Court sale, but that the 2 to 5 defendants then in that suit (plaintiffs) were not represented by any guardian legally appointed, the Head Clerk of the Court, who was on the record as their guardian, not having been legally appointed as such. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiffs were not properly represented and the proceedings are not binding on them. It, therefore, went on to re-try the issues in the previous case on their merits.

The objection to the appointment of the Head Clerk, which the lower Appellate Court has sustained, was (as we understand it) that there was no affidavit alleging there was no other person fit and willing to act as the guardian of the plaintiffs and no attempt was made to appoint the uncle of the plaintiffs as their guardian ad item. "Though evidence was taken for the purpose of passing a decree against the plaintiffs also, the plaintiffs were practically undefended, for no evidence was tendered on their behalf after first defendant's oath was accepted. Even the evidence on record throws a certain amount of suspicion on the claim then made. Merely because another was appointed the guardian of the plaintiffs in the place of first defendant, who refused to act, it cannot be said that the plaintiffs had been properly represented in that suit." This statement of the grounds of the lower Appellate Court's decision is taken from its judgment. But it is little difficult to understand and in particular the reference to the absence of any evidence adduced for the defence in the previous suit, especially in view of its finding that the guardian appointed was careful and diligent and properly conducted the defence and was not negligent. We shall, however, return to that point in the sequel.

At present we deal only with the objection that there was no proper appointment of the Head Clerk as guardian. The main grounds on which the lower Appellate Court held the appointment invalid, were the absence of an affidavit alleging there was no other person fit and willing to act as guardian and of any attempt to appoint the uncle of the plaintiffs. There is no obligation imposed by the relevant portion of the Code, O. XXXII, on the Court to insist or on the plaintiff to produce an affidavit to the effect that there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit or to ascertain and exhaust the relatives of the minor defendants before appointing an officer of the Court. O. XXXII, r. 4 clause 4 says only that an officer of the Court may be appointed only where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit. But the fulfilment of this condition must be considered with reference to the circumstances of the case. Here the plaintiff lived in a different district from that of the minors or their father, then and now first defendant. The plaintiff attempted first to appoint the first defendant as guardian. He refused to act and apparently did not co-operate in any way. We cannot hold that a plaintiff is entitled to proceed with a Court guardian only at his own risk and unless he can demonstrate affirmatively that he has made absolutely exhaustive enquiries and that there is, in the words of the rule, not merely no other relative but also "no other person fit and willing to act as guardian." Putting a reasonable construction on the rule, we are not prepared to say that the plaintiff in this case failed in his duty, especially as there is nothing (so far as we have been shown) on the record regarding the uncle of the minors, his residence, the plaintiff's knowledge of his existence, his interests in the minor's affairs or, what is more important, regarding any subsequent attempt by him to protect their interests. Another objection made is that there was no notice to the minors themselves of the proceedings. That is based on a misapprehension. For O. XXXII, r. 3, clause 4 had been amended before the proceedings on the 19th May 1910 by the omission of the words "to the minor." and it is also pointed out that under O. XXXII, r. 3, clause 4 notice was necessary to the father or other natural guardian, or where there is no father or natural guardian to the person in whose care the minor is. In the present case there was no doubt no distinct notice to the father of the proposal of the Court guardian, but the father was himself a party to the proceedings at one of the hearings at which the appointment was made, and the father had refused to act himself. It does not seem to us that a separate notice was necessary of an incident of which the father must have been aware. It is further material that the father never during the proceedings took the smallest objection to the conduct of the minor's case by the Head Clerk.

As regards the law, the absence of notice to the father of the appointment of the Head Clerk would, in any case, be, in our opinion, an irregularity which would not affect the validity of the proceedings in the absence of proof of fraud or gross negligence on the part of the person appointed, the present case not resembling Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (3) but Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (1).

The lower Appellate Court's ground of decision that the appointment of the Head Clerk was illegal and the proceedings conducted by him, therefore, are not binding on the minors failing, we must consider the argument attempted here that the appointment being irregular for want of notice, the proceedings were in fact fraudulently or grossly negligently conducted and the decision resulting from them must be set aside. The lower Courts have no doubt in the present case reached a decision on the merits in the plaintiff's favour. But that is not sufficient, unless it can be shown that the failure to produce the evidence which was not produced at the first trial was the result of gross negligence and fraud. It is sufficient that there is nothing in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court to justify us in finding to that effect nor, it may be added, in the judgment of the District Munsif. The lower Appellate Court's characterisation of the conduct of the case by the Head Clerk as careful and diligent and not negligent has already been referred to. The fact that no evidence was given for the defence on behalf of the minors is in no way decisive, when there was no evidence which the Head Clerk is shown to have then been able to adduce or ought to have known to be available. The new evidence now produced does not come within either of those descriptions.

SITARAM PANDURANG v. GANPAT DAULATRAO.

In these circumstances, we must adopt the lower Appellate Court's finding that there was neither fraud nor negligence. The result is that the decision as regards the decree in Original Suit No. 783 of 1913 and the sale to second defendant must be set aside. The result of our decision sustaining the decree and sale will be that no properties are available for partition, since the properties sold are the only properties set out in the plaint schedule. We, therefore, allowing the second appeal, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and dismiss plaintiff's suit with costs throughout of the second defendant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs instituted this suit to recover possession of certain property on the ground that it was aeshmukhi vatan service inam land, and, therefore, could not devolve upon the defendant, who was a daughter of one Dada, the illegitimate son of Venkatrao, by a Muhammadan mistress. The pedigree appears at page 1 of the print. Venkatrao, the last owner of the vatan property, sold it to one Fazal Ali in 1865. After Venkatrao's death in 1871, Baburao, the illegitimate son of Venkatrao, purchased the property from Fazal Ali and enjoyed the property till he died. Then he was succeeded by his brother Dada who left a widow Pyara, and a daughter, the present defendant. Pyara died in 1906 when her daughter, the present defendant, took possession of the property. It was urged in the lower Courts on behalf of the plaintiffs that Babu Rao and Dada were the heirs of Venkatrao as his dasi-pulras, and hence they were in possession until their death, and that after the death of Pyara, the widow of the survivor, the vanta would go to them. The appellants have not been able to place before us any case in which it has been laid down that an illegitimate offspring of a Hindu by a Muhammadan mistress would be a Hindu. That is contrary to one's notions of the law on the subject, which is very clearly laid down in Lingappa Goundan v. Esudasan (1) it being held that a man cannot be regarded as a Hindu by birth unless both his parents are Hindus.

The result must be that Venkatrao left no Hindu heir to succeed him, and the illegitimate son's holding adversely to Venkatrao's heirs became entitled to the property as against them. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 21st April 1922.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a body of creditors against an order of the District Judge of Allahabad making a personal allowance to the insolvent out of his property for the support of himself and his family, under section 66, sub-section (2), of the Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920. One difficulty in delivering a clear judgment in a case of this kind is that the enumeration of the appropriate sections has been altered from time to time by various amending Acts. We will confine our observations to the sections of the present Act. Leave was required under the Act, as the Counsel for the insolvent rightly objected, and was not applied for until a late stage of the proceedings and the matter of leave was referred to the Court hearing the appeal. As the case has been argued as one of principle, and appears to us to require careful consideration in view of certain existing decisions, we have granted the necessary leave, it being clearly a case in which it would have been granted, if applied for at once by any Court appreciating the point involved.

The insolvent is an Engine-driver on the East Indian Railway in receipt of a fixed salary of about Rs. 250 with various monthly allowances and accretions due to overtime, and other matters which increase his monthly salary sometimes to nearly Rs. 500 and roughly to an average exceeding Rs. 400. The factors which must be taken into account in reducing this gross sum in order to arrive at the actual net income really enjoyed by the insolvent are not very clearly before us, and, in the view, which we take, do not become important. But these two facts may be stated as representing, at any rate, the minimum of what is shown, namely, that half his gross salary would be at least Rs. 200 and that the sum directed by the District Judge to be paid to the creditors, namely, Rs. 120 is certainly less than any just estimate of the actual half of the net income actually enjoyed by this Engine-driver. As will appear when we come to consider the relevant sections, the expression, "directed to be paid to the creditors" is not really an accurate method of expressing it. A more accurate method is that the learned Judge has granted an allowance out of the property prima facie divisible amongst the creditors, amounting to such a sum as, when deducted from his half salary, leaves a balance of Rs. 120 divisible amongst the creditors.

There is no doubt that in the case of a person in India in receipt of a salary or pension, the maximum which is divisible amongst the creditors is half. That maximum is fixed by Statute. Section 28, the ordinary vesting section, makes the whole of the property of the insolvent on adjudication divisible amongst the creditors, but except by sub-section (5) from the property so divisible, any property which is exempted by the Code of Civil Procedure from attachment. Section 60, Civil Procedure Code, in the case of this Engine-driver exempts half his salary from attachment. The combined operation, therefore, of section 28 (5) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and section 60 (1) (i) (iii) is to make only half his salary divisible amongst the creditors. The creditors in this appeal contend that that amount is not only the maxi-

imum but the minimum. In other words, that the personal allowance which section 60, Civil Procedure Code, leaves to the enjoyment of the ordinary debtor by exempting it from attachment, is the only sum which a Court in insolvency can allow an insolvent under its jurisdiction to enjoy for the support of himself and his family. So stated, the contention sounds reasonable. But the difficulty of accepting it is this. Section 66, sub-section (2), provides that the Court may from time to time "make such allowance as it may think just to the insolvent out of his property for the support of himself and his family, and such allowance may, at any time, be varied or determined by the Court." If both the maximum and the minimum are fixed by Statute, this provision is nugatory and might as well be struck out of the Act in every case in which a man is earning his income by salary to which section 60 of the Code is applicable. Indeed, the contention is that this sub-section of the Insolvency Act is unworkable in the case of a person paid by salary and, therefore, cannot be held to apply to him at all. But if it was intended to fetter the discretion of the Insolvency Court in the case of a man who is earning his money by salary and his half salary was already protected by the operation of section 60, Civil Procedure Code, the Legislature ought to have said so. The argument really invites us to legislate, rather than to interpret. The language of the sub-section itself, namely the use of the word "property" without qualification, clearly includes that part of his property; or, in other words, his half salary which by the joint operation of the two sections already referred to becomes divisible amongst the creditors under section 28 of the Insolvency Act. Three cases have been cited to us which seem to support the contention of the creditors although they may, if one were disposed to enlarge upon fine distinctions, be said to be not strictly in point. But in substance it does appear to have been decided that the amount which an insolvent may be allowed for maintenance is irrevocably fixed by section 60, Civil Procedure Code. We are not satisfied that either of the Courts in the cases cited really intended to go to that length although they used language which appears to produce that result. If they meant that the amount fixed by section 60, Civil Procedure Code, so fettered the discretion of the learned Judge that he could not depart from it we find ourselves unable to agree with that view, because we think that it is equivalent to a refusal to apply the express language of section 66, sub-section (2). But, really, the argument pushed to its logical conclusion must come to this, that inasmuch as section 60 fixes the sum both as regards maximum and minimum in all cases of salary, the Court of Insolvency has no jurisdiction under section 66, sub-section (2) to touch the matter. In other words, section 60 has removed it from the Insolvency Court's cognizance, and that any attempt by the Insolvency Court to alter it by one pice would be ultra vires. That is the contention of Mr. L. M. Banerji, who is always logical, in pressing the view of the appellants, and that is the inevitable result of the argument, but we are not satisfied that the Courts in the cases relied upon intended to go to that length.

It is only necessary to refer to the decision of our brother Rafique in a revision case reported as Devi Prasad v. J. A. H. Lewis (1). In that decision he followed and adopted the view taken in the two previous cases mentioned by him in his judgment, holding that section 60, Civil Procedure Code had fixed the proportion immutably at half, and he did not consider what, under these circumstances, was the meaning which ought to be given by an Insolvency Court to section 66, sub-section (2). We hold that the law in India is precisely the same as in England on this matter. Indeed, historically, it is correct to say that the sub-section in question, namely section 66(2), is taken direct from the English Legislation on the subject and that the Insolvency Courts in this country, in spite of the fact that they cannot attach the half salary which is removed from the grasp of the creditors by section 60, have an absolute discretion to make a further reasonable allowance appropriate to the condition and the circumstances of the insolvent, out of the remaining half which is otherwise divisible amongst the creditors, and that on this ground the appeal fails.

We think it right to add that we entirely approve of the thoroughness, and of the methods and considerations applied to the decision of the question, and of the result arrived at by the learned Judge in this case. In any event, he is the best, and indeed almost the only Judge, provided he has all the materials before him. His notes and his order alike show that he examined into the position very closely. He found, as is the case, that if the insolvent keeps up the payment which he has hitherto done regularly of Rs. 120 per month, all the creditors will receive payment in full within a period very little more than two years from the order of adjudication. If this happens, they will have done extremely well. It is very rare that in an insolvency, creditors ever get paid in full at all, and it is largely due to the salutary provisions by which salary can be attached and deducted in this country, that in this particular case the creditors have a reasonable hope of being paid in full. It is not suggested that the insolvency has been brought on by any misconduct, or reckless conduct in the insolvency sense of these words, on the part of this Engine-driver. It looks as if he had fallen into the somewhat easy temptation towards extravagance in the ordinary affairs of life, such as dress and necessities, although it is true there is one large claim by a money-lender, as the result of the conduct of the creditors themselves. Trades people who, either in the stress of business, or out of kindness of heart, encourage persons in a humble condition of life to go on purchasing on credit in a way which they must know is beyond their means, have only themselves to thank if in the end they lose their money altogether, and if they are merely delayed in payment as these creditors seem likely to be. They suffer no loss because the ordinary risks of trade which occur through bad debts and unwilling payers, fall as a rule, as every body knows, upon the honest consumers who pay promptly and whose charges must include the loss of the tradesman who would otherwise have to shut up shop. No body wishes to discourage a tradesman from giving credit or such credit as he is satisfied the customer can stand but a tradesman who continues to supply goods after it is obvious that the customer is unable to pay or unwilling to pay for the arrears which are due, brings upon himself such loss as he may suffer, and in our view a Judge, sitting in Insolvency, has to consider these matters, that is to say, the conduct of the creditors as well as the conduct of the debtor in the general public interest, to serve which the bankruptcy law has been devised. On the whole, we think the order complained of in this case was really generous to the creditors. At any rate, there is nothing to complain about in it, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where the parties concerned with the Will of a deceased person refer to private arbitration the question how the properties of the deceased should be divided, the reference would not be rendered illegal by the mere fact that it was entered upon during the pendency of an application for the grant of Probate of the Will of the deceased and before the Probate proceedings had come to an end.
